Thou shalt be our star of Arcady.
Milton, Comus, v. 341.

A'RCANE.* adj. [Lat. arcanus.] Secret; mysterious.

Have I been disobedient to thy works?
Have I bewray'd thy arcane secrecy?
Tragedy of Locrine, v. 4.

It was a doctrine of those ancient sages, that soul was the place of forms, as may be seen in the twelfth book of the arcane part of divine wisdom, according to the Egyptians.
Bp. Berkley, Siris, § 269.

ARCA'NUM.† n. s. in the plural arcana. A Latin word, signifying a secret.

By the assistance of this arcanum, I, though otherwise "impar," have adventured upon so daring an attempt. Swift, Tale of a Tub, sect. 5.

Concerning the paper-office, I wish those instruments and state-arcana had been as faithfully and constantly transmitted to that useful magazine as they ought to have been.
Evelyn to Bp. Nicolson, Lett. 1699.

In some mysterious paragraphs, — certain arcana are joined for brevity sake, which in the operation must be divided.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

ARCH. n. s. [arcus, Lat.]

1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.

The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is less than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle. Locke.

2. A building open below and closed above, standing by the form of its own curve, used for bridges and other works.

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,
As the recomforted through the gates. Shaksp.

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through.
Shakspeare.

The proud river which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with such a curious pile of stones, that considering the rapid course of the deep stream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world. Howel.

3. To form into arches.

Fine devices of arching water without spilling, and making it rise in several forms of feathers and drinking-glasses, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and sweetness.
Bacon, Ess. of Gardens.

ARCH. adj. [from ἄρχω, chief.]

1. Chief; of the first class.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shaksp.
There is sprung up
An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer. Shaksp.

2. Waggish; mirthful; triflingly mischievous. This signification it seems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy most remarkable for his pranks; as, the arch rogue; unless it be derived from Archy, the name of the jester to Charles I.

Eugenio set out from the university; he had the reputation of an arch lad at school. Swift.

ARCH,† in composition, signifies chief, or of the first class. [from ἄρχω or ἄρχι.] as, archangel, archbishop. It is pronounced variously with regard to the ch, which before a consonant sounds as in cheese, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel, Dr. Johnson says; but this is not a general rule; for arch-architect, and arch-enemy, require the first sound of ch.

ARCHAIO'LOGY.* n. s. This word, which might be expected here, as next in regular order, is placed after all the words in composition, with arch; which now follow.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. s. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the highest order of angels.

His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appear'd
Less than archangel ruin'd, and the excess
Of glory obscur'd. Milton.
'Tis sure th' archangel's trump I hear,
Nature's great passing bell, the only call
Of God's that will be heard by all. Norris.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. s. [lamium, Lat.] The name of a plant, called also Dead nettle.

ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.

Ye archewives, stondeth ay at defence,
Sin ye be strong, as is a great camaille,
Ne suffreth not, that men do you offence.
And sclender wives, feble as in bataille —
Ay clappeth as a mill, I you counsaile.
Clerk's Tale, ad fin.

ARCHA'ICK,* adj. [Lat. archaicus.] Of the old fashion; ancient.

The head-dress of the females at Bernay is peculiar, and so very archaic, that our chambermaid at the inn appeared to deserve a sketch, full as much as any monumental effigy.
Dawson Turner's Tour in Norm. vol. 2. p. 124.

ARCHAIO'LOGY.† n. s. [Fr. archéologie, from ἀρχαῖος, ancient, and λόγος, a discourse.] A discourse on antiquity. Written also archæology.

My addiction to the archæology of Fl. Josephus, who is yet a very good director in this matter, hath stopt my more curious pursuit of the best proof of ancient measures.
Pococke's Comm. on Hosea, 1685, sign. a.

He [Plot] appears, from a tritical philosophy, to have carried his uncommon credulity, and a peculiar propensity to the marvellous, into our British, Roman, and Dano-Saxon archæology.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref. p. vi.

ARCHAIOLO'GICK. adj. [from archaiology.] Relating to a discourse on antiquity.

A'RCHAISM.† n. s. [ἀρχαισμὸς.] An ancient phrase or mode of expression.

Either coming to or often very neare it, [the authorized translation,] saving where by the archaisme, or circumlocution, occasioned to recede.

I shall never use archaisms like Milton. Watts.

A'RCHED. part. adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shakspeare.

Let the arched knife
Well sharpen'd now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables. Philips.

A'RCHER. n. s. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that shoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head. Shakspeare.

This Cupid is no longer an archer, his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Shakspeare.

Thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer;
For seldom, archers say, thy arrows err. Prior.

A'RCHERESS.* n. s. [from archer.] She that shoots with a bow.

The swiftest and the keenest shaft that is,
In all my quiver ————
I do select; to thee I recommend it,
O archeress eternal!
Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p. 143.

A'RCHERY. n. s. [from archer.]

1. The use of the bow.

Among the English artillery, archery challengeth the preeminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camden.

2. The act of shooting with the bow.

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye!
Shakspeare, Mids. Night's Dr.

3. The art of an archer.

Blest seraphims shall leave their quire,
And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery.
Crashaw, Steps to Temple.

Say from what golden quivers of the sky
Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftness and power by birth are thine.
'Tis I believe this archery to shew,
That so much cost in colours thou,
And skill in painting dost bestow
Upon thy ancient arms the gaudy heavenly bow.
Cowley.

A'RCHES-COURT. n. s. [from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes, so called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone pillars, built archwise. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Cowel.

A'RCHETYPE.† n. s. [Fr. archetype, Lat. archetypum.] The original of which any resemblance is made.

Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves by simple sense; yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend their archetype. Glanville, Scepsis.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts, Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL.† adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's opticks I have seen
Him who is fairer than the sons of men:
The source of good, the light archetypal. Norris.

Nothing in the world can be more beautiful and lovely than that which hath the most exact symmetry and conformity with the archetypal copy of divine loveliness and beauty. Hallywell, Excel. of Mor. Vir. p. 112.

ARCHE'US. n. s. [probably from ἀρχῶ.] A word by which Paracelsus seems to have meant a power that presides over the animal economy, distinct from the rational soul.

ARCHI'ATER.* n. s. [Fr. archiatre, from Gr. ἀρχὴ, the chief, and ἰάτρος, a physician.] A chief physician.

I wanted not the advice and help of the archiater, the king's doctor; who, albeit he was doubtless a very skilful physician, yet did me little good, so malignant was my distemper. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 233.

A'RCHICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἀρχικὸς.] Chief; primary.

When the brutish life leads us astray from the government of reason, and we cast away that ἀρχικὸν σκῆπτρον, that principality and archical rule, wherewith God hath invested us, over all our corporeal passions and affections; then the order of the creation is inverted, and the beast governs the man. Hallywell, Excel. of Mor. Vir. p. 48.

ARCHIDIA'CONAL.† adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be censured in an archidiaconal visitation.

I can now hold my place canonically, which I held before but dispensatively, and withal, I can exercise an archidiaconal authority annexed thereto. Wotton, Rem. p. 328.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL.† adj. [from archiepiscopus, Lat. an archbishop; formerly written arch-episcopal. "The prior of Canterbury, in whom the arch-episcopal jurisdiction, during a vacancy, was invested." H. Wharton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, p. 35.] Belonging to an archbishop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiscopal see; the suffragans are subject to archiepiscopal jurisdiction.

Matthew Parker, thus irrefragably settled in the archiepiscopal see, with three other bishops, in the same month of December, solemnly consecrated Edmund Grindall and Edwin Sands. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cler. i. 17.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPACY.* n. s. [Lat. archiepiscopatus.] The state and dignity of an archbishop.

I did not dream, at that time, of extirpation and abolition of any more than his [Laud's] archiepiscopacy. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 5.

ARCHIMA'NDRITE.* n. s. [Lat. archimandrita.] The chief of a convent; the head of a religious society; a prior. The word is given by Coles, in 1685; and I think Rycaut has somewhere used it.

A'RCHITECT. n. s. [architectus, Lat.]

1. A professor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The hasty multitude
Admiring entered, and the work some praise,
And some the architect, his hand was known
In heaven, by many a tow'red structure high
Where scepter'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes. Milton.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shaks.

A'RCHITECTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the work of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials? Derham, Physico-Theology.

ARCHITECTO'NICAL.* n. s. [from ἀρχὸς, chief, and τέκτων, building or the builder.] That which forms or builds any thing.

Those inferiour and ministerial arts, which are subjected unto others, as to their architectonicals. Fotherby, Athcomastix, p. 186.

ARCHITECTO'NICAL.* adj. Having skill in architecture.

Geometrical and architectonical artists look narrowly upon the description of the ark, the fabrick of the temple, and the holy city in the Apocalypse. Sir T. Brown's Misc. Tracts, p. 6.

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἀρχῶ, and τέκτων.] That has the power or skill of an architect; that can build or form any thing.

To say that some more fine part of either, or all the hypostatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture. Boyle.

A'RCHITECTOR.* n. s. [Low Lat. architector.] A builder. Obsolete.

Having first, like a skilful architector, made the frame, he now raises and sets it up. Austin's Hæc Homo, p. 55.

They think to overcome us with numbers too, laying claim to all merchants, pilots, seamen, architectours, masons, &c. Gayton, Notes on Don Quix. iv. 11.

A'RCHITECTRESS.* n. s. [from architect.] She who builds.

If Nature herself, the first architectress, had (to use an expression of Vitruvius) windowed your breast. Wotton, Remains, p. 139.

A'RCHITECTURE. n. s. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building. Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure those.
Blackmore.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Burnet, Theory.

ARCHITE'CTURAL.* adj. [from architecture.] Relating to architecture.

Plot's, though a neat engraving, and in the most finished manner of that excellent architectural sculptor, Michael Burghers, is by no means a faithful and exact representation.
Warton's Hist. of Kiddington, p. 16.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. s. [from ἀρχὴ, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloisters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builder's Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightness whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial. Wotton, Architecture.

Westward a pompous frontispiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold.
Pope.

A'RCHIVES.† n. s. pl. Without a singular, Dr. Johnson says, which is a great mistake; as my examples will shew; [archiva, Lat.] The place where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps sometimes used for the writings themselves.

Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us.
Government of the Tongue.

I shall now only look a little into the Mosaick archives, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject. Woodward.

This I transcribed out of the Greek manuscript, which we have extant in the archive of our publick library. Gregory's Posthuma, (1650) p. 249.

It may be found in the same archive, where the famous original compact between magistrate and people, so much insisted on, in the vindications of the rights of mankind, is reposited.
Warburton's Alliance, Ch. and St. (1st ed.) p. 90.

Boccacio himself calls his master Leontius an inexhaustible archive of Grecian tales and fables.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 70.

A'RCHLIKE.* adj. Built like an arch.

An archlike strong foundation.
Young, Night Th. 7.

A'RCHLY.* adv. [from the adj. arch.] Jocosely.

This he archly supposes.
Thyer's Notes to Butler's Remains.

A'RCHNESS.* n. s. [from the adj. arch.] Shrewdness; sly humour, without malice.

He [Fontaine] generally took his subjects from Boccacio, Poggius, and Ariosto; but adorned them with so many natural strokes, with such quaintness in his reflections, and such a dryness and archness of humour, as cannot fail to excite laughter. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope, ii. 68.

*A'RCHON. n. s. [from ἀρχων.] The chief of the magistrates among the Athenians.

Plutarch relates, that himself was honoured with the freedom of Athens, made a member of the tribe Leontis, and afterwards bore the office of archon. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, i. 12.

We might establish a doge, a lord Archon, a Regent. Bolinbroke on Parties, Lett. 8.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow church, by reason of the steeple or clochier thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars in fashion of a bow bent archwise.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

A'RCHY.* adj. [from arch.] In the form of an arch.

Beneath the black and archy brows shined forth the bright lamps of her eyes.
Partheneia Sacra, 1633. Pref.

ARCI'TENENT. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.

ARCTA'TION. n. s. [from arcto, to streighten.] Streightening; confinement to a narrower compass.

A'RCTICK. n. s. [from Ἄρκτος, the northern constellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctos, or bear. See ARTICK.

Ever during snows, perpetual shades
Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood,
Did not the arctick tract spontaneous yield
A cheering purple berry big with wine. Philips.

A'RTICK Circle. The circle at which the northern frigid zone begins.

A'RCUATE. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion of species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres are inflected and arcuate.
Ray on Creation.

A'RCUATILE. adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected. Dict.

ARCUA'TION. n. s. [from arcuate.]

1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.

2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.

3. In [gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no seed, as the elm, lime, alder, willow; and is so called from bending down to the ground the branches which spring from the offsets or stools after they are planted. Chambers.

A'RCUATURE. n. s. [arcuatura, low Latin.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.

A'RCUBALIST. n. s. [Lat. arcubalista.] A crossbow; an engine to shoot stones.

It is an historical fact, that Richard was killed by the French from the shot of an arcubalist, a machine which he often worked skilfully with his own hands. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. i. 158.

ARCUBA'LISTER.† n. s. [from arcubalista; not from arbalist, as Dr. Ash asserts.] A crossbow man.

King John was espied by a very good arcubalister, who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, quoth the earl, that we should procure the death of the holy one of God, Camden, Remains.

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural disposition; as Goddard is a divine temper; Reinard, a sincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal disposition; Bernard, filial affection. Gibson's Camden.

A'RDENCY.† n. s. [from ardent.]

1. Ardour; eagerness; warmth of affection.

Accepted our prayers shall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency, and perseverance, so far as concerns the end immediate to them.
Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

The ineffable happiness of our dear Redeemer must needs bring an increase to ours, commensurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

2. Heat.

By how much heat any one receives externally from the ardency of the sun, his internal heat is proportionably abated.
Sir P. Herbert's Travels, p. 27.

A'RDENT.† adj. [ardens, Lat. burning, old Fr. ardent.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymists observe, that vegetables, as lavender, rue, marjorum, &c. distilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning spirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent spirits without oils; which shews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into spirits. Newton, Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement; having the appearance or quality of fire.

A knight of swarthy face,
High on a cole-black steed pursued the chace;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were filled.
Dryden.

3. Passionate; affectionate: used generally of desire.

Another nymph with fatal power may rise,
To damp the sinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confest,
And scorn the ardent vows that I have blest.
Prior.

A'RDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.

With true zeal may our hearts be most ardently inflamed to our religion. Sprat, Sermons.

A'RDENTNESS.* n. s. [from ardent; an old substantive in our language.] Ardency.
Sherwood.

A'RDERS.* n. s. Fallowings, or ploughings of ground. Coles, 1685. And Grose.

A'RDOUR.† n. s. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South.

That grand universal fire, which shall happen at the day of judgement, may, by its violent ardour, vitrify and turn to one lump of crystal the whole body of the earth: Nor am I the first that fell upon this conceit. Howell's Letters, i. 1.

2. Heat of affection; as love, desire, courage.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to see
His host. Dryden.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd
And the vain ardours of our love restrain'd. Pope.

3. The person ardent or bright. This is used only by Milton, who adopts it from the Ital. ardore, in Dante's Paradiso, c. xxii. 54.

Nor delay'd the winged saint,
After his charge receiv'd; but from among Thousand celestial ardours, where he stood
Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-springing light,

ARDU'ITY.† n. s. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

I hope the arduity will not be unconquerable, nor the defence of them be wholly waved. Waterhous's Apology for Learning, &c. 1653. p. 95

A'RDUOUS. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.

High on Parnassus' top her sons she show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod.
Pope.

2. Difficult.

It was a means to bring him up in the school of arts and policy, and so to fit him for that great and arduous employment that God designed him to. South.

A'RDUOUSNESS. n. s. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

ARE. The third person plural of the present tense of the verb to be; as, young men are rash, old are cautious.

A-RE, or Alamire. The lowest note but one in Guido's scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
A re to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi Bianca take him for thy lord,
C fault, that loves with all affection. Shaksp.

A'REA. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The surface contained between any lines or boundaries.

The area of a triangle is found by knowing the height and the base. Watts, Logick.

2. Any open surface, as the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. An inclosed place, as lists, or a bowling-green, or grass-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth somewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure, and, by reason of the high mountains that encompass it, looks like the area of some vast amphitheatre. Addison.

In areas vary'd with Mosaick art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart.
Pope.

To ARE'AD, or, ARE'ED.† v. a. [apeban, Sax. to counsel, from the Teut. raad, counsel, raden, to advise.] To advise; to direct; to declare; to shew.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds,
Whose praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred muse areeds
To blazon broad. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 1.

But what adventure, or what high intent,
Hath brought you hither into Fairy land,
Aread, Prince Arthure, crowne of martiall band.
Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 6.

But mark what I aread thee now: avant,
Fly thither whence thou fled'st! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to the infernal pit I drag thee chain'd.
Milton, P. L.

Arede, good gentle swaine,
If in the dale below, or on yond plaine;
Or is the village scituate in a grove?
Browne's Brit. Past. i. 2.

In the following passage, it seems employed for read.

I will o'erlook
Her hardly open'd book,
Which to aread is easie', to understand divine.
John Hall, Poems, p. 61.

ARE'EK.* adv. [A low expression, from a and reek.] In a reeking condition.

A messenger comes all areek
Mordanto at Madrid to seek. Swift.

AREFA'CTION. n. s. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The state of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally proceed arefaction, and most of the effects of nature. Bacon.

To A'REFY. v. a. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] To dry; to exhaust of moisture.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c., and so doth time or age arefy, as in the same bodies, &c.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

*ARE'NA. n. s. [Lat. The amphitheatre at Rome has been so called, because strewed with arena, sand, to drink up the blood of prize-fighters slain in it, and to render it steadfast footing for the next combatants.] The space for combatants; or other exhibitions, in a theatre.

Within [the remains of a theatre] is a very large arena, but the just measure of it could not be taken, by reason of the houses with which the Turks have almost filled it up.
Maundrell, Journey, p. 16.

ARENA'CEOUS.† adj. [Lat. arenaceus.] Sandy; having the qualities of sand.

Fishes whose egg or spawn is arenaceous.
Brown, Vulg. Err. iv. 10.

A piece of the stone of the same mines, of a yellowish brown colour, an arenaceous friable substance, and with some white spar mixed with it.
Woodward on Fossils.

ARENA'TION. n. s. [from arena, Lat. sand.] Is used by some physicians for a sort of dry bath, when the patient sits with his feet upon hot sand. Dict.

A'RENOSE.† adj. [Fr. arenose, from arena, Lat.] Sandy, full of sand. Dict.

ARE'NULOUS. adj. [from arenula, Lat. sand.] Full of small sand; gravelly.

AREO'METER.* n. s. [Fr. aréomètre, from Gr. ἀραιὸς and μέτρον.] An instrument to measure the density or gravity of any liquid.

AREO'PAGITE.* n. s. [Gr. Ἀρειοπαγίτης. See AREOPAGUS.] A senator or judge in the court of Areopagus at Athens.

Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed; among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite. Acts, xvii. 34.

Some say that there was no appeal from the Areopagites to the people; but others are of a contrary opinion. Potter's Antiq. of Greece, i. 19.

An Areopagite signified proverbially an excellent person. Hammond on the Acts, xvii. 19.

AREO'TICK. adj. [Gr. ἀραιωτικα.] Efficacious in opening the pores; attenuant; applied to medicines that dissolve viscidities, so that the morbifick matter may be carried off by sweat, or insensible perspiration. Dict.

ARETO'LOGY. n. s. [from ἀρετὴ, virtue, and λέγω, to discourse.] That part of moral philosophy which treats of virtue, its nature, and the means of arriving at it. Dict.

A'RGAL.† n. s. [old Fr. argalh, "egout, puits perdu." Roquefort. Written also argaile and argol.] Hard lees sticking to the sides of wine vessels, more commonly called tartar. Dict.

I know you have arsnick,
Vitriol, sal-tartre, argaile, alkaly. B. Jonson, Alch.

The brightest colours, dyed with this material, are made by over-dying the same; and then by discharging part of it by back-boyling it in argol.
Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. of the Royal Society, p. 298.

A'RGENT. adj. [from argentum, Lat. silver.]

1. The white colour used in the coats of gentlemen, knights, and baronets, supposed to be the representation of that metal.

Rinaldo flings
As swift as fiery light'ning kindled new,
His argent eagle with her silver wings
In field of azure, fair Erminia knew. Fairfax.

In an argent field, the god of war
Was drawn triumphant on his iron car. Dryden.

2. Silver; bright like silver.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
Translated saints, or middle spirits hold,
Betwixt th' angelical and human kind. Milton.

Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope.

A'RGENT-HORNED.* adj. [from argent and horned.] Silver-horned.

Bright as the argent-horned moone.
Lovelace, Luc. p. 151.

ARGENTA'TION. n. s. [from argentum, Lat. silver.] An overlaying with silver. Dict.

A'RGENTINE.† adj. [argentin, Fr.] Sounding like silver; appearing like silver; as the moon is often said by the poets to appear.

Celestial Dian, goddess argentine, I will obey thee. Shakspeare's Pericles, v. 2.

A'RGENTRY.* n. s. [from argent.] Materials of silver; plate. Not now in use.

Having preserved Count Mansfelt's troops from disbanding, by pawning his own argentry and jewels, he passed this way. Howell's Letters, i. 2.

No medals or rich stuff of Tyrian dye,
No costly bowls of frosted argentry.
Howell's Poem to K. Charles I.

A'RGIL.† n. s. [Fr. argile, Lat. argilla, Gr. ἄργιλλος.] Potter's clay; a fat soft kind of earth of which vessels are made.

Potter's clay is not pure argill.
Kirwan's Manures, p. 61.

Argill is that part of clay, to which this owes its property of feeling soft and unctuous, and of hardening in fire; it is difficultly soluble in acids, and scarce ever effervesces with them. When combined with the vitriolick acid, it forms alum.
Kirwan's Manures, p. 6.

ARGILLA'CEOUS.† adj. [from argil.] Clayey; partaking of the nature of argil; consisting of argil, or potter's clay.

Clayey loam denotes a compound soil, moderately cohesive, in which the argillaceous ingredient predominates. Kirwan's Manures, p. 9.

ARGI'LLOUS. adj. [from argil.] Consisting of clay; clayish; containing clay.

Albuquerque derives this redness from the sand and argillous earth at the bottom.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

A'RGOSY.† n. s. [derived by Pope from Argo, the name of Jason's ship; supposed by others to be a vessel of Ragusa, or Ragosa, a Ragozine, corrupted. It must not be omitted, that the Fr. argousin, and the Ital. argosino, mean the lieutenant of a galley.] A large vessel for merchandise; a carrack. Grose considers argosies as still a northern word for ships.

Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers.
Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

They might perhaps find stuff enough, I will not say to lade an argosy, but to overlade any man's wit in the world to reply unto.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

Mine argosies from Alexandria,
Loaden with spice and silks, now under sail,
Are smoothly gliding down by Candy shore
To Malta, through our Mediterranean sea.
Marlowe's Jew of Malta.

To A'RGUE.† v.n. [arguo, Lat., arguer, Fr.]

1. To reason; to offer reasons.

I know your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her what
A woman of less place might ask by law;
Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Publick arguing oft serves not only to exasperate the minds, but to whet the wits of hereticks.
Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not passing on, would perplex any one, who should argue from such an idea.
Locke.

2. To dispute; with the particles with or against before the opponent, and against before the thing opposed.

Why do Christians, of several persuasions, so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other?
Decay of Piety.

He that by often arguing against his own sense, imposes falsehoods on others, is not far from believing himself.
Locke.

I do not see how they can argue with any one, without setting down strict boundaries.
Locke.

To A'RGUE.† v.a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end.
Donne.

2. To persuade by argument. This definition and example Johnson has erroneously given to the verb neuter.

It is a sort of poetical logick which I would make use of, to argue you into a protection of this play.
Congreve, Ded. to Old Bachelor.

3. To debate any question; as, to argue a cause.

4. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue so many sins
Among them: how can God with such reside?
Milton.

It argues distemper of the mind as well as of the body, when a man is continually tossing from one side to the other.
South.

This argues a virtue and disposition in those sides of the rays, which answers to that virtue and disposition of the crystal.
Newton, Opticks.

5. To charge with, as a crime; with of.

I have pleaded guilty to all thoughts and expressions of mine, which can be truly argued of obscenity, profaneness, or immorality, and retract them.
Dryden, Fables.

The accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a servile copying, and total barrenness of invention; yet the seas were the same.
Dryden, Fables.

6. To prove by appearance.

What's he that thus boldly enters in?
His habit argues him a Christian.
Tr. of Soliman and Perseda.

A'RGUER.† n.s. [Fr. argueur.] A reasoner; a disputer; a controvertist.

Men are ashamed to be proselytes to a weak arguer, as thinking they must part with their reputation as well as their sin.
Decay of Piety.

Neither good christians nor good arguers.
Atterbury.

A'RGUING.* n.s. [from argue.] Argument; reasoning.

Those heart risings and internal arguings against the reception of those joyful tidings.
Smith, Portraiture of old Age, p. 22.

He had, to his sufficient memory and incomparable invention, a clear discerning judgement; and that not only in scholastical affairs and points of learning, which the arguings, and besides them the designment of his writings, manifest beyond dispute, but in the concerns of publick nature both of church and state.
Fell, Life of Hammond, sect. i.

A'RGUMENT. n.s. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reason alleged for or against any thing.

We sometimes see, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at least unpunished; yet it ought not to be an argument against the art.
Dryden.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as that thing is capable of, supposing it were; we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing.
Tillotson.

Our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren.
Locke.

2. The subject of any discourse or writing.

That she who ev'n but now was your best object,
Your praise's argument, balm of your age,
Dearest and best.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To the height of this great argument
I may assert eternal providence,
And justify the ways of God to man.
Milton.

Sad task! yet argument
Not less, but more heroick than the wrath
Of stern Achilles.
Milton.

A much longer discourse my argument requires; your merciful dispositions a much shorter.
Sprat, Sermons.

3. The contents of any work summed up by way of abstract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the œconomy and disposition of it, are the things which distinguish copies from originals.
Dryden.

4. A controversy.

This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me.
Shakspeare.

An argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses.
Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

If the idea be not agreed on betwixt the speaker and hearer, the argument is not about things, but names.
Locke.

5. It has sometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itself.
Tillotson.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very best argument for a future state.
Atterbury.

6. [In astronomy.] An arch by which we seek another unknown arch, proportional to the first.
Chambers.

To A'RGUMENT.* v.n. [from the noun.] An old English verb used for to reason; to discourse. Obsolete.

But yet they argumenten faste
Upon the pope and his estate.
Gower, Conf. Am. Prolog.

ARGUME'NTAL. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reasoning.

Afflicted sense thou kindly dost set free,
Oppress'd with argumental tyranny,
And routed reason finds a safe retreat in thee.
Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION. n.s. [from argument.] Reasoning; the act of reasoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one proposition from two or more propositions premised. Or it is the drawing a conclusion, which before was unknown, or doubtful, from some propositions more known and and evident; so when we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter.
Watts, Logick.

I suppose it is no ill topick of argumentation, to shew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of respect.
South.

His thoughts must be masculine, full of argumentation, and that sufficiently warm.
Dryden.

The whole course of his argumentation comes to nothing.
Addison.

ARGUME'NTATIVE. adj. [from argument.]

1. Consisting of argument; containing argument.

This omission, considering the bounds within which the argumentative part of my discourse was confined, I could not avoid.
Atterbury, Pref. to his Sermons.

2. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

Another thing argumentative of providence is that pappous plumage growing upon the tops of some seeds, whereby they are wafted with the wind and disseminated far and wide.
Ray.

3. Applied to persons, disputatious; disposed to controversy.

ARGUME'NTATIVELY.* adv. In an argumentative manner.

Nor do they oppose things of this nature argumentatively, so much as oratoriously.
Bp. Taylor, Artifical Handsomeness, p. 115.

Chamier has in reality exhausted the question, both historically and argumentatively, in his disputes against the Romanists.
Waterland, Ch. p. 69.

To A'RGUMENTIZE.* v.n. [from argument.] To debate; to reason.

Must it needs follow that all the unmixed and argumentizing philosophy, all arts and sciences, must be brought from Canaan?
Mannyngham, Discourses, p. 34.

A'RGUMENTIZER.* n.s. [from to argumentize.] One who debates or reasons.

This argumentizer should, to have made this story more probable, have cited this proclamation.
Brady, Introd. to Old Eng. Hist. 1684, p. 241.

ARGU'TE.† adj. [arguto, Ital. argutus, Lat. argut, old Fr. "un sçavant, un habile homme," Lacombe.]

1. Subtle; witty; sharp.
2. Shrill.

ARGU'TENESS.* n.s. [from argute.] Wittiness; acuteness.

The arguments of the Grecian [Plutarch,] drawn from reason, work themselves into your understanding, and make a deep and lasting impression in your mind; those of the Roman [Seneca,] drawn from wit, flash immediately on your imagination, but leave no durable effect: so this tickles you by starts with his arguteness, that pleases you for continuance with his propriety.
Dryden, Life of Plutarch.

A'RIA. n.s. [Ital. in musick.] An air, song, or tune.

A'RIAN.* n.s. One of the sect of Arius, who denies that Christ is the Eternal God.

The Arians, and the Eunomians, admitting that Christ took on him a real human body, yet denied that he took on him an human soul.
South, Sermon, viii. 279.

A'RIAN.* adj. Belonging to Arianism.

Will they say it [the Church] was not reformed, when the Arian heresy was suppressed?
Trapp, Popery truly stated, part I.

A'RIANISM.* n. s. The heresy or sect of Arius.

The alcoran is but a sytem of the old arianism, ill digested and worse put together, with a mixture of some Heathenism and Judaism. For Mahomet's father was an heathen, his mother a Jewess, and his tutor was Sergius the monk, a Nestorian; which sect was a branch of arianism. These, crudely mixed, made up the farrago of the alcoran. But the prevailing part was arianism.

Leslie, Truth of Christianity, p. 129.

What will the Romanists say of the whole Church in a manner, both eastern and western, when it was overspread with arianism?

Trapp, Popery truly stated, part I.

To A'RIANIZE.* v. n. [from Arian.] To admit or follow the tenets of Arianism.

These some were the Christians, that lived after the downfall of the arianizing Vandals and the expiring of their power.

Worthington, Miscellanies, p. 89.

A'RID.† adj. [aridus, Lat. dry, Fr. aride.]

1. Dry; parched up.

My complexion is become adust, and my body arid, by visiting lands. Arbuthnot and Pope.

His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy spring,
Without him Summer were an arid waste.

Thomson.

2. Metaphorically, dry; cold; pedantick.

ARI'DITY. n. s. [from arid.]

1. Dryness; siccity.

Salt taken in great quantities will reduce an animal body to the great extremity of aridity, or dryness. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. In the theological sense, a kind of insensibility in devotion, contrary to unction or tenderness.

Strike my soul with lively apprehensions of thy excellencies, to bear up my spirit under the greatest aridities and dejections, with the delightful prospect of thy glories. Norris.

A'RIES. n. s. [Lat.] The Ram; one of the twelve signs of the zodiack; the first vernal sign.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

To ARI'ETATE. v. n. [arieto, Lat.]

1. To butt like a ram.

2. To strike in imitation of the blows which rams give with their heads.

ARIETA'TION. n. s. [from arietate.]

1. The act of butting like a ram.

2. The act of battering with an engine called a ram.

The strength of the percussion, wherein ordnance do exceed all arietations and ancient inventions. Bacon.

3. The act of striking, or conflicting in general.

Now those heterogeneous atoms, by themselves, hit so exactly into their proper residence, in the midst of such tumultuary motions, and arietations of other particles. Glanville.

ARIE'TTA. n. s. [Ital. in musick.] A short air, song, or tune.

ARI'GHT.† adv. [Sax. aɲehꞇ, aɲihꞇ, upright.]

1. Rightly; without mental errour.

How him I lov'd, and love with all my might;
So thought I eke of him, and think I thought aright. Spenser.

These were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till interest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The motions of the tongue are so easy, and so subtile, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. Rightly; without crime.

A generation that set not their heart aright. Psalms.

3. Rightly; without failing of the end designed.

The doing of courtesies aright, is the mixing of the respects for his own sake and for mine.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Guardian of groves, and goddess of the night,
Fair queen, he said, direct my dart aright.

Dryden.

ARIOLA'TION, or HARIOLATION. n. s. [hariolus, Lat. a soothsayer.] Soothsaying; vaticination.

The priests of elder time deluded their apprehensions with ariolation, soothsaying, and such oblique idolatries. Brown.

ARIO'SO. n. s. [Ital. in musick.] The movement of a common air, song, or tune. Dict.

To ARI'SE.† v. n. pret. arose, particip. arisen. [Sax. aɲiɲan, aɲaɾ.]

1. To mount upward as the sun.

He rose, and, looking up, beheld the skies
With purple blushing, and the day arise. Dryden.

2. To get up as from sleep, or from rest.

So Esdras arose up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed the law. 1 Esd. ix. 7.

How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard; when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Prov. vi. 9.

3. To come into view, as from obscurity.

There shall arise false Christs and false prophets. Matt. xxiv.

4. To revive from death.

Thy dead men shall live, together with my body shall they arise: awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust. Isaiah, xxvi. 19.

5. To proceed, or have its original.

They which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phœnice. Acts, xi. 19.

I know not what mischief may arise hereafter from the example of such an innovation. Dryden.

6. To enter upon a new station, to succeed to power or office.

Another Mary then arose,
And did rig'rous laws impose. Cowley.

7. To commence hostility.

And when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him. 1 Sam. xvii. 35.

For the various senses of this word see RISE.

A'RISTARCHY.* n. s. [from ἄριστος, greatest, and ἀρχη, government.] A body of good men in power.

The ground on which I would build his chief praise, to some of the aristarchy and sour censures of these days, requires first an apology.

Harrington, Brief View of the Ch. of Eng. p. 153.

ARISTO'CRACY. n. s. [ἄριστος, greatest, and κρατέω, to govern.] That form of government which places the supreme power in the nobles, without a king, and exclusively of the people.

The aristocracy of Venice hath admitted so many abuses through the degeneracy of the nobles, that the period of its duration seems to approach.

Swift.

A'RISTOCRAT.* n. s. [Fr. from the Greek, as in ARISTOCRACY. A word of modern use, imported into this country in the early part of the French democratical revolution.] A favourer of aristocracy.

What his friends call aristocrats and despots.

Burke.

ARISTOCRA'TICAL. adj. [from aristocracy.] Relating to aristocracy; including a form of government by the nobles.

Ockham distinguishes, that the papacy, or ecclesiastical monarchy, may be changed in an extraordinary manner, for some time, into an aristocratical form of government. Ayliffe.

ARISTOCRA'TICALLY.* adv. [This is an old English adverb, in the dictionary of Sherwood.] In an aristocratical manner.

ARISTOCRA'TICALNESS. n. s. [from aristocratical.] An aristocratical state. Dict.

ARISTOCRA'TICK.* adj. [Fr. aristocratique.] Aristocratical.

Though with the temper'd monarchy here mix'd
Aristocratick sway, the people still,
Flatter'd by this or that, as interest lean'd,
No full perfection knew.

Thomson, Liberty, P. IV.

Subdivisions in government are only admissible in favour of the dignity of inferiour princes and high nobility; or for the support of an aristocratick confederacy under some head; or for the conservation of the franchises of the people in some privileged province. Burke's Works, iii. 264.

ARISTO'CRATY.* n. s. [The same as ARISTOCRACY, Fr. aristocratie. This seems the more precise orthography.]

Their pure forms of commonwealths, monarchies, aristocraties, democraties, are most famous in contemplation: but in practice they are temperate, and usually mixt.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 37.

This art — has sometimes made use of a monarchy, sometimes of an aristocraty, sometimes of a democraty. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, p. 179.

ARISTOTE'LIAN.* adj. [from the philosopher Aristotle.] Founded on the opinion of Aristotle.

The historian has here the very same advantages over the moral philosopher, that the experimental naturalist has over the Aristotelian in physicks.

Warburton on Prodigies, Part II.

This is just the Aristotelian hypothesis of sensible species, which modern philosophers have been at great pains to refute. Reid's Inquiry.

ARISTOTE'LIAN.* n. s. A follower of the philosophy of Aristotle.

The Aristotelians were of opinion, that superfluity of riches might cause a tumult in a commonwealth. Sir Miles Sandys, Essays, p. 210.

Some of Plato's followers, in particular, when they talk of the world of ideas, entertain us with substances and beings no less extravagant and chimerical. Many Aristotelians have likewise spoken as unintelligibly of their substanial forms.

Addison, Spect. No. 56.

ARISTOTE'LICK.* adj. Relating to the philosophy of Aristotle.

The Aristotelick or Arabian philosophy continued to be communicated from Spain and Africa to the rest of Europe chiefly by means of the Jews.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, i. 443.

ARITHME'TICAL. adj. [from arithmetick.] According to the rules or method of arithmetick.

The principles of bodies may be infinitely small, not only beyond all naked or assisted sense, but beyond all arithmetical operation or conception.

Grew.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatick colour, were in arithmetical progression, as in the fifth observation.

Newton.

ARITHME'TICALLY. adv. [from arithmetical.] In an arithmetical manner; according to the principles of arithmetick.

Though the fifth part of a xestes being a simple fraction, and arithmetically regular, it is yet no proper part of that measure. Arbuthnot on Coins.

ARITHMETI'CIAN. n. s. [from arithmetick.] A master of the art of numbers.

A man had need be a good arithmetician, to understand this author's works. His description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison.

ARI'THMETICK. n. s. [ἀριθμὸς, number, and μέτρέω, to measure.] The science of numbers; the art of computation.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them;
But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick.
Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

The Christian religion, according to the Apostle's arithmetick, hath but these three parts of it; sobriety, justice, religion. Bp. Taylor.

ARK.† n. s. [Lat. arca, Goth. arka, Sax. aɲc, Basq. arca, Welsh and Bas Bret. arch, old Fr. arche.]

1. A vessel to swim upon the water, usually applied to that in which Noah was preserved from the universal deluge; but not wholly.

Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shall pitch it within and without with pitch. Genesis vi. 14.

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household, from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

And when she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein. Exod. ii. 3.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the staves were put for carrying it. Upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown all around it, and two cherubims were fastened to the cover. It contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmet.

3. A chest, coffer, or binn; so used in most of the languages cited in the etymology; and still common, in this sense, in our northern counties.

The one, the margarite or pearl; the other, the cabinet or ark to keep this jewel.
Bp. King, Vine Palatine, p. 6.

Bearing that precious relike in an arke
Of gold. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 15.

ARM.† n. s. [Sax. aɾm, eaɾm; Su. Goth. Germ. and Teut. arm. "Arm (a brevi) antiquissimis temporibus notavit frachium, sicut hodiè: hinc Gothica vox arms in Gloss. Junii, p. 66. Anglo-Saxones dicebant eaɾm. Convenit cum Latino armus, necnon armilla. Vid. Voss. Etymol. Scandi eâdem significatione hanc vocem usurpant: nam armgeir ipsis erat hasta mannaria, apud Verelium in Indice Hist. Goth." Loescheri Lit. Celt. p. 76.]

1. The limb which reaches from the hand to the shoulder.

If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulderblade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job.

Like helpless friends who view from shore
The labouring ship, and hear the tempest roar,
So stood they with their arms across. Dryden.

2. The bow of a tree.

The trees spread out their arms to shade her face,
But she on elbow lean'd. Sidney.

Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual shade combines.
Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood.
Dryden, Æneid.

We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the secular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jer. xvii. 5.

O God, thy arm was here!
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

ARM'S END. n. s. A phrase taken from boxing, in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion.
Sidney's Arcadia.

For my sake be comfortable, hold death awhile at the arm's end. Shakspeare.

In the same sense is used arm's length.

ARM'S REACH.* n. s. [Sax. eaɾm-ɣeɾæce, Cædmon.] Within the stretch or reach of the arm.

To ARM. v. a. [armo, Lat.]

1. To furnish with armour of defence, or weapons of offence.

And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan. Genesis.

True conscious honour is to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without, that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing that may add strength.

Their wounded steeds
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakspeare.

3. To furnish; to fit up: as, to arm a loadstone, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your hook with the line in the inside of it. Walton's Angler.

Having wasted the callus, I left off those tents, and dressed it with others armed with digestives.
Wiseman's Surgery.

4. To provide against.

His servant, arm'd against such coverture,
Reported unto all, that he was sure
A noble gentleman of high regard. Spenser.

To ARM. v. n. To take arms; to be fitted with arms.

Think we king Harry strong;
And princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.
Shakspeare.

ARMA'DA.† n. s. [Span. a fleet of war, from the Lat. armata, supplying classis, the fleet.] An armament for sea; a fleet of war. It is often erroneously spelt armado. B. Jonson writes it correctly.

In all the mid-earth seas was left no road
Wherein the pagan his bold head untwines,
Spread was the huge armado wide and broad,
From Venice, Genes, and towns which them confines. Fairfax.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship. Shaks.

I could report more actions yet of weight
Out of this orb, as here of eighty-eight,
Against the proud Armada, stil'd by Spain
The Invincible, that cover'd all the main.
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

At length resolv'd to assert the watery ball,
He in himself did whole armados bring:
Him aged seamen might their master call,
And chose for general, were he not their king.
Dryden.

ARMADI'LLO. n. s. [Spanish.] A four-footed animal of Brasil, as big as a cat, with a snout lik a hog, a tail like a lizard, and feet like a hedge-hog. He is armed all over with hard scales like armour, whence he takes his name, and retires under them like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or cartilaginous substance; but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year under ground. He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the stongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire before he will shew his nose. His flesh is white, fat, tender, and more dclicate than that of a sucking pig. Trevoux.

A'RMAMENT.† n. s. [armamentum, Lat.] A force equipped for war, military or naval.

So small were her armaments, and her councils thus divided. Bryant's Troy.

He possessed neither such courage, nor such vigour and activity of mind, as to undertake in person the conduct of the armament. Robertson.

ARMAME'NTARY. n. s. [armamentarium, Lat.] An armoury; a magazine or arsenal of warlike implements. Dict.

A'RMAN. n. s. A confection for restoring appetite in horses. Dict.

A'RMATURE. n. s. [armatura, Lat.]

1. Armour; something to defend the body from hurt.

Others should be armed with hard shells; others with prickles; the rest that have no such armature, should be endowed with great swiftness and pernicity. Ray on the Creation.

2. Offensive weapons; less properly.

The double armature is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon. Dec. of Piety.

A'RMED. adj. [In heraldry.] Is used in respect of beasts and birds of prey, when their teeth, horns, feet, beak, talons, or tusks, are of a different colour from the rest; as, he bears a cock or a falcon armed, or. Chambers.

A'RMED Chair.† n. s. [from armed and chair, Dr. Johnson says; but it is usually called, I believe, an arm-chair. So we say, an elbow-chair.] An elbow-chair, or a chair with rests for the arms.

ARME'NIAN Bole. n. s. A fatty medicinal kind of earth, of a pale reddish colour, which takes its name from the country of Armenia.

ARME'NIAN Stone. n. s. A mineral stone or earth of a blue colour, spotted with green, black, and yellow; anciently brought only from Armenia, but now found in Germany, and the Tyrol. It bears a near resemblance to lapis lazuli, from which it seems only to differ in degree of maturity; it being softer, and speckled with green instead of gold. Chambers.

ARME'NTAL. } adj. [armentalis, or armen-
A'RMENTINE. } tinus, Lat.] Belonging to a drove or herd of cattle. Dict.

A'RMENTOSE. adj. [armentosus, Lat.] Abounding with cattle. Dict.

A'RMFUL.* n. s. [from arm and full. The Danes have also arm-fuld. This is an old English substantive, which neither Dr. Johnson, nor subsequent lexicographers, have thought worthy of notice.] What the arm can hold.

'Tis not the wealth of Plutus, nor the gold
Lockt in the heart of earth, can buy away
This armful from me; this had been a ransom
To have redeem'd the great Augustus Cesar,
Had he been taken.
Beaum. and Fl. Philaster. iv. i.

He comes so lazily on in a simile, with his "armfull of weeds," and demeans himself in the dull expression so like a dough-kneaded thing.
Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

Let that happy soul hold fast
Her heavenly armful. Crashaw's Poems, p. 59.

A'RMGAUNT. adj. [from arm and gaunt.] Slender as the arm.

So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an armgaunt steed. Shaks.

A'RMHOLE. n. s. [from arm and hole.] The cavity under the shoulder.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet, and under the armholes, and on the sides. The cause is the thinness of the skin in those parts, joined with the rareness of being touched there.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ARMI'GEROUS. adj. [from armiger, Lat.] an armour-bearer.] Bearing arms.

A'RMILLARY. adj. [from armilla, Lat. a bracelet.] Resembling a bracelet.

When the circles of the mundane sphere are supposed to be described on the convex surface of a sphere, which is hollow within, and, after this, you imagine all parts of the sphere's surface to be cut away, except those parts on which such circles are described: then that sphere is called an armillary sphere, because it appears in the form of several circular rings, or bracelets, put together in a due position. Harris's Description of the Globes.

A'RMILLATED. adj. [armillatus, Lat.] Having bracelets. Dict.

A'RMINGS. n. s. pl. [in a ship.] The same with waste clothes, being clothes hung about the outside of the ship's upper works fore and aft, and before the cubbridge heads. Some are also hung round the tops, called top armings.
Chambers.

ARMI'NIAN.* n. s. One who supports the tenets of Arminius, which are in opposition to those of Calvin, respecting particularly free will, predestination, grace, and universal redemption.

The Arminian may be tempted to trust too much to himself, and too little to God.
Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

I am not, nor would be, accounted willingly Arminian, Calvinist, or Lutheran, (names of division) but a Christian. For my faith was never taught by the doctrine of men.
Mountagu's Appeal to Cæsar, p. 10.

ARMI'NIAN.* adj. Relating to the sect or doctrine of Arminius.

He that has looked into controversy, and especially those two, which are now the most considerable, the Arminian, and the Socinian.
South, Sermons, ix. 315.

ARMI'NIANISM.* n. s. The tenets of Arminius.

For Arminianism, I must and do protest before God and his angels, the time is yet to come that I ever read [a] word in Arminius.
Mountagu's Appeal to Cæsar, p. 11.

Laud, Neil, Montagu, and other bishops were all supposed to be tainted with Arminianism.
Hume, Hist. of England.

He [Bishop Hall] soon became eminent in the theology of those times, preached against predestination before prince Henry with unrivalled applause, and discussed the doctrines of Arminianism in voluminous dissertations.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iv. 2.

ARMI'POTENCE. n. s. [from arma, arms, and potentia, power, Latin.] Power in war.

ARMI'POTENT. adj. [armipotens, Latin.] Powerful in arms; mighty in war.

The manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier. Shakspeare.

For if our God the Lord armipotent,
Those armed angels in our aid down send,
That were at Dathan to his prophet sent,
Thou wilt come down with them. Fairfax.

Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent. Dryden.

ARMI'SONOUS. adj. [armisonous, Lat.] Rustling with armour.

A'RMISTICE.† n. s. [armistitium, Lat.] A short truce; a cessation of arms for a short time.

Many reasons of prudence might incline the king of England to think this armistice more desirable than a continuance of the war. Lyttelton.

A'RMLESS.* adj. [from arm and less.]

1. Without an arm.

On a wall this king his eyen cast,
And saw an hand armles that wrote full fast.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

2. Without weapons or arms.

Truth laughs at death,
And terrifies the killer more than kill'd:
Integrity thus armless seeks her foes,
And never needs the target, nor the sword,
Bow, nor envenom'd shafts.
Beaum. and Fl. Queen of Corinth, iv. 3.

Next, we reave thy sword,
And give thee armless to thy enemies.
Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta, v. 2.

They of the religion, are now townless and armless. Howell, Instruct. for For. Trav. p. 116.

The king of Morocco, and others with an army —suddenly invaded Spain, lying armless and open; and so conquered it. Howell, Letters, i. 3.

A'RMLET. n. s. [from arm.]

1. A little arm; as, an armlet of the sea.
2. A piece of armour for the arm.
3. A bracelet for the arm.

And, when she takes thy hand, and doth seem kind,
Doth search what rings and armlets she can find.
Donne.

Every nymph of the flood her tresses rending,
Throws off her armlet of pearl in the main. Dryd.

ARMO'NIAC. n. s. [erronequsly so written for ammoniac.] A sort of volatile salt. See AMMONIAC.

A'RMORER.† [n. s. armorier, Fr.] It is usually written armourer.

1. He that makes armour, or weapons.

Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man. Shaks.

The armourers make their steel more tough and pliant, by aspersion of water and juice of herbs.
Bacon.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death that deal in steel for gains
Were there: The butcher, armorer, and smith,
Who forges sharpen'd fauchions, or the scythe.
Dryden.

When arm'rers temper in the ford
The keen-edg'd pole-ax, or the shining sword,
The red-hot metal hisses in the lake. Pope.

2. He that dresses another in armour.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspeare.

The morning he was to join battle with Harold, his armorer put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind. Camden.

ARMO'RIAL.† adj. [armorial, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the arms or escutcheon of a family, as ensigns armorial.

These five cinques, or these 25 round spots, which in arms do signify numbers, as some writers have observed, have not been only imprinted upon their altars, but being (as it is probable) from thence derived, have been accounted a symbolical device and made armorial.
Potter on the Numb. 666. p. 176.

It is not even from domesday-book, pedigrees in the heralds' office, armorial bearings, &c. that this controversy is to be finally and effectually adjusted. Warton, Enq. Rowl. p. 124.

2. Simply, belonging to armour. Cotgrave.

A'RMORIST. n. s. [from armour.] A person skilled in heraldry. Dict.

A'RMORY.† n. s. [old Fr. armoirie, Span. armeria, L. Lat. armarium.] Usually written armoury.

1. The place in which arms are reposited for use.

The sword
Of Michael, from the armoury of God,
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen,
Nor solid, might resist that edge. Milton, P. L.

With plain heroick magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armouries and magazines contemns.
Milton, S. A.

Let a man consider these virtues, with the contrary sins, and then, as out of a full armory, or magazine, let him furnish his conscience with texts of scripture. South.

2. Armour; arms of defence.

Nigh at hand
Celestial armoury, shields, helms, and spears,
Hung high, with diamond flaming, and with gold.
Milton, P. L.

3. Ensigns armorial.

Well worthy be you of that armory,
Wherein you have great glory won this day.
Spenser, F. Q.

Your great grandfather, Henry the Seventh, (whether more valiant, or fortunate, I know not,) being almost at once an exile and a conqueror, united, by the marriage of Elizabeth of York, the white rose and the red, the armories of two very powerful families. Sir H. Wotton, Paneg. to K. C. I.

A'RMOUR.† n. s. [armure, Fr. armatura, Lat.] Defensive arms; a word not frequent in the plural number.

Your friends are up and buckle on their armour. Shakspeare.

That they might not go naked among their enemies, the only armour that Christ allows them, is prudence and innocence. South.

We'll want no mistresses,
Good swords, and good strong armours!
Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta, ii. 5.

A'RMOUR-BEARER. n. s. [from armour and bear.] He that carries the armour of another.

His armour-bearer first, and next he kill'd

A'RMPIT. n. s. [from arm and pit.] The hollow place under the shoulder.

The handles to these gouges are made so long, that the handle may reach under the armpit of the workman. Moxon.

ARMS. n. s. without the singular number. [arma, Lat.]

1. Weapons of offence, or armour of defence.

Those arms which Mars before
Had giv'n the vanquish'd, now the victor bore. Pope.

2. A state of hostility.

Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confed'rates, are in arms. Shakspeare.

3. War in general.

Arms and the man I sing. Dryden.

Him Paris follow'd to the dire alarms,
Both breathing slaughter, both resolv'd in arms. Pope.

4. Action; the act of taking arms.

Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet sung. Milton.

And seas and rocks and skies rebound,
To arms, to arms, to arms! Pope.

5. The ensigns armorial of a family.

A'RMY. n. s. [armée, Fr.]

1. A collection of armed men, obliged to obey one man. Locke.

Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage. Bacon.

The meanest soldier, that has fought often in an army, has a truer knowledge of war, than he that has writ whole volumes, but never was in any battle. South.

The Tuscan leaders, and their army sing,
Which follow'd great Æneas to the war;
Their arms, their numbers, and their names declare. Dryden.

2. A great number.

The fool hath planted in his memory an army of good words. Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

ARNA'TTO.* } n. s. A vegetable produc-
ARNO'TTO. } tion of the West Indies.

Arnotto dyeth of itself an orange-colour, is used with pot-ashes upon silk, linen, and cottons, but not upon cloth, as being not apt to penetrate into a thick substance. Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. of the Royal Society, p. 299.

Arnatto is mixed up by the Spanish Americans with their chocolate, to which it gives, in their opinion, an elegant tincture and great medicinal virtue. They suppose that it strengthens the stomach, stops fluxes, and abates febrile symptoms; but its principal consumption is among painters and dyers. It is sometimes used by the Dutch farmers to give a richness of colour to their butter: and very small quantities of it are said to be applied in the same manner in the English dairies. Guthrie's Geography.

ARO'INT. See AROYNT.

*ARO'MA. n. s. [Gr. ἄρωμα, Fr. arôme.] Used by some writers for myrrh; and in chymistry, signifies the odorant principle, the volatile spirit, of plants.

AROMA'TICAL. adj. [from aromatick.] Spicy; fragrant; high scented.

All things that are hot and aromatical do preserve liquors or powders. Bacon.

Volatile oils refresh the animal spirits, but likewise are endued with all the bad qualities of such substances, producing all the effects of an oily and aromatical acrimony. Arbuthnot.

AROMA'TICK.† adj. [Fr. aromatique.]

1. Spicy.

Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
And now their odours arm'd against them fly:
Some preciously by shatter'd porcelain fall,
And some by aromatick splinters die. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; strong scented.

Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatick pain. Pope.

AROMA'TICKS. n. s. Spices.

They were furnished for exchange of their aromaticks, and other proper commodities. Ralegh.

AROMATIZA'TION. n. s. [from aromatize.] The mingling of a due proportion of aromatick spices or drugs with any medicine.

To ARO'MATIZE.† v. a. [Fr. aromatizer.]

1. To scent with spices; to impregnate with spices.

Drink the first cup at supper hot, and half an hour before supper something hot and aromatized. Bacon.

2. To scent; to perfume.

Unto converted Jews no man imputeth this unsavoury odour, as though aromatized by their conversion. Brown.

ARO'MATIZER.* n. s. [from the verb.] That which gives spicy quality.

Of other strewings, and aromatizers, to enrich our sallets, we have already spoken. Evelyn.

ARO'SE. The preterite of the verb arise. See ARISE.

ARO'UND. adv. [from a and round.]

1. In a circle.

He shall extend his propagated sway,
Where Atlas turns the rowling heav'ns around,
And his broad shoulders with their lights are crown'd. Dryden.

2. On every side.

And all above was sky, and ocean all around. Dryden.

ARO'UND. prep. About; encircling, so as to encompass.

From young Iūlus head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryden.

To ARO'USE. v. a. [from a and rouse.]

1. To wake from sleep.

How loud howling wolves arouse the jades,
That drag the tragic melancholy night. Shakspeare.

2. To raise up; to excite.

But absent, what fantastick woes arous'd
Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life. Thomson.

ARO'W.† adv. [Formerly written on row. Spenser writes arew, Fr. rue, Goth. rud, line or order. See ROW.]

1. In a row; with the breasts all bearing against the same line.

Then some green gowns are by the lasses worn
In chastest plays, till home they walk arow. Sidney.

But with a pace more sober and more slow,
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode arow. Dryden.

2. Successively; in order; one after another.

My master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids arow, and bound the doctor. Shakspeare, Comedy of Errours.

Three days arow, to pass the open street. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 321.

ARO'YNT.† adv. [This word, Dr. Johnson says, is of uncertain etymology; and he offers none. Perhaps it may be referred to the old Fr. roigner, (from the Lat. averrunco, or aurunco,) to pare, to clip; and figuratively, to keep under, to hinder from rising, to disarm. See Cotgrave in VV. roigner, and rongner; a very proper meaning to be used (as the word is used) in exorcising a witch; that is, be thou disarmed, be thou kept under, stand off. But a learned friend tells me, that in the dialects of Cheshire and Lancashire the terms rynt, rynt thee, roynt, or runt, are used by milkmaids to a cow which has been milked in order to drive her away, to make room for others to come in her place; which words seem to be derived from the old English word arowme in Pierce Plowman's Creed, which is there explained by remote, scorsum; appearing to be derived from the Sax. ꝑýman, or ꝑumian, to get out of the way; as in the Saxon gospels, Luke xiv. 9, we read ꝑým ðýrum men ꝑeċl, "give this man place." Arowme is also used by Chaucer in his House of Fame, B. 2. v. 32, and is explained by Speght roaming, wandering; and by Tyrwhitt, at large.] Be gone; away: a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the night-mare, and her nine fold,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

*ARPE'GGIO. n. s. [Ital.] In musick, the distinct sound of the notes of an instrumental chord, plainly heard in succession, accompanying the voice.

The funeral song — was sung in recitative over his grave by a racaraide, or rhapsodist, who occasionally sustained his voice with arpeggios swept over the strings of the harp. Walker's Hist. Mem. of the Irish Bards, p. 17.

*ARQUEBUSA'DE. n. s. [Fr. Existing in old Fr. under a very different meaning, that of the shot of an arquebuse; but perhaps formed, in consequence of being applied to wounds made by that weapon.] A distilled water, applied to a bruise or wound.

You will find a letter from my sister to thank you for the arquebusade water, which you sent her. Chesterfield.

A'RQUEBUSE.† n. s. [Fr. spelt falsely harquebuss. When guns were first used, a bow was joined to the same stock which served for the musquet, and thence it was called by Menage arcubugio.] A hand gun. It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carabine, or fusee.

A harquebuse, or ordnance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides. Bacon.

ARQUEBUSI'ER. n. s. [from arquebuse.] A soldier armed with an arquebuse.

He compassed them in with fifteen thousand arquebusiers, whom he had brought with him well appointed. Knolles.

A'RR.* n. s. [Dan. ar, Sued. arr, Sax. appa.] A mark or seam, made by a flesh-wound; a cicatrice. Used in Cumberland, and other northern counties.

The healen plaister eas'd the painful sair,
The arr indeed remains, but naething mair. Relph's Poems, p. 2.

A'RRA.* n. s. [Lat. arrha, or arra.] A pledge. Not now in use.

By his spirite hath God grafted us into his Christ, as the braunches are into the true vine, by whose sap, even his sayd spirite, we have not onely our arra and earnest penny of his assured covenant, but also are set so sure into eternall lyfe, that it is impossible for sinne, satan, flesh, or whatsoever, to condemne us.

Anderson on the Hymn Benedictus, (1573) p. 4. b.

A'RRACH, O'RRACH, or O'RRAGE. n. s. One of the quickest plants both in coming up and running to seed. Its leaves are very good in pottage.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'RRACK, or ARA'CK.† n. s. The word arack is an Indian name for strong waters of all kinds; for they call our spirits and brandy English arack. But what we understand by the name arack, is no other than a spirit procured by distillation from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by incision out of the cocoa-nut tree. Chambers.

I send this to be better known for choice of china, tea, arrack, and other Indian goods. Spect.

Many persons drink a spirituous liquor, arraki, which the Tartar mountaineers distil from plums, sloes, dog-berries, elderberries, and wild-grapes.

Pallas, Travels in the Crimea.

A'RRACK-PUNCH.* n. s. The liquor called punch, composed, in a great degree, of arrack. See PUNCH.

He gets drunk with arrack-punch, staggers home at three in the morning, quarrels with the watch, and breaks lamps.

Dr. Warton's Works, p. 186.

They treated me with port-wine and arrack-punch; and now and then, when they had drank so much as hardly to distinguish wine from water, they would conclude with a bottle or two of claret.

Graves's Recollection of Shenstone, p. 16.

To ARRA'IGN.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson derives this word, inaccurately, from the Fr. arranger, to set in order. It is from the old Fr. arraigner, impétrer, appeler en justice, solliciter un jugement, assigner. V. Lacombe and Roquefort. And arrainier, from the low Lat. arrainare, citer devant un tribunal.]

1. To set a thing in order, or in its place. One is said to arraign a writ in a county, that fits it for trial before the justices of the circuit. A prisoner is said to be arraigned, wherehe is indicted and brought forth to his trial.

Cowel.

Summon a session, that we may ararign
Our most disloyal lady; for as she hath
Been publickly accused, so shall she have
A just and open trial. Shakspeare.

2. To accuse; to charge with faults in general, as in controversy, in a satire.

Reverse of nature! shall such copies then
Arraign the originals of Maro's pen? Rosc.

He that thinks a man to the ground, will quickly endeavour to lay him there: for while he despises him, he arraigns and condemns him in his heart. South.

3. It has for before the fault.

My own enemies I shall never answer; and if your lordship has any, they will not arraign you for want of knowledge.

Dryden, Dedication to the Æneid.

ARRA'IGNMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. araisnment.] The act of arraigning; an accusation; a charge.

In the sixth satire, which seems only an arraignment of the whole sex, there is a latent admonition to avoid ill women. Dryden.

The night thou [O blessed Saviour] hadst spent in watching, in prayer, in agony, in thy conveyance from the garden to Jerusalem; from Annas to Caiphas, from Caiphas to Pilate; in thy restless answers, in buffetings, and stripes; the day in arraignments, in haling from place to place, in scourgings, in stripping, in robing and disrobing, in bleeding, in tugging under thy cross, in woundings and distension, in pain and passion.

Bp. Hall, Contemplations. The Crucifixion.

ARRAI'MENT.* n. s. [from array. This should be the proper word for raiment, according to Dr. Johnson; who, however, seems not to have known the existence of arraiment. See RAIMENT.] Clothing; dress.

For their taste they must have weekly fish, herbs, and fruits, brought well-nigh from all places in Italy; for their clothing, the softest arraiments [that] can be had.

Sheldon's Miracles of Antichrist, p. 176.

Is my condition worse than sheep ordained for slaughter, that crop the springing grass, clothed warm in soft arrayment, purchased without their providence or pains?

Quarles, Judg. and Mer. The Slothful Man.

A'RRAND.* n. s. [Sax. ærenð, Dan. arend, Su-Goth. arande.] The old word for errand, message; so written by Chaucer, and not disused in the time of Milton.

Such may be said to go out upon such an arrand. Howell, Instruct. for For. Travel, p. 187.

ARRE'CTARY.* n. s. [from arrectarius, Lat. set upright.] A beam or post standing upright.

The arrectary or beam of his cross.

Bp. Hall's Works, 1661, vol. 2. p. 278.

To ARRA'NGE. v. a. [arranger, Fr.] To put in the proper order for any purpose.

I chanc'd this day
To see two knights in travel on my way,
(A sorry sight!) arrang'd in battle new.

Spenser, F. Q.

How effectually are its muscular fibres arranged, and with what judgment are its columns and furrows disposed. Cheyne.

To ARRAN'GE.* v. n.

We cannot arrange with our enemy in the present conjuncture, without abandoning the interest of mankind. Burke's Two Letters, p. 14.

ARRA'NGEMENT.† n. s. [Fr. arrangement.] The act of putting in proper order; the state of being put in order.

There is a proper arrangement of the parts in elastick bodies, which may be facilitated by use.

Cheyne.

Nor think thou seest a wild disorder there;
Through this illustrious chaos to the sight,
Arrangement neat and chastest order reign.

Young, Night Th. 9.

In my new arrangement, I ought to have placed this piece under the Translations.

Warton's Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

He views the piles of fall'n Persepolis
In deep arrangement hide the darksome plain.

Warton's Pleasures of Melancholy.

ARRA'NGER.* n. s. [from arrange.] One who plans or contrives.

None of the list-makers, the assemblers of the mob, the directors and arrangers, have been convicted.

Burke, Reflections on the Executions in 1780.

A'RRANT.† adj. [A word of uncertain etymology, but probably from errant, which being at first applied in its proper signification to vagabonds, as an errant or arrant rogue, that is, a rambling rogue, lost, in time, its original signification, and being by its use understood to imply something bad, was applied at large to any thing that was mentioned with hatred or contempt. Butler says, as Mr. Malone observes, that it comes from arrenter, Fr. (pronounced arranter,) "to let out for rent or hire;" and so an arrant knave or whore is such a one as is hired to be naught. Eng. Gram. 4to. 1633, p. 2. of Index. To this etymology I do not accede, but think with Dr. Johnson that it is a corruption of errant or errand; and the examples which I add, of errand, in this sense, are on our side.

1. Bad in a high degree.

Country folks, who hallooed and hooted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy. Sidney.

A vain fool grows forty times an arranter sot than before. L'Estrange.

And let him every deity adore,
If his new bride prove not an arrant whore.

Dryden.

He [the devil] makes all his subjects errand vassals, yea chained slaves.

Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 25.

That they were a company of errand hypocrites we have little cause to doubt, because our blessed Saviour, who knew their very thoughts, calls them [the Scribes and Pharisees] so even to their faces.

Asheton, Serm. at Guildhall Chapel, 1673. p. 11.

2. Applied to things.

Your justification is but a miserable shifting off those testimonies of the ancientest fathers alleged against you, and the authority of some synodal canons, which are now arrant to us.

Milton, Animad. on Rem. Defence.

A'RRANTLY. adv. [from arrant.] Corruptly; shamefully.

Funeral tears are as arrantly hired out as mourning clokes. L'Estrange.

A'RRAS.† n. s. from Arras, a town in Artois, where hangings are woven.] Tapestry; hangings woven with images. Not often found in the plural number.

Thence to the hall, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight.

Spenser, F. Q.

He's going to his mother's closet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
To hear the process. Shakspeare.

As he shall pass the galleries, I'll place
A guard behind the arras. Denham's Sophy.

I have of yore made many a scrambling meal
In corners, behind arrasses, on stairs.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman Hater, iii. 4.

ARRA'UGHT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser, in the preter tense, of which I have not found the present, but suppose he derived arreach from arracher, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious sons unto them twain
Arraught the rule, and from their father drew.

Spenser, F. Q.

ARRA'Y.† n. s. [arroy, Fr. arreo, Sp. arredo, Ital. from reye, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, mille hominum arraiatorum, Knighton.]

1. Order, chiefly of war. [So the Sax. eopaðe means a cohort or legion.]

The earl espying them scattered near the army, sent one to command them to their array.

Hayward.

Wert thou sought to deeds,
That might require the array of war, thy skill
Of conduct would be such, that all the world
Could not sustain thy prowess. Milton, P. R.

A general sets his army in array
In vain, unless he fight and win the day.

Denham.

2. Dress.

A rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
On which there sat most brave embellished
With royal robes, and gorgeous array,
A maiden queen. Spenser, F. Q.

That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair or gold, or pearls, or costly array. 1 Tim. ii. 9.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array. Dryden.

3. In law. Array, of the Fr. array, i. e. ordo, the ranking or setting forth of a jury or inquest of men impannelled upon a cause. Thence is the verb to array a pannel, that is, to set forth one by another the men impannelled. Cowel.

To ARRA'Y.† v. a. [arrayer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order. Not much in use.

His barge was for him araied.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

2. To deck; to dress; to adorn the person: with the particle with, or in.

Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty.
Job, xl. 10.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heaven, array'd in gold

One vest array'd the corps, and one they spread
O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head.
Dryden.

3. In law. See ARRAY in law.

ARRA'YERS.† n. s. pl. [old Fr. arraiour, sergent de compagnie, maréchal de camp.] Officers who anciently had the care of seeing the soldiers duly appointed in their armour. Cowel.

ARRE'AR.† adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive signification of the word, which, though not now in use, seems to be retained by Spenser. See REAR.

To leave with speed Atlanta swift arrear,
Through forests wild and unfrequented land,
To chase the lion, boar, or rugged bear.
Spenser, F. Q.

To be "arrere," to be behind with account or reckoning. Huloet.

ARRE'AR.† n. s.

1. That which remains behind unpaid, though due. See ARREARAGE.

His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize; th' arrears are yet to pay.
Dryden.

If a tenant run away in arrear of some rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away or lost. Locke.

It will comfort our grand-children, when they see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boasting as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich. Swift.

2. The rear. See ARRIERE.

The first comes sometimes in the arrear.
Howell, Instruct. for For. Travel. p. 74.

ARRE'ARAGE.† n. s. A word now little used. [Low Lat. areragium.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due due time, as arrearage of rent. Cowel.

Paget set forth the king of England's title to his debts and pension from the French king; with all arrearages. Hayward.

He'll grant the tribute, send the arrearages.
Shakspeare.

The old arrearages under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed, he hath brought Lurana to uphold and maintain herself.
Howell, Vocal Forest.

ARRE'ARANCE. n. s. The same with arrear. See ARREAR. Dict.

To ARRE'CT.* v. a. Lat. arrigo, part. arrectus. To raise or lift up. Obsolete.

Arrectynge my sight towarde the zodiake,
The signes xij for to beholde afarre.
Skelton, Poems, p. 9.

ARRE'CT.* adj. [Lat. arrectus.] Erected; figuratively, attentive.

God speaks not to the idle and unconcerned hearer, but to the vigilant and arrect.
Bp. Smalridge, Serm. p. 9.

Having large ears, perpetually exposed and arrect. Swift, Tale of a Tub. § 11.

Eager for the event,
Around the beldame all arrect they hang,
Each trembling heart with grateful terrors quell'd.
Akenside, Pl. of Imag. b. i.

ARRENTA'TION.† n. s. [from arrendar, Span. to farm, or old Fr. arrenter, low Lat. arrendare.] Is, in the forest law, the licensing an owner of lands in the forest to inclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, in consideration of a yearly rent. Dict.

ARREPTI'TIOUS.† adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.
2. Crept in privily. [from ad and repo.]
3. Mad. [Lat. arreptitius.]

Mock oracles, and odd arreptitious frantick extravagancies. Howell, Letters, iv. 43.

ARRE'ST. n. s. [from arrester, Fr. to stop.]

1. In law.

A stop or stay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is said to be arrested. To plead in arrest of judgement, is to shew cause why judgement should be stayed, though the verdict of the twelve be passed. To plead in arrest of taking the inquest upon the former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should not be taken. An arrest is a certain restraint of a man's person, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of imprisonment. Cowel.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shakspeare.

2. Any caption, seizure of the person.

To the rich man, who had promised himself ease for many years, it was a sad arrest, that his soul was surprised the first night. Taylor.

3. A stop.

The stop and arrest of the air sheweth, that the air hath little appetite of ascending. Bacon.

ARRE'ST. n. s. [In horsemanship.] A mangey humour between the ham and pastern of the hinder legs of a horse. Dict.

To ARRE'ST. v. a. [arrester, Fr. to stop.]

1. To seize by a mandate from a court or officer of justice. See ARREST.

Good tidings, my Lord Hastings, for the which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason. Shaksp.

There's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all. Shaksp.

2. To seize any thing by law.

He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Master Brook; his horses are arrested for it. Shaksp.

3. To seize; to lay hands on; to detain by power.

But when as Morpheus had with leaden mace
Arrested all that goodly company.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 44.

Age itself, which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied, shall begin to arrest, seize, and remind us of our mortality. South.

4. To with-hold; to hinder.

This defect of the English justice was the main impediment that did arrest and stop the course of the conquest. Davies.

As often as my dogs with better speed
Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed. Dryden.

Nor could her virtues, nor repeated vows,
Of thousand lovers, the relentless hand
Of death arrest. Philips.

5. To stop motion.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance. Boyle.

6. To obstruct; to stop.

Ascribing the causes of things to secret proprieties, hath arrested and laid asleep all true enquiry.
Bacon.

To ARRE'T.* v. a. [old Fr. arrester, arreter; low Lat. arretare.] Obsolete; but frequent in Spenser. To assign; to allot; to decree.

The charge which God doth unto me arret,
Of his deare safety, I to thee commend.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 8.

But, after that, the judges did arret her
Unto the second best that lov'd her better.
Ib. F. Q. iv. v. 21.

ARRE'T.* n. s. [from the verb.] A decree.

ARRE'TTED.† adj. [arretatus, low Lat.] One that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is used sometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arretted to one under age. Cowel. See To ARRET.

To ARRI'DE.† v. a. [arrideo, Lat.]

1. To laugh at.
2. To smile; to look pleasantly upon one.
3. To please well; to content with delight; which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. This is the definition in our old dictionaries, and it agrees with the usage of it by Ben Jonson; who, however, ridicules the word with much humour. I add an example from Wither, the contemporary of Jonson, to shew that the word was certainly used in a serious sense, which some have doubted.

A pretty air; in general, I like it well: but in particular, your long die-note did arride me most.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

F. 'Fore heavens, his humour arrides me exceedingly.

C. Arrides you?

F. Ay, pleases me, (a pox on't,) I am so haunted at the court, and at my lodging with your refined choice spirits, that it makes me clean of another garb, another sheaf, I know not how! I cannot frame me to your harsh vulgar phrase, 'tis against my genius!

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

I have had more care to suite the capacitie of the vulgar, than to observe those criticismes which arride the learned.
Wither, Transl. of the Psalms, 1632, Pref. p. 1.

A'RRIERE. n. s. [French.] The last body of an army, for which we now use rear.

The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without shuffling with the battail or arriere. Hayward.

*

A'RRIERE BAN.† n. s. [Casseneuve derives this word from arriere and ban: Ban denotes the convening of the noblesse or vassals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, those who only hold of the king mediately. It is also written band.] A general proclamation, by which the King of France summons to the war all that hold of him, both his own vassals or the noblesse, and the vassals of his vassals.

This sea being of too limited a surface to yield competent supply to so vast a region labouring universally under this calamity, nature seems distressed and reduced to her last shifts; and, when her common methods fail, summons (as it were) her arriere band to prevent, for ought we know, some sort of dissolution.

Sir H. Sheere, Disc. of the Medit. Sea, p. 26.

Thus vice the standard rear'd; her arriere ban
Corruption call'd, and loud she gave the word.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, ii. 30.

A'RRIERE FEE, or FIEF. Is a fee dependant on a superiour one. These fees commenced, when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, distributed to their officers parts of the domains, and permitted those officers to gratify the soldiers under them, in the same manner.

A'RRIERE VASSAL. The vassal of a vassal. Trevoux.

ARRI'SION. n. s. [arrisio, Lat.] A smiling upon. Dict.

ARRI'VAL. n. s. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpose.

How are we changed, since we first saw the queen?
She, like the sun does still the same appear,
Bright as she was at her arrival here. Waller.

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulysses upon his own island. Broome, View of Epick Poetry.

ARRI'VANCE. n. s. [from arrive.] Company coming: not in use.

Every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakspeare.

To ARRI'VE.† v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on shore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile,
Wearied with length of ways and worn with toil,
She laid her down. Dryden.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a little inn, to rest ourselves and our horses. Sidney.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress. Locke.

4. To gain any thing, by progressive approach.

It is the highest wisdom by despising the world to arrive at heaven; they are blessed who converse with God. Taylor.

The virtuous may know in speculation, what they could never arrive at by practice, and avoid the snares of the crafty. Addison.

5. The thing at which we arrive is always supposed to be good.

6. To happen; with to before the person or thing. This sense seems not proper, Dr. Johnson says: but our best authors use it.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives,
More to be valued than a thousand lives. Waller.

In the age of that poet, [Æschylus,] the Greek language was arrived to its full perfection.

Dryden, Pref. to Troil. and Cressida.

Whether he that hath these notions of repentance, is ever like to arrive to the truth of repentance, He alone knows, who knows whether He will give such an one another heart or no.

South, Serm. vii. 126.

To ARRI'VE.* v. a. To reach.

Ere we could arrive the point propos'd.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Ere he arrive
The happy isle. Milton, P. L. ii. 408.

Lest a worse woe arrive him.

Milton, Treat. of Civil Power.

To ARRO'DE. v. a. [arrodo. Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.

A'RROGANCE. } n. s. [arrogantia, Lat.] The A'RROGANCY. } act or quality of taking much upon one's self; that species of pride which consists in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me; be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shaksp.

Pride hath no other glass
To shew itself but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Shakspeare.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Discoursing of matter dubious, and on any controvertible truths we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Humility it expresses by the stooping and bending of the head: arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we say, tossed up. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A'RROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty: proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the signiory therein, must be vain and arrogant.

Spenser on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and states, is natural to popular governments.

Temple.

A'RROGANTLY.† adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Not enterprising to run afore, and so, by their rashness, become the greatest hinderers of such things, as they more arrogantly than godly would seem (by their own private authority) most hotly to set forward. K. Edw. VI. Injunctions, Sp. p. 16.

Our poet may
Himself admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, because he pleases you.

Dryden.

Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of prowess
Inherent, arrogantly thus presum'd;
What if this sword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave sheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.

A'RROGANTNESS. n. s. [from arrogant.] The same with arrogance; which see. Dict.

To A'RROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjust claims, only prompted by pride.

I intend to describe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Hayward.

The popes arrogated unto themselves, that the empire was held of them in homage.

Sir Walter Ralegh.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton.

Rome never arrogated to herself any infallibility, but what she pretended to be founded upon Christ's promise. Tillotson.

ARROGA'TION.† n. s. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjust manner. Dict.

Where selfness is extinguished, all manner of arrogation must of necessity be extinct.

More's Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 372.

A'RROGATIVE.* adj. [from arrogate.] Claiming in an unjust manner.

Mortification, not of the body, (for that is sufficiently insisted upon,) but of the more spiritual arrogative life of the soul, that subtil ascribing that to ourselves that is God's, for all is God's.

More's Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 371.

ARRO'SION. n. s. [from arrosus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'RROW. n. s. [apepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is shot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand, but in poetry they are confounded.

I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head. Shaks.

Here were boys so desperately resolved, as to pull arrows out of their flesh, and deliver them to be shot again by the archers on their side.

Hayward.

A'RROWHEAD. n. s. [from arrow and head.] A water plant, so called from the resemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'RROWY.† adj. [from arrow.]

1. Consisting of arrows.

He saw them in their forms of battle rang'd,
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them shot
Sharp sleet of arrowy show'r against the face
Of their pursuers, and o'ercame by flight. Milton.

2. Formed like an arrow.

The lambent homage of his arrowy tongue.

Cowper, Task, b. 6.

ARSE. n. s. [eapre, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phrase signifying to be tardy, sluggish, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one spur,
As wisely knowing, could he stir
To active trot one side of 's horse,
The other would not hang an arse. Hudibras.

ARSE-FOOT. n. s. A kind of water fowl, called also a didapper. Dict.

A'RSENAL.† n. s. [arsenale, Ital. arcinael, Teut. from the Lat. arx, arcis, a citadel. Arsenal is placed among the hard words, which are explained in Sylvester's Du Bartas, ed. 1621, p. 654.] A repository of things requisite to war; a magazine of military stores.

I would have a room for the old Roman instruments of war, where you might see all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arsenal of old Rome. Addison.

ARSE'NICAL. adj. [from arsenick.] Containing arsenick; consisting of arsenick.

An hereditary consumption, or one engendered by arsenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey.

There are arsenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward.

A'RSENICK.† n. s. [ἀρσένικον.] A volatile and highly inflammable metal, of a bluish white colour, remarkably brittle, and softer than any other metal. It is called white arsenick, when in the state of oxide; and is, in all its combinations, highly poisonous.

Arsenick is a very deadly poison; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little.

Woodward on Fossils.

A'RSMART.† n. s. [persicaria, Lat.] An herb.

It is said that if a handful of arsmart be put under the saddle, upon a tired horse's back, it will make him travaile fresh and lustily!

Coles, Art of Simpling, p. 68.

A'RSON.* n. s. [old Fr. arson, a burning, from arser.] The law expression for the crime of house-burning.

ART.† n. s. [arte, Fr. art, Su. Goth. ars, Lat. "Ars vel art olim significabat virtutem, fortitudinem, et Suedis vel hodiè art notat virtutem." Loescheri Lit. Celt. p. 77.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Ibid.

2. A science; as, the liberal arts.

Arts that respect the mind were ever reputed nobler than those that serve the body. B. Jonson.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

3. A trade.

This observation is afforded us by the art of making sugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulness; skill; dexterity.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakspeare.

5. Cunning.

More matter with less art. Shakspeare.

Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shaks.

ART, or AIRT.* n. s. [Gael. and Ir. aird, a cardinal point. Dr. Jamieson.] Quarter: as, 't wind's in an ill airt; a phrase in part of Yorkshire. Craven, Gloss.

ARTE'RIAL.† adj. [from artery, and Fr. arterial.] That relates to the artery; that is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road.
Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle passeth through the arterial tube, it is pressed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward against the sides of the tube, and the elastick force of the air, pressing it on the opposite sides of those air-bladders; along the surface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. s. [Gr. αρληρία and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in use among the French.

A'RTERY. n. s. [arteria, Lat. from the Gr.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is composed of three coats; of which the first seems to be a thread of fine blood vessels and nerves, for nourishing the coats of the artery; the second is made up of circular, or rather spiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer strata, according to the bigness of the artery. These fibres have a strong elasticity, by which they contract themselves with some force, when the power by which they have been stretched out ceases. The third and inmost coat is a fine transparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwise, upon the dilatation of an artery, would easily separate the spiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow smaller, these coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins seem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elastick tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy, but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryd.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; skilful; dexterous.

O still the same, Ulysses, she rejoin'd,
In useful craft successfully refin'd,
Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skilfully; dexterously.

The rest in rank: Honoria chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to set her face,
To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryd.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irresistibly must it prevail, when the seeds of it are artfully sown, and industriously cultivated? Rogers.

A'RTFULNESS. n. s. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Consider with how much artfulness his bulk and situation is contrived, to have just matter to draw round him these massy bodies. Cheyne.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRI'TICK.† } adj. [from arthritis, and ARTHRI'TICAL. } Fr. arthritique.]

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

I have forgotten whether I told you in my last a pretty late experiment in arthritical pains.
Sir H. Wotton's Rem. p. 455.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diseases. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though some want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and by the motion of fibrous and musculous parts, are able to make progression. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ARTHRITIS. n. s. [ἄρθρῖτις, from ἄρθρον, a joint.] Any distemper that affects the joints, but the gout particularly. Quincy.

A'RTICHOKE.† n. s. [artichault, Fr. artiskok, Dan. artischocha, Su. Goth. In Lombardy an artichoke is also articiocco; and ciocca is a tuft or lock of hairs, which the choke certainly resembles.]

This plant is very like the thistle, but hath large scaly heads shaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each scale, as also at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleshy eatable substance. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the stalk, another to the fruit or seed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, stimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'RTICHOKE of Jerusalem.† A species of sun flower, yielding bulbous, esculent roots, of a flavour not unlike to sweet potatoes.

A'RTICK. adj. [It should be written arctick, from ἄρκτικος.] Northern; under the bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like those beyond the artick circle; for the sun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example, it is, contrary to custom, spelt after the French manner, and accented on the last syllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,
As map informs, of fifty-three,
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty one,
Methinks all climes should be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique.
Dryden, Epist. 7.

A'RTICLE. n. s. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as, the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order, are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not so. Hooker

Have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve to shew in articles. Shaks.

Many believe the article of remission of sins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwise than God intended it. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

All the precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us; and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the gospel which we professed to believe; that we made confession of the Christian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotson.

You have small reason to repine upon that article of life. Swift

3. Terms; stipulations.

I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakspeare.

It would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article,
Tying him to aught. Shakspeare.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansfield had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk charge, by which other troops were ready, the king himself had been in danger. Clarendon.

To A'RTICLE.† v. n. [from the noun article.]

1 To stipulate; to make terms.

Such in love's warfare is my case,
I may not article for grace,
Having put love at last to shew his face. Donne.

He had not infringed the least tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Howell, Voc. For.

If it be said, God chose the successor, that is manifestly not so in the story of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

2. To draw up articles.

They detected them to the archbishop, by articling against them for their doctrine.
Strype's Life of Abp. Cranmer, B. i. ch. 23.

To A'RTICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whose life seems fair, yet if all his errours and follies were articled against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living

ARTI'CULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. In medicine, an epithet applied to a disease, which more immediately infests the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

ARTI'CULARLY.* adv. [from articular.] Sounding every syllable, and staying at every point, i. e. stop. Huloet.

ARTI'CULATE.† adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; divided, as the parts of a limb are divided by joints; not continued in one tone, as, articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admit no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon.

The first, at least, of these I thought deny'd
To beasts; whom God, on their creation day,
Created mute to all articulate sound. Milton.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers on either hand. On the left, they accounted their digits and articulate numbers unto an hundred; on the right hand, hundreds and thousands. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in use.

Henry's instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquisition than negotiation: requiring an answer in distinct articles to his questions. Bacon.

3. Belonging to the joints.

The causes internal of these articulate pains move upon one hinge of Hippocrates, which he calleth humors. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, p. 75.

To ARTI'CULATE.† v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to utter distinct syllables; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices. Glanville.

Parisian academists, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muscles of the tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like those of man. Ray on the Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakspeare.

3. To make terms; to treat. These two latter significations are unusual.

Send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good and ours. Shakspeare.

4. To joint.

If we consider, on the part of the bones, first, the scapula, and take notice that it is seated on the strong part of the back;—that it is articulated to the humerus per arthrodiam. Smith, Port. of Old Age, p. 59.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. n. To speak distinctly.

ARTI'CULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The secret purpose of our heart, no less articulately spoken to God, who needs not our words to discern our meaning. Decay of Piety.

ARTI'CULATENESS. n. s. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULA'TION. n. s. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture or joint of bones.

ARTIFI'CIAL.† adj. [artificiel, Fr.]

1. Made by art; not natural.

Basilius used the artificial day of torches to lighten the sports their inventions could contrive. Sidney.

The curtains closely drawn the light to skreen,
As if he had contriv'd to lie unseen;
Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his office. Dryden.

There is no natural motion perpetual; yet it doth not hinder but that it is possible to contrive such an artificial revolution. Wilkins.

2. Fictitious; not genuine.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,
And cry, Content, to that which grieves my heart,
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears. Shaks.

The resolution which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been supported by an obsequious party, and then with usual methods confirmed by an artificial majority. Swift.

3. Artful; contrived with skill.

These seem to be the more artificial, as those of a single person the more natural governments. Temple.

4. Skilled in stratagem; cunning. This definition is found in our old dictionaries, and is supported by good authority.

The great trust his majesty reposed in him, infinitely above and contrary to his desire, was in itself liable to envy; and how insupportable that envy must be, upon this new relation, he could not but foresee; together with the jealousies, which artificial men would be able to insinuate into his majesty. Continuation of Clarendon's Life, ii. 72.

ARTIFI'CIAL Arguments. [In rhetorick.] Are proofs on considerations which arise from the genius, industry, or invention of the orator; which are thus called, to distinguish them from laws, authorities, citations, and the like, which are said to be inartificial arguments.

ARTIFI'CIAL Lines, on a sector or scale, are lines so contrived as to represent the logarithmick sines and tangents; which, by the help of the line of numbers, solve, with tolerable exactness, questions in trigonometry, navigation, &c. Chambers.

ARTIFI'CIAL Numbers, are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFI'CIAL.* n. s. The production of art.

There ought to be added to this work many and various indices, besides the alphabetical ones; as namely, one of all the artificials mentioned in the whole work. Sir W. Petty, Advice to S. Hartlib, p. 19.

*ARU'SPEX. n. s. [Lat.] A soothsayer.

Adorn'd with bridal pomp, she sits in state;
The publick notaries and aruspex wait.
Dryden, Juv. Sat. 10.

ARU'SPICE.* n. s. [Dr. Ash gives this substantive as denoting divination by inspecting the entrails of beasts, from the Lat. aruspicium. Others have applied it to the diviner, or person inspecting, from aruspex; and with greater propriety; aruspicy being the proper word for the action.]

The second sort of ministers mentioned by Cicero, were not priests, but augurs and aruspices, designed to be the interpreters of the mind of the gods. Bp. Story on the Priesthood, ch. 5.

They [the Romans] had colleges for augurs and aruspices, who used to make their predictions sometimes by fire, sometimes by flying of fowls, &c.
Howell's Letters, iii. 23.

ARU'SPICY.* n. s. [Lat. aruspicium or haruspicium. The act of prognosticating by inspecting the entrails of the sacrifice.]

A flam more senseless than the roguery
Of old aruspicy and augury. Butler, Hud. ii. 3.

*AS. n. s. [Lat.] The Roman pound, consisting of twelve equal parts or ounces.

Where twelve divide the as, and every one

As.† conjunct. [als, Teut. ase, Sax. Perhaps abbreviated from alȝ, ꝑa, all so.]

1. In the same manner with something else.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.
Shakspeare.

In singing, as in piping, you excell;
And scarce your master could perform so well.
Dryden.

I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did; but all these are to no purpose: the world will not live, think, or love as I do. Swift.

2. In the manner that.

Mad as I was, I could not bear his fate
With silent grief, but loudly blam'd the state.
Dryden, Æneid.

The landlord, in his shirt as he was, taking a candle in one hand, and a drawn sword in the other, ventured out of the room. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. That; in a consequential sense.

The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with stricken sails to yield to be governed by it. Sidney.

He had such a dexterous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness. Wotton.

The relations are so uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon.

God shall by grace prevent sin so soon, as to keep the soul in the virginity of its first innocence.
South.

4. In the state of another.

Madam, were I as you, I'd take her counsel;
I'd speak my own distress.
A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

5. Under a particular consideration; with a particular respect.

Besides that law which concerneth men as men, and that which belongs unto men as they are men, linked with others in some society; there is a third which touches all several bodies politick, so far forth as one of them hath publick concerns with another. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?—
——— Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The objections that are raised against it as a tragedy, are as follow.
Gay, Pref. to What d'ye call it?

6. Like; of the same kind with.

A simple idea is one uniform idea, as sweet, bitter. Watts.

7. In the same degree with.

Where you, unless you are as matter blind,
Conduct and beauteous disposition find. Blackmore.

Well hast thou spoke, the blue-eyed maid replies,
Thou good old man, benevolent as wise.
Pope, Odyssey.

8. As if; according to the manner that would be if.

The squire began nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall.
Spenser, F. Q.

They all contended to creep into his humour, and to do that, as of themselves, which they conceived he desired they should do. Hayward.

Contented in a nest of snow
He lies, as he his bliss did know,
And to the wood no more would go. Waller.

So hot th' assault, so high the tumult rose,
As all the Dardan and Argolick race
Had been contracted in that narrow space. Dryd.

Can misery no place of safety know,
The noise pursues me wheresoe'er I go,
As fate sought only me. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. 1 Cor.

Their figure being printed,
As just before, I think, I hinted,
Alma inform'd can try the case. Prior.

The republick is shut up in the great duke's dominions, who at present is very much incensed against it. The occasion is as follows.
Addison on Italy.

10. As it were; in some sort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;
Infected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue.
Dryden.

These haughty words Alecto's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as she spoke. Dryd.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines.
Addison, Cato.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound; then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did so assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. Because it is; because they are.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sibyl's word as many times rebound. Dryden.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good that human nature should exist; so certain it is that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God.
Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.
Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage? Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Spectator.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou, to whom the muse commends,
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison, Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. As FOR; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As IF; in the same manner that it would be if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. As TO; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakspeare, Othello.

They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards Christianity. Addison on Italy.

I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Swift.

29. As WELL AS; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face, that distinguishes him from all others. Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient. Addison on Italy.

30. As THOUGH; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation. Sharp's Surgery.

A'SADULCIS. See BENZOIN.

A'SAFŒTIDA.† } n. s. A gum or resin
A'SSAFŒTIDA. } brought from the East Indies, of a sharp taste, and a strong offensive smell; which is said to distil, during the heat of summer, from a little shrub. Chambers.

Nigh Whormoot are Duzgun, Laztan-de, and other towns, where is got the best assafœtida through all the orient: The tree exceeds not our briar in height; but the leaves resemble rose-leaves, the root the radish: though the savour be so offensive to most, the sapor is so good, that no meat, no sauce, no vessel pleases some of the Guzurats' palates save what relishes of it.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 118.

ASARABA'CCA. n. s. [asarum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

ASBE'STINE.† adj. [from asbestos.] Something incombustible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis asbestos.

A good man, like an asbestine garment, as well as a tobacco-pipe when foul, is cleansed by burning. Felton's Resolves, ii. 57.

ASBE'STOS. n. s. [ἄσβεστος.] A sort of native fossile stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet somewhat tractable, silky, and of a greyish colour. It is almost insipid to the taste, indissoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconsumed in the fire. But in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth made of this stone was found to lose a dram of its weight each time. This stone is found in Anglesey in Wales, and in Aberdeenshire in Scotland. Chambers.

ASCA'RIDES. n. s. [ἀσκαρίδες, from ἀσκαρίζω, to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, so called from their continual troublesome motion, causing an intolerable itching. Quincey.

To ASCE'ND. v. n. [ascendo, Lat.]

1. To move upwards; to mount; to rise.

Then to the heav'n of heav'ns shall he ascend
With victory, triumphing through the air
Over his foes and thine. Milton.

2. To proceed from one degree of good to another.

By these steps we shall ascend to more just ideas of the glory of Jesus Christ, who is intimately united to God, and is one with him.

Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

3. To stand higher in genealogy.

The only incest was in the ascending, not collateral branch; as when parents and children married, this was accounted incest.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To ASCEND.† v. a. To climb up any thing.

Vespasian triumphantly did ascend the imperial throne. Barrow's Works, i. 343.

They ascend the mountains, they descend the vallies. Delany's Revelation examined.

ASCEN'DABLE. adj. [from ascend.] That may be ascended. Dict.

ASCE'NDANT.† n. s. [from ascend.]

1. The part of the ecliptick at any particular time above the horizon, which is supposed by astrologers to have great influence.

2. Height; elevation.

He was initiated, in order to gain instruction in sciences that were there in their highest ascendant. Temple.

3. Superiority; influence.

By the ascendant he had in his understanding, and the dexterity of his nature, he could persuade him very much. Clarendon.

Some star I find,
Has giv'n thee an ascendant o'er my mind.
Dryden, Juv. Sat. x.

When they have got an ascendant over them, they should use it with moderation, and not make themselves scarecrows. Locke.

4. The person having influence or superiority.

There is not a single particular in the Francis-street declamations, which has not, to your and to my certain knowledge, been taught by the jealous ascendants, sometimes by doctrine, sometimes by example, always by provocation.

Burke's 2d Letter to Sir H. Langrishe.

5. One of the degrees of kindred reckoned upwards.

The most nefarious kind of bastards, are incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants in infinitum; and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition. Ayliffe, Parergon.

ASCE'NDANT.† adj. Written formerly ascendent, which should seem to be right from Dr. Johnson's remark on DESCENDENT.

1. Superiour; predominant; overpowering.

Christ outdoes Moses before he displaces him; and shews an ascendant spirit above him. South.

Thus I pass from the descendent to the ascendent duty. Sir M. Sandy's Essays, p. 150.

2. In an astrological sense, above the horizon.

Let him study the constellation of Pegasus, which is about that time ascendant. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ASCE'NDENCY.† n. s. [from ascend.] Influence; power.

Custom has some ascendency over understanding, and what at one time seemed decent, appears disagreeable afterwards. Watts.

Instead of prating about Protestant ascendancies, Protestant parliaments ought, in my opinion, to think at last of becoming patriot parliaments.

Burke, Letter to R. Burke, Esq.

ASCE'NSION. n. s. [ascensio, Lat.]

1. The act of ascending or rising; frequently applied to the visible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.

Then rising from his grave,
Spoil'd principalities, and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open shew; and with ascension bright,
Captivity led captive through the air. Milton, P. L.

2. The thing rising or mounting.

Men err in the theory of inebriation, conceiving the brain doth only suffer from vaporous ascensions from the stomach. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ASCE'NSION, in astronomy, is either right or oblique. Right ascension of the sun, or a star, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which rises with the sun or star in a right sphere. Oblique ascension is an arch of the equator intercepted between the first point of Aries, and that point of the equator which rises together with a star in an oblique sphere.

ASCE'NSION DAY. The day on which the Ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thursday; the Thursday but one before Whitsuntide.

ASCE'NSIONAL Difference, is the difference between the right and oblique ascension of the same point to the surface of the sphere. Chambers.

ASCE'NSIVE. adj. [from ascend.] In a state of ascent: not in use.

The cold augments when the days begin to encrease, though the sun be then ascensive, and returning from the winter tropick. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ASCE'NT. n. s. [ascensus, Lat.]

1. Rise; the act of rising; the act of mounting.

To him with swift ascent he up return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd
In glory, as of old. Milton.

2. The way by which one ascends.

The temple, and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous. Bacon.

It was a rock
Conspicuous far; winding with one ascent Accessible from earth, one entrance high. Milton.

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy erects the sight,
By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height. Addison.

A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elysian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents. Bentley.

To ASCERTA'IN. † v. a. [acertener, Fr.] Accented by Spenser on the second syllable, in which he follows Chaucer.

1. To make certain; to fix; to establish.

The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker.

Of a small time, which none ascértaine may. Spenser, Daphnaida, v. 504.

Money differs from uncoined silver in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp. Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt: often with of.

Right judgment of myself, may give me the other certainty, that is, ascertain me that I am in the number of God's children. Hammond, Practical Catechism.

This makes us act with a repose of mind and wonderful tranquillity, because it ascertains us of the goodness of our work. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

ASCERTA'INABLE.* adj. [from ascertain.] That may be ascertained.

ASCERTA'INER. n. s. [from ascertain.] The person that proves or establishes.

ASCERTA'INMENT. n. s. [from ascertain.] A settled rule; an established standard.

For want of ascertainment, how far a writer may express his good wishes for his country, innocent intentions may be charged with crimes. Swift to Lord Middleton.

ASCE'TICISM.* n. s. [from ascetick.] The ate of an ascetick.

Such societies we have seen, whose religious doctrines are so little serviceable to civil society, that they can prosper only on the ruin and destruction of it. Such are those which preach up the sanctity of celibacy; asceticism; the sinfulness of defensive war, capital punishments, and even civil magistracy itself.

Warburton, Alliance Ch. and St. (1st ed.) p. 57.

ASCE'TICK. adj. [ἀσκητικὸς.] Employed wholly in exercises of devotion and mortification.

None lived such healthful and long lives as monks and hermits, who had sequestered themselves from the pleasures and plenties of the world to a constant ascetick course of the severest abstinence and devotion. South, Serm. ii. 31.

ASCE'TICK. n. s. One that retires to devotion and mortification; a hermit.

I am far from commending those asceticks, that, out of a pretence of keeping themselves unspotted from the world, take up their quarters in desarts. Norris.

He that preaches to man, should understand what is in man; and that skill can scarce be attained by an ascetick in his solitudes. Atterbury.

A'SCII. n. s. It has no singular. [from α, without, and σκιὰ, a shadow.] Those people who, at certain times of the year, have no shadow at noon; such are the inhabitants of the torrid zone, because they have the sun twice a year vertical to them. Dict.

ASCI'TES. n. s. [from ἄσκος, a bladder.] A particular species of dropsy; a swelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravasation and collection of water broke out of its proper vessels. This case, when certain and inveterate, is universally allowed to admit of no cure but by means of the manual operation of tapping. Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropsy, the anasarca, called also leucophlegmacy, when the extravasated matter swims in the cells of the membrana adiposa; and the ascites, when the water possesses the cavity of the abdomen. Sharp, Surgery.

ASCI'TICAL. } adj. [from ascites.] Belong-
ASCI'TICK. } ing to an ascites; dropsical; hydropical.

When it is part of another tumour, it is hydropical, either anasarcous or ascitical. Wiseman, Surgery.

ASCITI'TIOUS. adj. [ascititius, Lat.] Supplemental; additional; not inherent; not original.

Homer has been reckoned an ascititious name, from some accident of his life. Pope.

ASCRI'BABLE. adj. [from ascribe.] That may be ascribed.

The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a mistaken persuasion, that those phænomena are the effects of nature's abhorrency of a vacuum, which seem to be more fitly ascribable to the weight and spring of the air. Boyle.

To ASCRI'BE. † v. a. [ascribo, Lat.]

1. To attribute to as a cause. Dryden is Dr. Johnson's earliest authority for this word. Before Dryden's time it was written adscribe; as in the following example.

He which shall affirm such a one is a true Christian, a true gentleman, &c. is conceived to dscribe trueness of being unto all these. Bp. Hall's Works, 1661, vol. ii. p. 434.

The cause of his banishment is unknown, because he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by ascribing it to any other reason than what was pretended. Dryden.

To this we may justly ascribe those jealousies, and encroachments, which render mankind uneasy to one another. Rogers.

2. To attribute as a quality to persons, or accident to substance.

These perfections must be somewhere, and therefore may much better be ascribed to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else. Tillotson.

ASCRI'PTION. † n. s. [ascriptio, Lat.] The act of ascribing.

By this description his [Anaxagoras's] mens must needs be God. Yea, and so is it likewise by his ascription too. For he ascribeth unto this mens the very making of the world. Fotherby, Atheomastix, p. 231.

Though the heathen templed and adored this drunken god, [Bacchus,] yet one would take their ascriptions to him to be matter of dishonour and mocks; as, his troop of mad women; his chariot drawn with the lynx and tiger. Feltham, Resolves, 84.

Although a woman, praised for her complexion, be bound in modesty to gainsay those praises; yet if the fire have given her a good colour, it is not thought pride to refrain contradicting, because the effect being natural to the fire, and requiring no excellent predispositions in the object, to refer those ascriptions to their cause, is held to justify the not rejecting them. Boyle, against Custom. Swearing, p. 78.

ASCRIPTI'TIOUS. † adj. [ascriptitius, Lat.] That is ascribed. Dict.

An ascriptitious and supernumerary god. Farindon, Serm. p. 82.

ASH. † n. s. [fraxinus, Lat. æsc, Saxon, ask, Su. Goth.]

1. A tree.

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamina. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue. Miller.

The mountain-ash, so called, is a nursery tree or shrub, with pennated leaves, yielding clustered red berries.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,
And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain. Dryden.

2. The wood of the ash.

Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

To ASHA'ME.* v. a. [See To SHAME.] To make ashamed, which Mr. Boucher considers as a Scottish verb, though he admits that, "to shame a man" is not thought bad English. Indeed it is used by one of our best writers, and is found in one of our oldest dictionaries, (though Dr. Johnson has noticed neither circumstance,) meaning "to defame one to his utter reproach," i.e. to make him ashamed. Huloet.

It should humble, ashame, and grieve us. Barrow's Works, iii. 417.

ASHA'MED. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with of before the cause of shame if a noun, and to if a verb.

Profess publickly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. Taylor, Holy Living.

One wou'd have thought she would have stirr'd; but strove
With modesty, and was asham'd to move. Dryden.

This I have shadowed, that you may not be ashamed of that hero, whose protection you undertake. Dryden.

ASHA'MEDLY.* adv. [from ashamed.] Bashfully. Huloet.

ASH-COLOURED. adj. [from ash and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash-coloured, was part of a stratum which lay above the strata of stone. Woodward on Fossils.

ASHE'LF.* adv. [On a shelf, or rock. See SHELF.] A naval expression, though unnoticed by any person, as far as my observation has extended; yet a word not to be dismissed from the language of a naval people.

Why have you done that which I dare not speak,
And in the action chang'd the humble shape
Of my obedience to rebellious rage
And insolent pride; and with shut eyes constrain'd me
To run my bark of honour on a shelf,
I must not see, nor, if I saw it, shun it? Massinger, Unnatural Combat.

I will declare and make plaine unto you by a familiar similitude, that we jut not any more and run ashelf on such idolatry and very manifest sorcery. Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. p. 231.

A'SHEN. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash wood.

At once he said, and threw
His ashen spear; which quiver'd as it flew. Dryd.

A'SHFIRE.* n. s. [from ash and fire.] The subdued or low fire used in chymical operations.

A'SHFLY.* n. s. [from ash and fly.] The ash-fly is called by some, the oak-fly. The head is of an ash-colour: it is seen on the body of ash-trees, oaks, willows, and thorns, growing near the water, in March, April, May, and June, with its head downwards. Complete Angler.

A'SHES.† n. s. [Goth. atzgo, azgo, dust, Sax. ærca, Dutch asche, Germ. asche, Su. Goth. aska. "Franci utebantur vocabulo ascha." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 78.] Dr. Johnson says, the word wants the singular. But it is common in the singular, in the North of England; and we say, in colloquial language, "burnt to an ash." So likewise in the compound ash-tub, and in others (like it) forgotten or little used, as ash-hole.

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relicks would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies. Digby on Bodies.

This late dissension, grown between the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt. Mortimer, Husb.

2. The remains of the body; often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
Shakspeare.

To great Laërtes I bequeath
A task of grief, his ornaments of death;
Lest, when the fates his royal ashes claim,
The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name.
Pope.

A'SHLAR.† n. s. [Sax. arlazen, abscissus. The word is estler in the Scotch phrase, applied to stone; which is interpreted by Dr. Jamieson hewin, by whom, however, no etymology is offered, as none has been by Dr. Johnson.] Free stones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thicknesses.

A'SHLERING. n. s. [with builders.] Quartering in garrets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the under side of the rafters. Builder's Dict.

ASHO'RE. adv. [from a and shore.]

1. On shore; on the land.

The poor Englishman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither ashore, would have been undone. Ralegh.

2. To the shore; to the land.

We may as bootless spend our vain command,
As send our precepts to the leviathan
To come ashore. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

May thy billows rowl ashore
The beryl, and the golden ore. Milton, Comus.

Moor'd in a Chian creek, ashore I went,
And all the following night in Chios spent.
Addison, Ovid.

A'SHTUB.* n. s. [from ash and tub.] A tub to receive ashes.

Or though thou choose an ash-tub for thy bed.
Quarles, Feast for Worms, p. 40.

ASHWE'DNESDAY. n. s. The first day of Lent, so called from the ancient custom of sprinkling ashes on the head.

A'SHWEED. n. s. [from ash and weed.] An herb.

A'SHY.† adj. [from ash.]

1. Ash-coloured; pale; inclining to a whitish grey.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless.
Shakspeare.

2. Turned into ashes.

That self-begotten bird
In the Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay ere while a holocaust,
From out her ashy womb now teem'd,
Revives, reflourishes, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton, S. A. v. 1703.

A'SHY-PALE.* adj. Pale as ashes.

Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame and anger, ashy-pale!
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

A'SIAN.* adj. Relating to Asia.

Their lordships may object
Our not denying the same late request
Unto the Asian cities. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Ignatius, taking his last leave of the Asian churches, as he went to martyrdom, exhorted them to adhere close to the written doctrine of the apostles. Milton of Reform. in Eng. b. 1.

ASIA'TICK.* adj. Respecting Asia.

Queen Berenice, and her train of women, among whom, no doubt, all the Roman and Asiatick fashion of improved beauty did appear.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 82.

When peace, ease, and plenty took away these whetstones of courage and emulation, they insensibly slid into the Asiatick softness, and were intent upon nothing but their cooks, and their ragouts, their fine attendants, and unusual habits.
South, Serm. iv. 73.

ASIA'TICK.* n. s. A native or inhabitant of Asia.

Such are the fanatick dogmata of the Alcoran, credited by most Asiaticks.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 330.

ASIA'TICISM.* n. s. Imitation of the Asiatick manner or custom.

Nor is this fantastick imagery the only mark of asiaticism, which appears in the Runick odes.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

ASI'DE. adv. [from a and side.]

1. To one side; out of the perpendicular direction.

The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast;
The flames were blown aside, yet shone they bright,
Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light.
Dryden.

2. To another part; out of the true direction.

He had no brother; which though it be a comfortable thing for kings to have, yet it draweth the subjects eyes a little aside. Bacon.

3. From the company; as, to speak aside.

He took him aside from the multitude.
Mark, vii. 33.

A'SINARY. adj. [asinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an ass. Dict.

A'SININE.† adj. [Fr. asinin, from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.

You shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to hale and drag our choicest and hopefullest wits to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles. Milton on Education.

This one act
Of his, to let his wife out to be courted,
And at a price, proclaims his asinine nature
So loud, as I am weary of my title to him.
B. Jonson, Devil's an Ass, i. 6.

They petitioned his majesty, in most lowly manner, to commiserate their asinine miseries, if not to conclude and end them.
Trans. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 212.

To ASK.† v. a. [ærcian, Saxon, aska, Su. Goth. "Ask majoribus nostris notabat petere, magni facere, et desiderare, tendere ad aliquid. Suedis hodierum æskia notat rem preciosam poscere. Hinc est Germanicum vetus aischen." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 78.]

1. To petition; to beg: sometimes with an accusative only; sometimes with for.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare.

We have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet will ask,
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Shakspeare.

My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more, but ask pardon for thy former sins. Ecclus. xxi. 1.

If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone?
Matt. vii. 9.

In long journies, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift.

2. To demand; to claim: as, to ask a price for goods.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife. Genesis, xxxiv. 12.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden, Æneid.

3. To question.

O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way and espy, ask him that flieth, and her that escapeth, and say, what is done? Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He said, wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.
Genesis, xxxii. 29.

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.
Jerem. vi. 16.

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv. 33.

5. To require, as physically necessary.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Jonson.

A lump of ore in the bottom of a mine will be stirred by two men's strength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will ask six men to stir it. Bacon.

The administration passes into different hands at the end of two months, which contributes to dispatch: but any exigence of state asks a much longer time to conduct any design to its maturity. Addis.

ASK, ASH, AS, do all come from the Sax. ærc, an ash tree. Gibson's Camden.

ASK.* n. s. See ASKER, a newt.

ASKA'NCE.† } adv. [Dutch, schuin. See
ASKA'UNCE. } SQUINT. Mr. Tooke considers it a participle, aschuined, aschuins; citing the Dutch verb schuinen, to cut awry, as well as the obvious derivation of squint. Our old dictionaries define askance to be asquint; and the best illustration of this word, which can be adduced, is Milton's usage of it, where he describes Satan turning aside from a view which he could not steadily behold.] Sideways; obliquely.

Zelmane, keeping a countenance askance, as she understood him not, told him, it became her evil. Sidney.

His wannish eyes upon them bent askance,
And when he saw their labours well succeed,
He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire mischance. Fairfax.

Some say, he bid his angels turn askance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,
From the sun's axle; they with labour push'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
Ey'd them askance, and to himself thus plain'd. Milton, P. L. iv. 502.

ASKA'UNT. adv. Obliquely; on one side.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king askaunt; and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden, Iliad, b. 1.

Since the space, that lies on either side
The solar orb, is without limits wide,
Grant that the sun had happen'd to prefer
A seat askaunt, but one diameter:
Lost to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had laid a frozen lonesome mass. Blackmore.

A'SKER. n. s. [from ask.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and, now again
On him that did not ask, but mock, bestow. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The greatness of the asker, and the smallness of the thing asked, had been sufficient to enforce his request. South.

2. Enquirer.

Every asker being satisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the same. Digby of Bodies.

A'SKER.† n. s. [Written and pronounced also ask, as well as asker, in our northern countries. Mr. Boucher considers the word of Celtick origin; Dr. Jamieson refers it to the Sax. aðex, Germ. eidex.] A land or water newt.

ASK'EW.† adv. [from a and skew, Dr. Johnson says; yet, in his dictionary, we seek in vain for skew; but he means skue. Goth. skå, partic. disjunct. skef, oblique. V. Serenius, Swed. Dict. Mr. Tooke refers to the Danish skiæv, crooked. Barret, in his old dictionary, defines the word, "to cast a wanton eye upon one; to look askew."]

1. Aside; with contempt, or envy.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd:
But when ye lowre, or look on me askew,
Then do I die. Spenser, Sonn. 7.

He looked ascue upon him, as one he envied or hated. Bp. Patrick on 1 Sam. xviii. 9.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,
Nor look askew at what it saith;
There's no petition in it.—— Prior.

2. Obliquely; out of the regular way.

All things are now discovered to proceed askue, the round world and all.
Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote, p. 39.

To ASLA'KE.† v. a. [Sax. arlæcian.] To remit; to mitigate; to slacken. Obsolete.

But this continual, cruel, civil war,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser.

Whilst seeking to aslake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kindlest much more great desire.
Spenser.

Liberty of speaking — is but a slender revenge for so great a wrong as ill government; yet such as, by giving vent to the boiling fumes of hatred, doth evaporate and aslake that heat, which otherwise would flame out into fire and mischief.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He fell; the shaft
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weazon's wound.
Dryden.

ASLE'EP.† adv. [On sleep. Sax. arlapen.

1. Sleeping; at rest.

How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee!
Shakspeare.

The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late asleep were lain:
All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,
No sound the rest of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To sleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep. Bacon, Ess.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton.

3. It is used figuratively for the dead.

The earth shall restore those that are asleep in her. 2 Esdras, vii. 32.

I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope.
1 Thess. iv. 13.

ASLO'PE.† adv. [from a and slope, Dr. Johnson says; but of slope, he tells us, no satisfactory original is found; though he thinks the original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run; slope being easy to the runner. It is rather to be referred, with the adverb before us, to the Sax. arlupan, to slide, to slip away.] With declivity; obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Set them not upright, but aslope, a reasonable depth under the ground. Bacon.

The curse aslope
Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn
My bread: what harm? Idleness had been worse:
My labour will sustain me. Milton.

The knight did stoop
And sate on further side aslope. Hudibras.

ASLU'G.* adv. [from a and slug.] In a heavy, sluggish manner. An unusual word.

[He] drags on muddy shore his boat,
That comes aslug against the stream.
Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 388.

ASO'MATOUS. adj. [from a priv. and σῶμα, a body.] Incorporeal, or without a body.

ASP. } n. s. [aspis, Lat.] A kind of A'SPICK. } serpent, whose poison kills without a possibility of applying any remedy. It is said to be very small, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Those that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and the manner of their dying being by sleep without any pain, Cleopatra chose it. Calmet.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of aspës sting herself did kill.
Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 50.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
And dipsas. Milton, P. L. x. 524.

ASP. n. s. A tree. See ASPEN.

ASPA'LATHUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A plant called the rose of Jerusalem, or our lady's rose.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, somewhat sharp and bitter to the taste. Aspalathus affords an oil of admirable scent, reputed one of the best perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a sweet smell like cinnamon and aspalathus, and I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh. Ecclus. xxiv.

ASPA'RAGUS.† n. s. [Gr. ἀσπάραγος, Lat. asparagus, Fr. asparage. Formerly called sparage, and now corruptly sparagrass.] The name of a plant. It has a rosaceous flower of six leaves, placed orbicularly, out of whose center rises the pointal, which turns to a soft globular berry, full of hard seeds. Miller.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been suspected by some physicians, as not friendly to the kidneys; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality; but then they are not so agreeable.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'SPECT. n. s. [aspectus, Lat. It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, which is now placed on the first.]

1. Look; air; appearance.

I have presented the tongue under a double aspect, such as may justify the definition, that it is the best and worst part.
Government of the Tongue.

They are in my judgement, the image or picture of a great ruin, and have the true aspect of a world lying in its rubbish. Burnet's Theory.

2. Countenance; look.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aspect of terrour. All's not well. Shaks.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.

Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the cast ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

3. Glance; view; act of beholding.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser.

When an envious or an amourous aspect doth infect the spirits of another, there is joined both affection and imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Direction towards any point; view; position.

The setting sun
Slowly descended; and with right aspect
Against the eastern gate of paradise,

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick. Swift.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else; relation.

The light got from the opposite arguings of men of parts, shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.

There's some ill planet reigns,
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.
Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

To the blank moon
Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite.
Milton, P. L.

Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation? Bentley, Serm.

To ASPE'CT. v. a. [aspicio. Lat.] To behold; not used.

Happy in their mistake, those people whom
The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death
(The greatest of all human fears, ne'er moves.
Temple.

ASPE'CTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight.

He was the sole cause of this aspectable, and perceivable universal. Ralegh.

To this use of informing us what is in this aspectable world, we shall find the eye well fitted.
Ray on the Creation.

A'SPECTED.* adj. [from aspect.] Having an aspect.

A contracted, subtle, and intricate face, full of quirks and turnings, a labyrinthean face, now angularly, now circularly, every way aspected.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

ASPE'CTION. n. s. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown.

A'SPEN, or ASP.† n. s. [espe, Dutch; asp, Dan. aspe, Su-Goth, æpe, æpen, Sax.] See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white. Mortimer.

The builder oak, sole king of forests all,
The aspen, good for staves, the cypress funeral.
Spenser.

A'SPEN.† adj. [from asp or aspen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble like aspen leaves upon a lute. Shaksp.
No gale disturbs the trees,
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

3. Resembling an asp tree.

Poore aspen wretch, neglected thou,
Bath'd in a cold quicksilver sweat wilt lie,
A verier ghost than I.
Donne, Poems, The Apparition.

A'SPER.* n. s. A small Turkish silver coin; of less value than our penny.

One, that not long since was the buckram scribe,
That would run on men's errands for an asper.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.

They will not abate one asper of the thousand dollars per month. Ricaut's Greek Church, p. 245.

A'SPER.† adj. [Lat.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in Bacon, Dr. Johnson says; but it is found repeatedly in Chaucer, and occurs also in a later writer, written like the Fr. advective, aspre.

What dure and aspre strokes I have seen them give and receive to-day.
Hist. of Oliver of Castille, c. h.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound; for that the base striketh more air than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

A'SPERLY.* or A'SPRELY. adv. [from the adj. Fr. also asprement.] Roughly; sharply. Not now in use.

Swimming unto the ships, [they] enforced their enemies to strike on land, and there assaulted them so asprely, that the captain of the Romans might easily take them.
Sir T. Eliot's Gov. fol. 56. b.

To A'SPERATE. v. a. [aspero, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough or uneven.

Those corpuscles of colour, insinuating themselves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may asperate its superficies, according to the bigness and texture of the corpuscles. Boyle.

ASPERA'TION. n. s. [from asperate.] A making rough. Dict.

*ASPERGEO'IRE. n. s. [Fr. aspersoir.] An holy water-sprinkle.

For the chapel they received two cruets of silver gilt, weighing nine ounces; an holy-water-stop and aspergeoire of silver parcel-gilt, weighing more than eighteen ounces.
Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 129.

ASPERIFO'LIOUS. adj. [from asper, rough, and folium, a leaf, Lat.] One of the divisions of plants, so called from the roughness of their leaves.

ASPE'RITY.† n. s. [asperitas, Lat. asperité, Fr.]

1. Unevenness; roughness of surface.

Sometimes the pores and asperities of dry bodies are so incommensurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the surface. Boyle.

2. Roughness of sound; harshness of pronunciation.

We cannot suppose that he is entirely free from those dissonances and asperities, which still adhered to the general character and state of our diction.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 62.

3. Roughness, or ruggedness of temper; moroseness; sourness; crabbedness.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will descend in showers of blessings; but the rigour and asperity of the other, in a severe doom upon ourselves. Govern. Tongue.

Avoid all unseemliness and asperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peevish or froward spirit. Rogers.

4. Sharpness.

The asperity of tartarous salts, and the fiery acrimony of alkaline salts, irritating and wounding the nerves, produce nascent passions and anxieties in the soul. Bp. Berkeley's Siris, § 86.

ASPERNA'TION. n. s. [aspernatio, Lat.] Neglect; disregard. Dict.

A'SPEROUS.† adj. [asper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the most asperous and unequal of colours; so like, that it is hard to distinguish them: black is the most rough. Boyle.

They [cells of hermits] are all built in the rocks, and have a craggy and asperous ascent to them.
Ricaut's Greek Church, p. 243.

To ASPE'RSE.† v. a. [aspergo, Lat. Mentioned by Heylin as a new word, in 1656. Hence among words "not familiarly used," and requiring explanation, which are placed at the end of Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy, in 1655, "asperse, to sprinkle or besmear," is found.]

1. To bespatter with censure or calumny.

In the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse the king, they were safe enough.
Clarendon.

Curb that impetuous tongue, nor rashly vain,
And singly mad, asperse the sov'reign reign.
Pope.

Unjustly poets we asperse,
Truth shines the brighter clad in verse. Swift.

2. Simply, to cast upon.

Your scorn
Makes me appear more abject to myself,
Than all diseases I have tasted yet
Had power to asperse upon me.
Heywood's Challenge for Beauty.

Here he used to hunt; and at the fall of a deer, where he would be sure to be present, embrew his hands in the blood of it, and therewith aspers, and sprinkle the attendants. Heath's Flagellume or Life of Cromwell, 1679, p. 159.

ASPE'RSER.* n. s. [from asperse.] One who asperses or vilifies another.

ASPE'RSION.† n. s. [aspersio, Lat. aspersion, Fr.]

1. A sprinkling.

If thou dost break her virgin knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies,
No sweet aspersions shall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow. Shakspeare.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little aspersion of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; censure.

Not casting any aspersion on their religion, but ready to maintain my own.
Bp. Hall, Specialties in his Life.

The same aspersions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHA'LTICK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd. Milton, P. L. x. 298.

ASPHA'LTOS.† n. s. [ἄσφαλτος, bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead Sea, where anciently stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up in the nature of liquid pitch, from the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually.

Many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L. B. 1.

ASPHA'LTUM. n. s. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neufchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chamb.

A'SPHODEL. n. s. [lilio-asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.

Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel. Pope.

A'SPICK.† n. s. [See ASP.]

1. The name of a serpent.

Why did I 'scape th' invenom'd aspick's rage,
And all the fiery monsters of the desart,
To see this day? Addison.

2. The name of a piece of ordnance, which is said to carry a twelve-pound shot; adopted from the serpent's name, like basilisk, another piece of ordnance; ancient pieces of artillery being often denominated culverines and serpentines, and the like, from the circumstance of these animals being sculptured on them.

ASPI'RANT.* n. s. [Fr.] A candidate.

I require then in our young aspirant to the name and honours of an English senator, that his mind be early and thoroughly seasoned with the principles of virtue and religion. Hurd.

To A'SPIRATE.† v. a. [aspiro, Lat.] To pronounce with aspiration, or full breath; as we aspirate horse, house, and hog.

Evia, saith Clemens, if it be aspirated Hevia, signifies, in the Hebrew tongue, a female serpent: where the good man calls the Chaldee tongue, the the Hebrew; for in the Hebrew I do not find such a word for a serpent.
Lightfoot's Miscell. p. 160.

To A'SPIRATE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent; for our w and h aspirate. Dryden.

A'SPIRATE. adj. [aspiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pervious, you may call them, if you please, perspirate; but yet they are not aspirate, i. e. with such an aspiration as h. Holder.

A'SPIRATE.* n. s. The mark to denote an aspirated pronunciation.

We must correct then twenty authors who have it in the compound ἀπηθεῖν and ἀπήθημα; and not, as the aspirate would require it, ἀφηθεῖν and ἀφήθημα. Bentley to Dr. Mead.

ASPIRA'TION. n. s. [aspiratio, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; and ardent wish; used generally of a wish for spiritual blessings.

A soul inspired with the warmest aspirations after celestial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Watts.

2. The act of aspiring, or desiring something high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on his toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth. Shakspeare.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

H is only a guttural aspiration, i. e. a more forcible impulse of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

To ASPI'RE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.]

1. To desire with eagerness; to pant after something higher: sometimes with the particle to.

Most excellent lady, no expectation in others, nor hope in himself, could aspire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praised by you. Sidney.

His father's grave counsellors, by whose means he had aspired to the kingdom, he cruelly tortured. Knolles.

Hence springs that universal strong desire,
Which all men have of immortality;
Not some few spirits unto this thought aspire,
But t all men's minds in this united be. Davies.

Horace did ne'er aspire to epic bays:
Nor lofty Maro stoop to lyric lays. Roscommon.

Till then a helpless, hopeless, homely swain,
I sought not freedom, nor aspir'd to gain. Dryd.

Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

2. Sometimes with after.

Those are raised above sense, and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls. Tillotson.

There is none of us but who would be thought, throughout the whole course of his life, to aspire after immortality. Atterbury.

3. To rise; to tower.

There is betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes and our ruin,
More pangs and fears than war or women have. Shakspeare.

My own breath still foment the fire,
Which flames as high as fancy can aspire. Waller.

To ASPI'RE.* v. a. To aspire to.

Who dare aspire this journey with a stain,
Hath weight will force him headlong back again. Donne's Poems, p. 184.

That gallant spirit hath aspired the clouds. Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

ASPI'REMENT.* n. s. [from aspire.] The act of aspiring.

The only means [light] by which each mortal eye
Sends messengers to the wide firmament:
That to the longing soul brings presently
High contemplation and deep wonderment:
By which aspirement she her wings displays. Brewer's Lingua, 3. 6.

ASPI'RER.† n. s. [from aspire.] One that ambitiously strives to be greater than he is.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God; and on his throne,
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer: but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

I find not that he did put up for advancement, during Henry the Eighth's time, though a vast aspirer and provident storier. Naunton's Fragmenta Regalia, Leicester.

ASPI'RING.* n. s. [from aspire.]

1. The desire of something great.

The ambitions and aspirings of the worldling. Hammond's Sermons.

2. With to.

Having quite lost not only all inclination and aspirings to knowledge and virtue, but likewise all courage and bravery of mind to recover their ancient freedom and honour. Howell's Letters, ii. 57.

3. Points; stops.

Nor are those so fastidious in pyramidical aspirings, nor curious in architecture or inside glory, as in many lesser towns. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 211.

ASPORTA'TION.† n. s. [asportatio, Lat.] A carrying away.

A bare removal from the place where the thief found the goods, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. Blackstone.

ASQU'INT.† adv. [Dutch, schuin.] See ASKANCE.]

1. Obliquely; not in the strait line of vision.

A single guide may direct the way better than five hundred, who have contrary views, or look asquint, or shut their eyes. Swift.

2. Figuratively, not with regard to due notice.

Thereto he answered not, but looked as it were asquint at it. Foxe's Acts, Life of Rogers.

If Herod the great had been σκωληκόβρωτος, or eaten up of worms, and by the judgement of God too; is it to be thought that this judgement looked asquint upon all the rest of this king's enormities, and cast a full eye only on the massacre of the children? Gregory's Posthuma, (1650) p. 105.

ASS.† n. s. [asinus, Lat. ase, old Fr. ασσα, Sax. "Ase, asen, et asel, olim hodièque belluam tradipedem, asinum, omnibus propè nationibus Celticis significabat." Loesch. Litt. Celt. p. 77.]

1. An animal of burden, remarkable for sluggishness, patience, hardiness, coarseness of food, and long life.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them. Shakspeare.

2. A stupid, heavy, dull fellow; a dolt.

I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass. Shakspeare.

That such a crafty mother
Should yield the world to this ass!—a woman that
Bears all down with her brain; and yet her son
Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakspeare.

To ASSA'IL. v. a. [assailler, Fr.]

1. To attack in a hostile manner; to assault; to fall upon; to invade.

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fail,
With greedy force he 'gan the fort t' assail. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To attack with argument; censure; or motives applied to the passions.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York. Shakspeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide th' encounter of assailing eyes. Shaks.

How have I fear'd your fate! but fear'd it most,
When love assail'd you on the Libyan coast. Dryden.

All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
From Dryden's Fables down to D—y's Tales. Pope.

In vain Thalestris with reproach assails;
For who can move when fair Belinda fails? Pope.

ASSA'ILABLE. adj. [from assail.] That may he attacked.

Banquo and his Fleance, lives.—
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal.—
—There's comfort yet, they are assailable. Shaks.

ASSA'ILANT. n. s. [assaillant, Fr.] He that attacks; in opposition to defendant.

The same was so well encountered by the defendants, that the obstinacy of the assailants did but increase the loss. Hayward.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face,
The like do you; so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants. Shakspeare.

ASSA'ILANT. adj. Attacking; invading.

And as ev'ning dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.

ASSA'ILER. n. s. [from assail.] One who attacks another.

Palladius heated, so pursued our assailers, that one of them slew him. Sidney.

ASSA'ILMENT.* n. s. [from assail.] Attack.

His most frequent assailment was the head-ache. Johnson, Life of Pope.

ASSAPA'NICK. n. s. A little animal of Virginia, which is said to fly by stretching out its shoulders and its skin, and is called in English the flying squirrel. Trevoux.

ASSA'RT.† n. s. [essart, from essarter, Fr. to clear away wood in a forest.] An offence committed in the forest, by plucking up those woods by the roots, that are thickets or coverts of the forest, and by making them as plain as arable land. Cowel.

Freedom from assart is an exemption from a fine or penalty for so doing. Burn's Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. Gloss.

To ASSA'RT.† v. a. [essartir, Fr. according to Dr. Johnson. Others deduce it from exaratum, contracted into exartum, which signifies to plow or cut up; and others from exertum, which means to pull up by the roots. V. Archæologia, vol. 15. p. 216.] To commit an assart; one of the greatest offences cognizable by the laws of the forest; and simply, to grub up.

The king granted to him free chase, and free warren, in all those his lands, &c. and also power to assart his lands. Ashmole's Berkshire, ii. 425.

ASSA'SSIN.† } n. s. [assassin, Fr. a word
ASSA'SSINATE. } brought originally from Asia, where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assassins, as is supposed for Arsacidæ, who killed any man without regard to danger, at the command of their chief. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymology of assassin. Some have thought it taken from the Assacani, a people mentioned by Arrian, lib. iv. The Abbé Vertot inclines to the derivation of it from the Persian word hassissin, a poniard used in private murders. Lacombe interprets assassins by the Lat. sicarii, from sica, a poniard. So it is recorded by Matthew of Paris respecting their chief, "si quos habuit principes odiosos, aut genti suæ suspectos, datâ uni de suis sichâ, vel pluribus, non considerato rei exitu, vel quæ eis pœna sequatur, illuc contendunt, quibus mandatum est; et tam diu pro complendo imperio anxii circumeunt et laborant, quousque peragant sibi homicidium commissum. Hos tàm Saraceni, quàm Christiani, assassinos appellant, etymologiam ignorantes." Roquefort exhibits them under the name of hakesins, haaçains, héissesins, which Sainte-Palaye and Mouchet derive, he says, from occidentes, that is, slayers, murderers. V. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Lord Bacon, in a charge in the King's Bench, refers to "the Saracen prince, of whom the name of the assassins is derived;" where he means perhaps simply, not etymologically, the petty prince at the head of them, who was called the old man of the mountain.] A murderer; one that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Wotton.

The Syrian king, who, to surprize
One man, assassin like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd. Milton.

The old king is just murdered, and the person that did it is unknown.—Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassinates, and let me alone to accuse him afterwards. Dryden.

Here hir'd assassins for their gain invade,
And treacherous poisoners urge their fatal trade. Creech.

When she hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt of the suffering person, than of the assassin. Addison.

Orestes brandish'd the revenging sword,
Slew the dire pair, and gave to fun'ral flame
The vile assassin, and adult'rous dame. Pope.

Useful, we grant, it serves what life requires,
But dreadful too, the dark assassin hires. Pope.

To ASSA'SSIN.* v. a. [Fr. assassiner.] To murder.

Can God be as well-pleased with him that assassines his parents, as with him that obeys them. Stillingfleet's Serm. p. 502.

ASSA'SSINACY.* n. s. [from assassin.] The act of assassinating.

This spiritual assassinacy, this deepest die of blood being most satanically designed on souls. Hammond's Serm.

ASSA'SSINATE.† n. s. [Fr. assassinat.]

1. The crime of an assassin; murder.

For which his temper'd zeal, see Providence
Flying in here, and arms him with defence
Against the assassinate made upon his life
By a foul wretch. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Were not all assassinates and popular insurrections wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of the offenders indemnified them from punishment? Pope.

2. A murderer. See ASSASSIN.

To ASSA'SSINATE.† v. a. [from assassin.]

1. To murder by violence; to destroy.

Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force, and I am ravished, and like to be assassinated. Dryden.

What could provoke thy madness
To assassinate so great, so brave a man! Philips.

The incorporating
Of these same outward things into that part,
Which we call mortal, leaves some certain fæces
That stop the organs, and, as Plato says,
Assassinates our knowledge. B. Jonson, Fox.

2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.

Such usage as your honourable lords
Afford me, assassinated and betray'd,
Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,
In fight withstand one single and unarm'd. Milton.

To ASSA'SSINATE.* v. n. To murder.

You who those ways fear'd of late,
Where now no thieves assassinate.
Sandys, Paraphrase of Sacred Songs, Judges v.

ASSA'SSINATION. n. s. [from assassinate.] The act of assassinating; murder by violence.

It were done quickly, if th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence. Shakspeare.

The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assassination. Clarendon.

ASSA'SSINATOR. n. s. [from assassinate.] Murderer; mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.

ASSA'SSINOUS.* adj. [from assassin.] Murderous. Cockeram.

ASSA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. assation, a roasting, from the Lat. assatus.] Roasting.

The egg expiring less in the elixation or boiling; whereas, in the assation or roasting, it will sometimes abate a drachm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Assation is a concoction of the inward moisture by heat. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

ASSA'ULT. n. s. [assault, Fr.]

1. Attack; hostile onset; opposed to defence.

Her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakspeare.

Not to be shook thyself, but all assaults,
Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea wave. Thomson.

2. Storm: opposed to sap or siege.

Jason took at least a thousand men, and suddenly made an assault upon the city. 2 Maccab. v. 5.

After some days siege, he resolved to try the fortune of an assault: he succeeded therein so far, that he had taken the principal tower and fort. Bacon.

3. Hostile violence.

Themselves at discord fell,
And cruel combat join'd in middle space,
With horrible assault, and fury fell. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Invasion; hostility; attack.

After some unhappy assaults upon the prerogative by the parliament, which produced its dissolution, there followed a composure. Clarendon.

Theories built upon narrow foundations, are very hard to be supported against the assaults of opposition. Locke.

5. In law. A violent kind of injury offered to a man's person. It may be committed by offering of a blow, or by a fearful speech. Cowel.

6. It has upon before the thing assaulted.

To ASSA'ULT.† v. a. [old Fr. assaulter; low Lat. assaldare, from the Lat. saltare, Roq. Gloss. Suppl.] To attack; to invade; to fall upon with violence.

The king granted the Jews to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy all the power that would assault them. Esther, viii. 11.

Before the gates the cries of babes new-born,
Whom fate had from their tender mothers torn,
Assault his ears. Dryden.

New cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold:
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden.

ASSA'ULTABLE.* adj. [from assault.] Capable of assault.

A breach, be it made never so assaultable, having many hands to defend it with any valour, lightly is never entered. Sir Roger Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 106.

ASSA'ULTER. n. s. [from assault.] One who violently assaults another.

Neither liking their eloquence, nor fearing their might, we esteemed few swords in a just defence, able to resist many unjust assaulters. Sidney.

ASSA'Y.† n. s. [essaye, Fr. from which the ancient writers borrowed assay, according to the sound, and the latter, essay, according to the writing; but the senses now differing, they may be considered as two words. This is Dr. Johnson's observation. But the word is certainly from the old Fr. substantive asaie, or assai, which means the same as essai.]

1. Examination; trial.

This cannot be
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. Shakspeare.

2. In law. The examination of measures and weights used by the clerk of the market. Cowel.

3. The first entrance upon any thing; a taste for trial.

For well he weened, that so glorious bait
Would tempt his guest to take thereof assay. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Trial by danger or distress; difficulty; hardship.

She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to master sorrowful assay. Spenser, F. Q.

The men he prest but late,
To hard assays unfit, unsure at need,
Yet arm'd to point in well attempted plate. Fairfax.

Be sure to find,
What I foretel thee, many a hard assay
Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold.
Milton.

5. Value.

She saw bestrowed all with rich array
Of pearls and precious stones of great assay.
Spenser.

To ASSA'Y.† v. a. [old Fr. assaier.]

1. To make trial of; to make experiment of.

One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Spenser.

Gray and Bryan obtained leave of the general a little to assay them; and so with some horsemen charged them home. Hayward.

What unweighed behaviour hath this drunkard picked out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Shakspeare.

2. To apply to, as the touchstone in assaying metals.

Whom thus afflicted, when sad Eve beheld,
Desolate where she sat, approaching nigh,
Soft words to his fierce passion she assay'd.
Milton.

To ASSA'Y.* v. n. To try; to endeavour.

David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go, for he had not proved it.
1 Sam. xvii. 39.

ASSA'YER. n. s. [from assay.] An officer of the mint, for the due trial of silver, appointed between the master of the mint and the merchants that bring silver thither for exchange. Cowel.

The smelters come up to the assayers within one in twenty. Woodward on Fossils.

A'SSECLE.* n. s. [Lat. assecla.] A dependant; a follower. A pedantick word; but probably once in use.

It mattereth not with the pope and his assecles, of what life and conversation their saints be.
Sheldon's Miracles of Antichrist, 1616, p. 325.

ASSECTA'TION. n. s. [assectatio, Lat.] Attendance, or waiting upon. Dict.

To ASSECU'RE.* v. a. [low Lat. assecuro, adsecuro.] To make one sure or certain; to give assurance. Bullokar.

ASSECU'RANCE.* n. s. [low Lat. assecurantia.] Assurance.

What may be thought of those assecurances which they give, in the popish church, to all such as die in the same, with the copious furniture of their sacraments, and their own merits?
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. p. 320.

ASSECURA'TION.* [low Lat. assecuratio.] Assurance free from doubt.

How far then reaches this assecuration? So far as to exclude all fears, all doubting, and hesitation? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.

ASSECU'TION. n. s. [from assequor, assecutum, to obtain.] Acquirement; the act of obtaining.

By the canon law, a person after he has been in full possession of a second benefice, cannot return again to his first; because it is immediately void by his assecution of a second. Ayliffe, Par.

ASSE'MBLAGE. n. s. [assemblage, Fr.]

1. A collection; a number of individuals brought together. It differs from assembly, by being applied only, or chiefly, to things; assembly being used only, or generally, of persons.

All that we amass together in our thoughts is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Locke.

2. The state of being assembled.

O Hartford, fitted or to shine in courts
With unaffected grace, or walk the plains,
With innocence and meditation join'd
In soft assemblage, listen to my song. Thomson.

ASSE'MBLANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. assemblance, resemblance. V. Roquefort.]

1. Representation; appearance. Some editions have rashly converted Shakspeare's own word into assemblage.

Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, Master Shallow.
K. Hen. IV. P. ii. A. iii.

2. Assembling. [from assemble.]

He chaunst to come, where happily he spide
A rout of many people farre away;
To whom his course he hastily applide,
To weet the cause of their assemblaunce wide.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 21.

To ASSE'MBLE. v. a. [assembler, Fr.] To bring together into one place. It is used both of persons and things.

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah. Isaiah, xi. 12.

He wonders for what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him. Shaksp.

To ASSE'MBLE. v. n. To meet together.

These men assembled, and found Daniel praying. Daniel, vi. 11.

ASSE'MBLER.* n. s. [from assemble.] One who assembles or meets others.

For your confession of faith, which you say shall be published by your assemblers, if that be to be used in the service of God, then must there be some new direction for it put into the directory.
Hammond to Cheynel, Ham. Works, i. 193.

None of the list-makers, the assemblers of the mob, the directors and arrangers, have been convicted.
Burke, Reflections on the Executions in 1780.

ASSE'MBLING.* n. s. [from assemble.] Meeting together.

Let all rude and riotous assemblings all clamorous sports and boisterous exercises, and all undecent liberties, both of the hand and tongue, be banished from this day of rest and holiness.
Bp. Fleetwood's Charge.

ASSE'MBLY.† n. s. [assemblée, Fr.]

1. A company met together.

They had heard by fame,
Of this so noble and so fair assembly,
This night to meet here. Shakspeare.

2. An assemblage; a collection.

From Murano to Venice herself, or to any of the little assembly of islands about her.
Howell, Letters, i. 1.

3. The assembly of divines, by way of distinction; recorded in the history of this country.

It is, I perceive, an usual prayer of many preachers well-affected to your assembly, that God would now, (after 1600 years universal practice of the whole church of Christ upon earth) shew you the pattern in the mount; as if, after so long and perfect inquisitions, there could be any new discoveries of the form that was, or should be.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 336.

ASSE'MBLY-ROOM.* n. s. The room in which visitors assemble; usually understood of publick meetings; many towns, especially watering places, as they are termed, having such rooms.

No sooner did the reputation of the poem begin to spread, than she heard it repeated in all places of concourse; nor could she enter the assembly-rooms, or cross the walks, without being saluted with some lines from The Bastard.
Johnson, Life of Savage.

ASSE'NT.† n. s. [assensus, Lat. assent, old Fr.]

1. The act of agreeing to any thing.

Without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Faith is the assent to any proposition not thus made out by the deduction of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer. Locke.

All the arguments on both sides must be laid in balance, and, upon the whole, the understanding determine its assent. Locke.

2. Consent; agreement.

To urge any thing upon the church, requiring thereunto that religious assent of christian belief, wherewith the words of the holy prophets are received, and not to shew it in scripture; this did the fathers evermore think unlawful, impious, and execrable. Hooker.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason, concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hooker.

To ASSE'NT. v. n. [assentire, Lat.] To concede; to yield to, or agree to.

And the Jews also assented, saying, that these things were so. Acts, xxiv. 9.

ASSENTA'TION.† n. s. [assentatio, Lat. assentation, Fr.] Compliance with the opinion of another out of flattery or dissimulation.

A prince, whom, without assentation I may be bold to call the sweetest and the fairest blossom that ever budded, either out of the white or the red rosary. Ld. Northampton, Proceed. against Garnet, sign. D d 3.

Words, smooth and sweeter-sounded, are to be used rather than rough or harsh; as adore for worship, assentation for flattery.
Instructions for Oratory (Oxford, 1682), p. 25.

ASSENTA'TOR.* n. s. [Lat assentator, old Fr. assentateur.] A flatterer; a follower. Obsolete.

Other there be which, in a more honest term may be called assentatours or followers, which do await diligently what is the form of the speech and gesture of their master, and also other his manners and fashion of garments.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 138. b.

ASSE'NTER.* n. s. [from assent.] The person who consents; an assistant; a favourer.

The good man, by that delusive spell is rendered a ridiculous spectator, and seemingly an assenter t their meschanteries [wicked acts].
Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 337.

She is not an assenter (though thousands be) to that rabbinical rule cited in Drusius from Rabbi Haurica: Let a man clothe himself (saith he) beneath his ability, his children according to it, and his wife above it!
Whitlock, Manners of the Eng. p. 353.

ASSE'NTINGLY.* adv. Accordingly, or by agreement. Huloet.

ASSE'NTMENT. n. s. [from assent.] Consent.

Their arguments are but precarious, and subsist upon the charity of our assentments.
Brown, Vulgar Err.

To ASSE'RT.† v. a. [assero, Lat. asserer, Fr.]

1. To maintain; to defend either by words or actions.

Your forefathers have asserted the party which they chose till death, and died for its defence.
Dryden.

2. To affirm; to declare positive.

That to the heighth of this great argument

I may assert Eternal Providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to men.
Milton, P. L. i. 25.

3. To claim; to vindicate a title to.
Nor can the groveling mind,
In the dark dungeon of the limbs confin'd,
Assert the native skies or its own heav'nly kind.
Dryden.

4. To rescue; to free. A Latinism.
The people of Israel, being lately oppressed in Egypt, were asserted by God into a state of liberty.
Bp. Patrick on Numbers, xxiii, 22.

ASSE'RTION. n. s. [from assert.]
1. The act of asserting.
2. Position advanced.
If any affirm the earth doth move, and will not believe with us it standeth still; because he hath probable reasons for it, and I no infallible sense or reason against it, I will not quarrel with his assertion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ASSE'RTIVE. adj. [from assert.] Positive; dogmatical; peremptory.
He was not so fond of the principles he undertook to illustrate, as to boast their certainty; proposing them not in a confident, and assertive form, but as probabilities and hypotheses. Glanville.

ASSE'RTIVELY.* adv. [from assertive.] Affirmatively.
Read it interrogatively, and it is as strong for Soto and the Dominicans, as if it be read assertively, for Catherine and the Jesuits.
Bp. Bedell, Lett. p. 403.

ASSE'RTOR.† n. s. [old Fr. asserteur.] Maintainer; vindicator; supporter; affirmer.
Among th' assertors of free reason's claim,
Our nation's not the least in worth or fame.
Dryden, Ep. ii.
Faithful assertor of thy country's cause,
Britain with tears shall bathe thy glorious wound.
Prior.
It is an usual piece of art to undermine the authority of fundamental truths, by pretending to shew how weak the proofs are, which their assertors employ in defence of them. Atterbury.

A'SSERTORY.* adj. [from assert.]
1. Affirming; supporting.
We have not to do here with a promissory oath, the obligation whereof is for another inquisition: it is the assertory oath that is now under our hand, which the great God by whom we swear hath ordained to be an end of controversies.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. ii. C. 5.
His other heap of arguments are only assertory not probatory. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 126.
The oaths that we take, are of several sorts. First, assertory ones, in order to our affirming the truth of somewhat; and such is the evidence that men give in trials, or the affidavits that they make in order to the preserving the memory of some truth, that consists in their knowledge.
Bp. Burnet, Sermons, p. 255.

2. Sometimes with the particle of.
As this particle Amen, used in the beginning of a speech is assertory of the undoubted truth of it, so when it is subjoined and used at the end of it, [it] is precatory, and signifies our earnest desire to have our prayers heard and our petitions granted.
Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 208.

To ASSE'RVE. v. a. [asservio, Lat.] To serve, help, or second. Dict.

To ASSE'SS.† v. a. [from assestare, Ital. to make an equilibrium, or balance, Dr. Johnson says; but it is probably from the old Fr. assesser, to establish, to regulate; so used in the 10th century. V. Lacombe.] To charge with any certain sum.
Before the receipt of them in this office, they were assessed by the affidavit from the time of the inquisition found. Bacon.

ASSE'SS.* n. s. [from the verb.] Assessment.
Taking off assesses, levies, and free-quarterings, might appear plausive aims.
Princely Pelican, ch. 8.

ASSE'SSABLE.* adj. [from assess.] That may be assessed; liable to be taxed.

ASSE'SSION. n. s. [assessio, Lat.] A sitting down by one, to give assistance or advice. Dict.

ASSE'SSIONARY.* adj. [from assession.] Pertaining to assessors.
One of the answers of the jury, upon their oaths at the assessionary court, I have inserted.
Carew, Survey of Cornwal.

ASSE'SSMENT.† n. s. [from to assess.]
1. The sum levied on certain property.
They were not ashamed, after they had taken away and sold all my goods and personal estate, to come to me for assessments and monthly payments for that estate which they had taken.
Bp. Hall, Sp. of his Life, p. 61.

2. The act of assessing.
What greater immunity and happiness can there be to a people, than to be liable to no laws, but what they make themselves? To be subject to no contribution, assessment, or any pecuniary levy whatsoever, but what they vote and voluntarily yield unto themselves. Howell.

ASSE'SSOR.† n. s. [assessor, Lat.]
1. The person that sits by another; generally used of those who assist the judge.
Minos, the strict inquisitor appears;
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears.
Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden.
The statutes are as extraordinary as if they had been drawn up by Don Quixote himself, or his assessors, the curate and the barber.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, i. 336.

2. He that sits by another as next in dignity.
To his Son,
The assessor of his throne, he thus began. Milton.
Twice stronger than his sire, who sat above,
Assessor to the throne of thundering Jove. Dryden.

3. He that lays taxes; derived from assess.
The assessors of taxes may be elected of the meaner sort of the people. Ralegh, Arts of Emp. p. 63.

ASSE'TS. n. s. pl. without the singular. [assez, Fr.] Goods sufficient to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the testator's or ancestor's debts or legacies. Whoever pleadeth assets, sayeth nothing; but that the person against whom he pleads, hath enough come to his hands, to discharge what is in demand. Cowel.

To ASSE'VER.† } v. a. [assevero, Lat. as-
To ASSE'VERATE. } severer, old Fr.] To affirm with great solemnity, as upon oath.
Anselmus, though otherwise a severe and a very austere man, yet is so sweetened and mollified with the conceit of this musick, [the harmony of heaven], that he not only assevereth it, but also endeavoureth, with great pains and labour, to set out the true musical proportion of it; as Macrobius before did.
Fotherby, Atheom. p. 317.

ASSEVERA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. asseveration.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.
That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your only probable collection; and therefore such bold asseverations, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker.
Another abuse of the tongue I might add: vehement asseverations upon slight and trivial occasions.
Ray on the Creation.
The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his asseveration.
Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

A'SSHEAD.† n. s. [from ass and head. This is a word older than the time of Shakspeare, (whom Dr. Johnson cites,) accompanied in Minsheu with assheadiness; both obsolete.] One slow of apprehension; a blockhead.
I can see none agree with my lorde here in thys opynyon, unlesse they be blynde dastards and asseheads, as thys olde dotynge foole was.
Bale, Course at the Rom. Foxe, fol. 86. b.
Will you help an asshead, and a coxcomb, and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull? Shaks. Tw. Ni.

ASSI'DUATE.* adj. [Lat. assiduus.] Daily.
My long and assiduate course of suffering has taken me from an opinion of suffering.
K. Charles I. in the Princely Pelican, ch. 8.

ASSIDU'ITY. n. s. [assiduité, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.
I have with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for a nomenclator. Addison.
Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquit himself of it? Rogers.
We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.

ASSI'DUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Lat.] Constant in application.
And if by prayer
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of Him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary Him with my assiduous cries. Milton.
The most assiduous tale-bearers, and bitterest revilers, are often half-witted people.
Gov. of the Tongue.
In summer, you see the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. Addison.
Each still renews her little labour,
Nor justles her assiduous neighbour. Prior.

ASSI'DUOUSLY. adv. [from assiduous.] Diligently; continually.
The trade, that obliges artificers to be assiduously conversant with their materials, is that of glass-men. Boyle.
The habitable earth may have been perpetually the drier, seeing it is assiduously drained and exhausted by the seas. Bentley.

ASSI'DUOUSNESS.* n. s. [from assiduous.] The act of being assiduous; diligence.
Persons that will have the patience to understand, and press with art and assiduousness.
Lett. dat. 1637, Sidney State-Papers, vol. ii. 509.

To ASSIE'GE. v. a. [assieger, Fr.] To besiege. Obsolete. Dict.
On the other side the assieged castle's ward
Their stedfast stands did mightily maintain.
Spenser.

*ASSIE'NTO.† n. s. [In Spanish, a contract or bargain.] A contract or convention between the king of Spain and other powers, for furnishing the Spanish dominions in America with negro slaves.
A good ministry would have considered how a renewal of the assiento might have been obtained.
Burke, Obs. on a late State of the Nation.

To ASSI'GN.† v. a. [assigner, Fr. assigno, Lat.]

1. To mark out; to appoint.

He assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were. 2 Sam. xi. 16.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, both of them rather courtiers assured to the state, than martial men. Bacon.

Both joining,
As join'd in injuries, one enmity
Against a foe by doom express assign'd us,
That cruel serpent. Milton.

True quality is neglected, virtue is oppressed, and vice triumphant. The last day will assign to every one a station suitable to his character. Addison.

2. To appropriate.

Promising unto the king by intercession three hundred and three score talents of silver; and, of another revenue, eighty talents. Besides this, he promised to assign an hundred and fifty more, if he might have licence to set him up a place for exercise, &c. 2 Maccab. iv. 8, 9.

3. To fix with regard to quantity or value.

There is no such intrinsick, natural, settled value in any thing, as to make any assigned quantity of it constantly worth any assigned quantity of another. Locke.

4. In law. In general, to appoint a deputy, or make over a right to another; in particular, to appoint or set forth, as to assign errour, is to shew in what part of the process errour is committed: to assign false judgement, is to declare how and where the judgement is unjust: to assign the cessor, is to shew how the plaintiff had cessed, or given over: to assign waste, is to shew wherein especially the waste is committed. Cowel.

ASSI'GN.* n. s. [from the verb.] The person to whom any property is, or may be, assigned.

Severus likes not these unseason'd lines
Of rude absurdites, time's foul abuse,
To all posterities, and their assignes.
Parrot, Springes for Woodcocks, Ep. 93.

Without interruption or claim of heirs, executors, and assigns.
Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 168.

ASSI'GNABLE.† adj. [from assign.] That may be marked out, or fixed.

Aristotle held that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God; so that there was no instant assignable of God's eternal existence, in which the world did not also co-exist. South.

As the number of terms may increase beyond any assignable number; so may the excess decrease below any assignable quantity.
Wallis, correction of Hobbes, § 5.

In one hour, and in the self-same assembly, without any assigned or assignable cause, to be precipitated from the highest authority to the most marked neglect, possibly into the greatest peril of life and reputation, is a situation full of danger, and destitute of honour.
Burke, on the present Discontents.

*A'SSIGNAT. n. s. [Fr. In the old Fr. assignat also occurs in the sense of distribution. V. Cotgrave.] The paper-money of France after its Revolution: The word, among us, of course is modern.

The mortgage of our assignats draws near its end. Burke's Works, vii. 340.

In the war with Holland, he saw nothing but gold to seize on, and assignats to sell at par.
Ibid. p. 341.

ASSIGNA'TION.† n. s. [assignation, French.]

1. An appointment to meet; used generally of love appointments, Dr. Johnson says; and certainly, I may add, of other appointments.

The lovers expected the return of this stated hour with as much impatience is if it had been a real assignation. Spectator.

Or when a whore, in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

They return home as much raised in their spirits, and cheered in their very countenances, as the most jolly good-fellews do from their merry assignations. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Con. P. I.

More delightful and more profitable than either coffee-house, club, or tavern assignations.
Ibid. P. III.

2. A making over a thing to another.

By assignations of yearly pensions out of their revenues. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

He had obtained an assignation of 50,000 crowns to be levied in Portugal.
Bacon, Report of Lopez's Treason.

This manor was in the possession of Reginald Fitzherbert, who, dying in 1285, by an assignation made it over to his wife Joan.
Ashmole's Berkshire, ii. 276.

3. Designation; marking out.

In all these places this title is attributed unto Christ absolutely and universally, without any kind of restriction or limitation, without any assignation of any particular in respect of which he is the first or last. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii.

I am happy to find this assignation of Stonehenge, which I cursorily hazarded in my first volume of the History of English Poetry, ascertained by so authentick an historian as Turgott!
Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 68.

The assignation of particular names to denote particular objects, that is, the institution of nouns substantive, would, probably, be one of the first steps towards the formation of language.
A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

ASSIGNEE'. n. s. [assigné, Fr.] He that is appointed or deputed by another, to do any act, or perform any business, or enjoy any commodity. And an assignee may be either in deed or in law; assignee in deed, is he that is appointed by a person; assignee in law, is he whom the law maketh so, without any appointment of the person. Cowel.

ASSI'GNER. n. s. [from assign.] He that appoints.

The Gospel is at once the assigner of our tasks, and the magazine of our strength. Decay of Piety.

ASSI'GNMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. assennement.]

1. Appropriation of one thing to another thing or person.

The only thing which maketh any place publick, is the publick assignment thereof unto such duties. Hooker.

This institution, which assigns it to a person, whom we have no rule to know, is just as good as an assignment to no body at all. Locke.

2. Designation; the act of marking out; appointment.

By this your assignement Popery will extend itself very far indeed.
Mountague, Appeal to Cæsar, p. 119.

All chancellors, commissaries, archdeacons, officials, and all other exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction, shall appoint such meet places for the keeping of their courts, by the assignment or approbation of the bishop of the diocese, as shall be convenient for the entertainment of those that are to make their appearance there.
Const. and Canons Eccl. 125.

ASSI'MILABLE. adj. [from assimilate.] That may be converted to the same nature with something else.

The spirits of many will find but naked habitations; meeting no assimilables wherein to re-act their natures. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ASSI'MILATE. v. n. [assimilo, Lat.] To perform the act of converting food to nourishment.

Birds assimilate less, and excern more, than beasts; for their excrements are ever liquid, and their flesh generally more dry. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Birds be commonly better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and secerneth more subtely. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ASSI'MILATE. v. a.

1. To bring to a likeness, or resemblance.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life would easily assimilate at least the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

They are not over patient of mixture; but such, whom they cannot assimilate, soon find it their interest to remove. Swift.

2. To turn to its own nature by digestion.

Tasting concoct, digest, assimilate,
And corporeal to incorporeal turn. Milton.

Hence also animals and vegetables may assimilate their nourishment; moist nourishment easily changing its texture, till it becomes like the dense earth. Newton.

ASSI'MILATENESS. n. s. [from assimilate.] Likeness. Dict.

ASSIMILA'TION.† n. s. [from assimilate.]

1. The act of converting any thing to the nature or substance of another.

It furthers the very act of assimilation of nourishment, by some outward emollients that make the parts more apt to assimilate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being assimilated, or becoming like something else; having sometimes to and with.

A nourishment in a large acceptation, but not in propriety, conserving the body, not repairing it by assimilation, but preserving it by ventilation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

What shall he gain by this but that advantage, which he promiseth to himself, of your good, in your assimilation to other churches.
Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 315.

It is as well the instinct as duty of our nature, to aspire to an assimilation with God; even the most laudable and generous ambition.
Decay of Piety.

ASSI'MILATIVE.* adj. [from assimilate. The learned writer, whom I cite as using this word, spells it assimulative, as he also writes assimulation for assimilation.] Having the power of turning to its own nature by digestion.

Neither ought it to seem more strange, that the same ventricle in the brain should be capable of all these three functions, than that the same bone or sinew, and every part and particle thereof should have in it (in regard of the nourishment it receives and the excrement it drives forth) an attractive, a retentive, an assimilative, and an expulsive virtue.
Hakewill's Apology, p. 5.

To ASSI'MULATE. v. a. [assimulo, Lat.] To feign; to counterfeit. Dict.

ASSIMULA'TION. n. s. [assimulatio, Lat.] A dissembling; a counterfeiting. Dict.

ASSINE'GO.* n. s. [Portuguese, asinego, a little ass. The word, in our language, has been sometimes mistaken for an ass-driver.] An ass.

We jogged leisurely on upon our mules and assinegoes. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 127.

Or are you so ambitious 'bove your peers,
You'd be an assinego by your years?
B. Jonson, Expost. with Inigo Jones.

To ASSI'ST. v. a. [assister, Fr. assisto, Lat.] To help.

Receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and assist her in whatsoever business she hath need. Rom. xvi. 2.

She no sooner yielded to adultery, but she agreed to assist in the murder of her husband. Broome on the Odyssey.

To Assi'st.* v. n. To help; to contribute.

Almighty God, who in thy wise providence hast constituted several ranks and qualities of men, that they might mutually assist to the support of each other; teach me to be content with the station wherein thou hast been pleased to place me. Nelson's Festivals, St. James, Coll. ii.

Assi'stance. n. s. [assistance, French.] Help; furtherance.

The council of Trent commends recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and assistance: What doth this aid and assistance signify? Stilling fleet.

You have abundant assistances for this knowledge, in excellent books. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Let us entreat this necessary assistance, that by his grace he would lead us. Rogers.

Assi'stant. adj. [from assist.] Helping; lending aid.

Some perchance did adhere to the duke, and were assistant to him openly, or at least under hand. Hale, Common Law of England.

For the performance of this work, a vital or directive principle seemeth to be assistant to the corporeal. Grew.

Assi'stant. n. s. [from assist.]

1. A person engaged in an affair not as principal, but as auxiliary or ministerial.

Some young towardly noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants, according to the quality of the persons. Bacon.

2. Sometimes it is perhaps only a softer word for an attendant.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd. Dryden.

Assi'stantly.* adv. [from assistant.] So as to assist.

He hath holpen up assistantly,
His servant Israel. Magnificat, in Sternhold's Psalms, ed. 1598.

Assi'ster.* n. s. [from assist.] One who assists; an helper. Ash.

Assi'stless.* adj. [from assist and less.] Wanting help.

Stupid he stares, and all assistless stands. Pope, Iliad, xvi. 970.

ASSI'ZE.† n. s. [assise, a sitting, Fr.]

1. An assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the bailiff or justice, in a certain place, and at a certain time.

2. A jury. In Scotland a jury is commonly called an assize; in England, the term is applied to a particular species both of jury, and of trial by jury; the former being called an assize, when summoned for the trial of landed disputes; the latter, "a grand assize."

3. An ordinance or statute.

By an ordinance in 27 Hen. II., called the assise of arms, it was provided, that every man's armour should descend to his heir. Blackstone.

4. The court, place, or time, where and when the writs and processes of assize are taken. Cowel.

The law was never executed by any justices of assize, but the people left to their own laws. Davies on Ireland.

At each assize and term we try
A thousand rascals of as deep a dye. Dryden's Juvenal.

5. Any court of justice.

The judging God shall close the book of fate,
And there the last assizes keep,
For those who wake, and those who sleep. Dryden.

6. Assize of bread, ale, &c. Measure, of price or rate. Thus it is said, when wheat is of such a price the bread shall be of such assize.

7. Measure; for which we now use size.

On high hill's top I saw a stately frame,
An hundred cubits high by just assize,
With hundred pillars. Spenser.

8. Rents of assise.

Rents of assise are the certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be varied. Blackstone.

To Assi'ze.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fix the rate of any thing by an assize or writ, Dr. Johnson says; but it formerly meant simply to appoint.

That thou thereof might ben advised,
Thou shalt have day and time assised. Gower, Conf. Am. Tale of Florent.

Assi'zer, or Assi'ser. n. s. [from assize.] Is an officer that has the care and oversight of weights and measures. Chamb.

A'ssle-tooth, or A'xle-tooth.* n. s. [Icel. jaxle, dens molaris, situated near the axis of the jaw. Craven Gloss.] A grinder. North in general. Grose. Part of Yorkshire. Craven Gloss.

A'sslike.* adj. [from ass and like.] Resembling an ass.

I had much rather, since truly I may do it, show their mistaking of Plato, under whose lion's skin they would make an ass like braying against poesy, than go about to overthrow his authority. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

They are sleepy, saith Savanarola, dull, slow, cold, blockish, ass-like. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 191.

To Asso'ber.* v. a. [from sober.] To keep sober. Obsolete.

And thus I rede, thou assobre
Thyne herte, in hope of such a grace. Gower, Conf. Am. b. vi.

Asso'ciable.† adj. [Fr. associable, from Lat. associabilis. Dr. Johnson gives this adjective as his own introduction of it; but it had existed in our language more than a century before his time, and with other meanings than his. V. Cotgrave.] Sociable; companionable; fit to hold fellowship with; that which may be joined to another.

To Asso'ciate.† v. a. [associer, Fr. associo, Lat.]

1. To unite with another as a confederate.

A fearful army led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories. Shakspeare.

2. To adopt as a friend upon equal terms.

Associate in your town a wandering train,
And strangers in your palace entertain. Dryden.

3. To accompany; to keep company with another.

Friends should associate friends in grief and woe. Shakspeare.

4. To unite; to join.

Language and fashion associate also affections. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

Some oleaginous particles unperceivedly associated themselves to it. Boyle.

If Humber, a king of the Huns, has any concern in this name, [the Humber,] the best way is to reconcile matters, and associate both etymologies in Hun-Aber, or Humber. Warton's Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

To Asso'ciate.† v. n. To unite himself; to join himself. It has generally the particle with; as, he associated with his master's enemies. This definition has been placed by Dr. Johnson, as Mr. Mason has observed, improperly, among those of the verb active.

Associates with the midnight shadows. Thomson.

They appear in a manner no way assorted to those with whom they must associate. Burke.

Asso'ciate. adj. [from the verb.] Confederate; joined in interest or purpose.

While I descend through darkness,
To my associate pow'rs, them to acquaint
With these successes. Milton.

Asso'ciate. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A person joined with another; a partner.

They persuade the king, now in old age, to make Plangus his associate in government with him. Sidney.

2. A confederate, in a good or neutral sense; an accomplice in ill.

Their defender, and his associates, have sithence proposed to the world a form such as themselves like. Hooker.

3. A companion; implying some kind of equality.

He was accompanied with a noble gentleman, no unsuitable associate. Wotton.

Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond
Compare, above all living creatures dear. Milton.

But my associates now my stay deplore,
Impatient. Pope's Odyssey.

Associa'tion.† n. s. [Fr. association.]

1. Union; conjunction; society.

The church being a society, hath the self-same original grounds, which other politick societies have; the natural inclination which all men have unto sociable life, and consent to some certain bond of association; which bond is the law that appointeth what kind of order they shall be associated in. Hooker.

2. Confederacy; union for particular purposes, good or ill.

This could not be done but with mighty opposition: against which, to strengthen themselves, they secretly entered into a league of association. Hooker.

3. Partnership.

Self-denial is a kind of holy association with God; and, by making you his partner, interests you in all his happiness. Boyle.

4. Connection.

Association of ideas is of great importance, and may be of excellent use. Watts.

5. Apposition; union of matter.

The changes of corporeal things are to be placed only in the various separations, and new associations and motions of these permanent particles. Newton.

6. An assembly of persons; a club.

The power of serving and obliging the rulers of corporations, of winning over the popular leaders of political clubs, associations, and neighbourhoods. Burke's Sp. on the Duration of Parl.

Asso'ciator.* n. s. [from associate.] A confederate.

Are you leaguers, or covenanters, or associators? Dryden, D. of Guise.

I will briefly take notice of some few particulars wherein our late associators and conspirators have made a third copy of the League. Dryden, Hist. League.

To Asso'il.* v. a. [old Fr. assoiler, asaudre, absouldre. Lat. absolvo.]

1. To solve; to remove; to answer.

For the assoiling of this difficulty, I lay down these three propositions. Mede, Rev. of God's House.

Upon which subject [that Episcopacy is of divine right] a most learned Belgick doctor wrote a whole book, uttering therein very many arguments both from scripture and antiquity, and assoiling the objections to the contrary.
Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p.157.

To assoil this seeming difficulty, it may be proper to observe in the entrance, how, or upon what occasion, these words are brought in.
Waterland, Scrip. Vindic. iii. 63.

2. To release or set free; to acquit; to pardon.

If we live in an age of indevotion, we think ourselves well assoiled, if we be warmer than their ice.
Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exemplar, p.68.

But first thou must a season fast and pray,
Till from her bands the spright assoiled is,
And have her strength recured from fraile infirmities. Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 52.

She soundly slept, and careful thoughts did quite assoil. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 58.

The king — soon after, under the broad seal, assoiled him from all irregularities and scandal.
Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams, abridged, p.18.

3. To absolve by confession. "Asoylen of defaults or sins." Prompt. Parv.

To some bishop we will wend,
Of all the sins, that we have done,
To be assoiled at his hand. Percy, Reliques, i. 172.

4. To stain; to soil. [From soil with the prefix as, perhaps peculiar to the single authority which I cite.]

Whate'er he be, [who]
Can with unthankfulness assoil me, let him
Dig out mine eyes, and sing my name in verse,
In ballad verse, at every drinking house,
And no man be so charitable to lend me
A dog to guide my steps.
Beaumont and Fl. Queen of Corinth, iii. 1.

A'SSONANCE. n. s. [assonance, Fr.] Reference of one sound to another resembling it. Resemblance of sound.
Dict.

A'SSONANT. adj. [assonant, French.] Sounding in a manner resembling another sound.
Dict.

To A'SSONATE. * v. n. [Lat. assono.] To sound, or ring, like a bell.
Cockeram.

To ASSO'RT. † v. a. [assortir, Fr. An old English verb, found in Cotgrave; who renders assortir, "to sort, assort, suit; to dispose and order several things handsomely; also, to furnish or store with all sorts." It is so employed in modern times, as the examples from Burke, noticed by Mr. Mason, shew.]

They appear in a manner no way assorted to those with whom they must associate.
Burke.

To be found in the well assorted warehouses of dissenting congregations.
Burke.

ASSO'RTMENT. † n. s. [from assort.]

1. The act of classing or ranging.

Is it not much more distinct and intelligible, and of better direction for the assortment and certainty of structure, to say that "amor" is a transitive action, and "nummi" the patient or object?
R. Johnson, Noctes Nottingh. p.8.

2. A mass or quantity properly selected and ranged.

When the greater part of objects had thus been arranged under their proper classes and assortments, distinguished by such general names, it was impossible that the greater part of that almost infinite number of individuals, comprehending under each particular assortment or species, could have any peculiar or proper names of their own, distinct from the general name of the species.
A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

In such heterogeneous assortments, the most innocent person will lose the effect of his innocency.
Burke's Works, ii. 431.

To ASSO'T. v. a. [from sot; assoter, Fr.] To infatuate; to besot; a word out of use.

But whence they sprung, or how they were begot,
Uneath is to assure, uneath to weene,
That monstrous errour which doth some assot.
Spenser.

To ASSUA'GE. † v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain; Minsheu deduces it from adsuadere, or assuaviare; Junius, from ϸæϛ, sweet; from whence Skinner imagines arpæran might have been formed, Dr. Johnson says. But all these etymologists might have found the true original in the old Fr. assoager, or assouager, which, however, was not thought worth the notice either of them or of Johnson. V. Cotgrave, Kelham, &c. in V. assoager.]

1. To mitigate; to soften; to allay.

Refreshing winds the summer's heats assuage,
And kindly warmth disarms the winter's rage.
Addison.

2. To appease; to pacify.

Yet is his hate, his rancour ne'er the less,
Since nought assuageth malice when 'tis told.
Fairfax.

This was necessary for the securing the people from their fears, capable of being assuaged by no other means.
Clarendon.

Shall I, t' assuage
Their brutal rage,
The regal stem destroy?
Dryden's Albion.

3. To ease; as, the medicine assuages pain.

To ASSUA'GE. v. n. To abate.

God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged.
Gen. viii. 1.

ASSUA'GEMENT. † n. s. [old Fr. assouagement.] Mitigation; abatement of evil.

Tell me, when shall these weary woes have end,
Or shall their ruthless torment never cease?
But all my days in pining languor spend,
Without hope of assuagement or release.
Spenser, Sonnets.

ASSUA'GER. n. s. [from assuage.] One who pacifies or appeases.

ASSUA'SIVE. † adj. [from assuage.] Softening; mitigating.

If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,
Musick her soft assuasive voice applies.
Pope's St. Cecilia.

In pleasing visions and assuasive dreams,
O soothe my soul, and teach me how to lose thee.
Johnson's Irene.

O, tell how rapturous the joy, to melt
To melody's assuasive voice.
Warton, Pleasures of Melancholy, ver. 171.

To ASSU'BJECT. * v. a. [Fr. assoubjectir; an old English verb, preserved in Cotgrave, which might suggest to Shakspeare the kindred word assubjugate, given by Dr. Johnson.] To make subject; to bring under; to subdue.
Cotgrave.

To ASSU'BJUGATE. v. a. [subjugo, Lat.] To subject to: not in use.

This valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor by my will absubjugate his merit,
By going to Achilles.
Shakspeare.

ASSUEFA'CTION. † n. s. [assuefacio, Lat. assuefaction, old Fr.] The state of being accustomed to any thing.

Right and left, as parts inservient unto the motive faculty, are differenced by degrees from use and assuefaction, or according whereto the one grows stronger.
Brown, Vulgar Errours.

A'SSUETUDE. n. s. [assuetudo, Lat.] Accustomance; custom; habit.

We see that assuetude of things hurtful, doth make them lose the force to hurt.
Bacon, Natural History.

To ASSU'ME. v. a. [assumo, Lat.]

1. To take.

This when the various God had urg'd in vain,
He strait assum'd his native form again. Pope.

2. To take upon one's self.

With ravish'd ears,
The monarch hears,
Assumes the God,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres. Dryden.

3. To arrogate; to claim or seize unjustly.

4. To suppose something granted without proof.

In every hypothesis, something is allowed to be assumed.
Boyle.

5. To apply to one's own use; to appropriate.

His Majesty might well assume the complaint and expression of king David.
Clarendon.

To ASSU'ME. † v. n. To be arrogant; to claim more than is due.

That the king was assuming.
Burnet, Hist. of his own Times, an. 1687.

ASSU'MENT. * n. s. [Lat. assumentum, a patch or piece set on.]

This assument or addition Dr. Marshal says he never could find any where but in this Anglo-Saxonick translation.
Lewis, Hist. of Eng. Bibles, p.9.

ASSU'MER. n. s. [from assume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than is due.

Can man be wise in any course, in which he is not safe too? But can these high assumers and pretenders to reason, prove themselves so?
South.

ASSU'MING. part. adj. [from assume.] Arrogant; haughty.

His haughty looks, and his assuming air,
The son of Isis could no longer bear. Dryden.

This makes him over-forward in business, assuming in conversation, and peremptory in answers.
Collier.

ASSU'MING. * n. s. [from assume.] Presumption.

The vain assumings
Of some, quite worthless of her [Poesy's] sovereign wreaths. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

ASSU'MPSIT. † n. s. [assumo, Lat.] A voluntary promise made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: It contains any verbal promise made upon consideration.
Cowel.

Upon no terms, but an assumpsit.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, i. 2.

To ASSU'MPT. * v. a. [Fr. assumpter, to take up from below unto a high place; to take up into heaven, Cotgrave.] Not now in use.

The souls of such their worthies as were departed from human conversation, and were assumpted into the number of their gods.
Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p.115.

ASSU'MPT. * n. s. [Lat. assumptus.] That which is assumed, or supposed to be granted without proof.

The sum of all your assumpts, collected by yourself, is this.
Chillingworth, Ans. to Charity maint. by Cath. p. 60.

ASSU'MPTION.† n. s. [assumptio, Lat. assumption, Fr.]

1. The act of taking any thing to one's self.

The personal descent of God himself and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, more familiarly to insinuate his pleasure to us, was an enforcement beyond all methods of wisdom. Hammond, Fundamentals.

2. The supposition, or act of supposing of any thing without farther proof.

These by way of assumption, under the two general propositions, are intrinsically and naturally good or bad. Norris.

3. The thing supposed; a postulate.

Hold, says the Stoick, your assumption's wrong: I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryden, Juv. Sat. 10.

For the assumption, that Christ did such miraculous and supernatural works, to confirm what he said, we need only repeat the message sent by him to John the Baptist. South.

4. The taking up any person into heaven, which is supposed by the Romish church of the Blessed Virgin.

Upon the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the vespers. Stilling fleet.

Adam, after a certain period of years, would have been rewarded with an assumption to eternal felicity. Wake.

5. Simply, the act of taking.

To the nutrition of the body there are two essential conditions required, assumption and retention. Howell's Letters, i. v. 9.

6. Adoption; application.

It is evident that the prose psalms of our liturgy were chiefly consulted and copied, by the perpetaul assumptions of their words and combinations; many of the stanzas are literally nothing more than the prose verses put into rhyme. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 172.

ASSU'MPTIVE. adj. [assumptivus, Lat.] That is assumed.

ASSU'RANCE.† n. s. [assurance, French.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be, indeed, a lower and lesser thing than assurance, yet, as to all the purposes of a pious life, it may prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodness, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the assurance of an endless felicity. Tillotson.

2. Secure confidence; trust.

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
And vain assurance of mortality,
Which all so soon as it doth come to fight
Against spiritual foes, yields by and by.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.

Proof from the authority of man's judgment is not able to work that assurance which doth grow by a stronger proof. Hooker.

'Tis far off,
And rather like a dream than an assurance,
That my remembrance warrants. Shaksp. Tempest.

The obedient, and the man of practice, shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil course, that comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him. Tillotson.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.

Men whose consideration will relieve our modesty, and give us courage and assurance in the duties of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modesty; exemption from awe or fear.

My behaviour, ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection, ill hid, hath given you this last assurance. Sidney.

6. Freedom from vicious shame.

Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; security; sufficient reason for trust or belief.

The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance. Sidney.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial, so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and fickle assurances. Davies on Ireland.

None of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth. ———
—Then live, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance doubly sure,
And take a bond of fate: Thou shalt not live.
Shakspeare.

I must confess your offer is the best;
And let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own, else you must pardon me,
If you should die before him, where's her dower?
Shakspeare.

An assurance being passed through for a competent fine, hath come back again by reason of some oversight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.

They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach with more assurance than the wall itself. Knolles.

With all th' assurance innocence can bring,
Fearless without, because secure within;
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
This pomp, a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryd.

9. Sanguineness; readiness to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond.

10. Testimony of credit.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
And from some knowledge and assurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakspeare, K. L.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson.

11. Conviction.

Such an assurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillotson.

12. [In theology.] Security with respect to a future state; certainty of acceptance with God.

13. The same with insurance. See INSURANCE.

14. Security to make good the loss; "a takyng of assurance or sufficient suretie." Barret's Alvearie.

He said, Sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. 2.

And for your more assurance you shall have
What obligation you yourself will crave.
Sir J. Harrington's Epigrams.

To ASSU'RE.† v. a. [asseurer, Fr. from assecurare, low Lat. Formerly written adsure. "I adsure you I liked her so ill, and so far contrary to what she was praised, that I was woe that ever she came into England." K. Henry VIII. in Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. 1. Rec. p. 197.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promise.

So when he had assured them with many words, that he would restore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saving of their brethren. 2 Mac. xii.

2. To secure to another; to make firm.

So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them. Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. 1 John, iii. 19.

I revive
At this last sight; assured that man shall live
With all the creatures, and their seed preserve.
Milton.

4. To make secure: with of.

But what on earth can long abide in state?
Or who can him assure of happy day? Spenser.

And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Shakspeare.

5. Without of.

The sea-faring man will, in a storm, cast over some of his goods, to save and assure the rest. Bacon, Sp. in Parl. Eliz. 39.

6. To affiance; to betroth.

This diviner laid claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

ASSU'RED. part. adj. [from assure.]

1. Certain; indubitable; not doubted.

It is an assured experience, that flint laid about the bottom of a tree makes it prosper. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Certain; not doubting.

Young princes, close your hands,
——And your lips too; for, I am well assured
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.
Shakspeare, K. John.

As when by night the glass
Of Galilæo, less assured, observes
Imagin'd lands, and regions, in the moon. Milton.

3. Immodest; viciously confident.

ASSU'REDLY. adv. [from assured.] Certainly; indubitably.

They promis'd me eternal happiness,
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall assuredly.
Shakspeare.

God is absolutely good, and so, assuredly, the cause of all that is good; but, of any thing that is evil, he is no cause at all. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Assuredly he will stop our liberty, till we restore him his worship. South.

ASSU'REDNESS.† n. s. [from assured.] The state of being assured; certainty.

That which by Brocardus hath been delivered touching the holy land in particular, is by Columella in his books of Husbandry with no less assuredness averred, touching the earth in general. Hakewill's Apology, p. 142.

I being verily mad with anger, the Lord Bruce should thirst after my life with a kind of assuredness. Sir E. Sackville. Guard. No. 133.

ASSU'RER. n. s. [from assure.]

1. One that gives assurance.

2. One that gives security to make good any loss.

To ASSWA'GE. See ASSUAGE.

A'STERISK. n. s. [Gr. ἀστέρισκος.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star; as *.

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant. Grew.

A'STERISM.† n. s. [Gr. ἀστέρισμος.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry had filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each. Bentley, Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an asterism *; for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light. Dryden, Dufres.

ASTERI'TES.* n. s. A starry stone. See ASTROITE.

ASTE'RN. adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep.
Dryden.

To ASTE'RT.† v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle, Dr. Johnson says; but Spenser adopted it from our early writers: "But that ne shall not me asterte," Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1. "Not one of them all our hands shall astert," Mys. of Candlemas Day, 1512. Yet the glossary to the Shepherd's Calendar, from which the example is here taken, explains astert as meaning to befal unawares.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;
But knew we fools what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert;
No danger there the shepherd can astert.
Spenser, S. C.

A'STHMA.† n. s. [Gr. ἄσθμα. Asthma is placed among the hard words which are explained in Sylvester's Du Bartas, ed. 1621, p. 655.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax. Floyer on the Humours.

ASTHMA'TICAL. } adj. [from asthma.]
ASTHMA'TICK. } Troubled with an asthma.

In asthmatical persons, though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years. Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatick; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay. Floyer.

ASTHMA'TICK.* n. s. [Fr. asthmatique.] A person troubled with an asthma.

Asthmaticks cannot bear the air of hot rooms, and cities where there is a great deal of fuel burnt. Arbuthnot on Air.

ASTHE'NICK.* adj. [Fr. asthenique, Gr. a and σθένος.] Feeble; without power or force.

ASTHENO'LOGY.* n. s. [Gr. a and σθένος, joined with λόγος.] A description of weakness.

To ASTI'PULATE.* v. n. [Lat. astipulor.] To agree; to consent to. Dict.

All, but an hateful Epicurus, have astipulated to this truth. Bp. Hall, Invis. World, B. ii. § 1.

Several of Hippocrates' aphorisms, which alone are left in credit with these men, do astipulate the same. Robinson's Endoxa, p. 50.

ASTIPULA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. astipulatio.] Agreement, concurrence.

As for that glorious shew of antiquity wherewith C. E. hopes to blear his readers eyes, gracing himself herein with the astipulation of our reverend Jewell; I need not return any other answer than of his Beatus Rhenanus.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, ii. 8.

To ASTO'NE.* } v. a. [Fr. estonner, Sax.
To ASTO'NY. } ꝑtunian, to stun, to astonish. From this verb comes the participle astonied, which, Dr. Johnson observes, is used in the version of the Bible for astonished; and he cites one passage, when indeed he might have cited several. Mr. Boucher says, that there is no instance of this word being used actively. But he had forgotten Spenser, and had not looked into Huloet's old dictionary, where "To ASTONY," is defined, "to fear one, terrere, terrorem alicui inferre." The verb astony, is also in Minsheu, and in Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words, ed. 1656. in V. Benumm. To ASTONE, is found in Chaucer.] To terrify; to confound with fear or amazement.

No wonder is though that she be astoned,
To see so great a guest come in that place,
She never was to none such guestes woned.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, v. 8213, ed. Tyrwhitt.

The trembling fowl dismay'd with dreadfull sight
Of death, the which them almost overtooke,
Do hide themselves from her [the falcon's] astonying looke. Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 54.

Many were astonied at thee. Isaiah, lii. 14.

Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonied, and rose up in haste. Dan. iii. 24.

He reeled astonied: and withal the helmet fell off, he remaining bareheaded. Sidney, Arc. i. 23.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood and blank. Milton, P. L. ix. 890.

ASTO'NIEDNESS.* n. s. [from the verb.] The state of being astonished. Obsolete.

Astoniedness or dulness of the mind, not perceiving what is done. Barret, in V. Benumming.

To ASTO'NISH.† v. a. [estonner, Fr. from attonitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. But perhaps it is rather from the Sax. ꝑtunian. See ASTONE.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder; to amaze; to surprise; to stun.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspeare.

Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd,
And all around with inward horror gaz'd. Addis.

A genius universal as his theme,
Astonishing as chaos. Thomson.

ASTO'NISHINGLY.* adv. [from astonish.] In a surprising manner.

Events astonishingly happy.
Bp. Fleetwood, Serm. before Q. Anne.

We crossed a large tract of land astonishingly fruitful. Swinburne, Spain, Let. 14.

ASTO'NISHINGNESS. n. s. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment.

ASTO'NISHMENT.† n. s. [estonnement, Fr.]

1. Amazement; confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers. Sidney.

She esteemed this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration. South.

2. Cause or matter of astonishment.

Some impostors and counterfeits have been able to writhe and cast their bodies into strange forms and motions; yea, and others to bring themselves into trances and astonishments.
Bacon, Discourse to Sir H. Saville.

Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations, whither the Lord shall lead thee. Deut. xxviii. 37.

To ASTO'UND.† v. a. [estonner, Fr. ꝑtunian, Sax. Mr. Horne Tooke has here chosen the French etymology, but in respect to this word there can be little question I think of its Saxon origin. I might also refer to aꝑtunðian, to grieve, from the Icel. stunde. The Prompt. Parv. defines the word by quatio, to shake, Thomson uses it, with good effect, as a neuter verb; though Johnson thought the word nearly obsolete.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
By a strong siding champion, conscience.
Milton, Com.

The third is your soldier's face, a menacing and astounding face, that looks broad and big.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Though now they lie
Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
As we ere while, astounded and amaz'd.
Milton, P. L. i. 281.

To ASTO'UND.* v. n. [Sax. ꝑtunian.] To shake; to stun.

At first heard solemn o'er the verge of heaven
The tempest growls; but as it nearer comes,
And rolls its awful burden on the wind,
The lightnings flash a larger curve, and more
The noise astounds. Thomson, Sum. v. 1137.

ASTRA'DDLE. adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing. Dict.

A'STRAGAL. n. s. [ἀστράγαλος, the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Builder's Dict.

We see none of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator.

A'STRAL.† adj. [Fr. astral, from astrum, Lat.] Starry; belonging to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air;
Not in their natures simply good or ill;
But most subservient to bad spirits will. Dryden.

Some astral concordance or hidden harmony of spirits. More, Notes upon Psychozoia, p. 361.

ASTRA'Y.† adv. [Formerly written astrayed. "They wenten about astraid," Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7. the past participle aꝑtræȝeþ, as Mr. Tooke has observed, of the Sax. ꝑtræȝan, to scatter, to stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very evil led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not whether right he went, or else astray.
Spenser.

You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland.
Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heaven's wide pathless way. Milton.

To ASTRI'CT. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax; a word not so much used as constringe.

The solid parts were to be relaxed or astricted, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRI'CT.* adj. [Lat. astrictus.] Compendious.

An epitaph is a superscription, or an astrict pithy diagram. Weever, Funeral Mon.

ASTRI'CTION. n. s. [astrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astriction is in a substance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an astriction, but such an astriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them: and therefore such astriction is found in things of a harsh taste. Bacon.

Lenitive substances are proper for dry atrabilarian constitutions, who are subject to astriction of the belly and the piles. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRI'CTIVE.† adj. [from astrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

Bloodstone [is] a stone growing in Ethiopia and Arabia; of nature astrictive, stopping any issue of blood. Bullokar, Expos. of Hard Words.

ASTRI'CTORY. adj. [astrictorius, Lat.] Astringent; apt to bind. Dict.

ASTRI'DE. adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty, and ride astride. Hudibras.

I saw a place, where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing or having stars. Dict.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Carrying stars. Dict.

To ASTRI'NGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRI'NGENCY. n. s. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation.

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction: and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astringency, create horrour, that is, stimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRI'NGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative: it is used sometimes of tastes which seem to contract the mouth.

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up closer. Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures, for it is sweet and yet astringent. Bacon.

The juice is very astringent, and therefore of slow motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason a strengthening and astringent diet often conduceth to this purpose. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRI'NGENT.* n. s. [from the adjective.] An astringent medicine.

In medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ASTRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [from ἄστρον and γράφω.] The science of describing the stars. Dict.

A'STROITE.* n. s. [Fr. astroite, Gr. ἀστεροις, starry, from ἄστρον.] A stone, sparkling like a star.

In the arable grounds towards Barton, lying on a bed of stone, has been found a species of the astroite, or starry-stone, very beautiful, deeply intagliated or engraven like a seal. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 25.

A'STROLABE.† n. s. [Fr. astrolabe, of ἀστὴρ and λαβεῖν, to take.]

1. An instrument chiefly used for taking the altitude of the pole, the sun or stars, at sea.

Liv'd Tycho now, struck with this ray, which shone
More bright i' the morn than others beam at noon,
He'd take his astrolabe, and seek out here
What new star 'twas did gild our hemisphere.
Dryden, Death of Lord Hastings, ver. 45.

2. A stereographick projection of the circles of the sphere upon the plain of some great circle. Chambers.

She sente for him, and he came;
With him his astrolabe he name,
With points and circles merveilous,
Which was of fine gold precious.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. s. [astrologus, Lat. from ἄστρον and λόγος.]

1. One that, supposing the influences of the stars to have a casual power, professes to foretell or discover events depending on these influences.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both christians and heathens. Dryden.

Astrologers, that future fates foreshew. Pope.

I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently used for one that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astrologer, by perspective glasses, hath found in the stars many things unknown to the ancients. Ralegh.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. s. [from astrology.] The same with astrologer.

The twelve houses of heaven, in the form which astrologians use. Camden.

The stars, they say, cannot dispose,
No more than can the astrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. } adj. [from astrology.]
ASTROLO'GICK. }

1. Professing astrology.

Some seem a little astrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No astrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been banish'd or in chains.
Dryden.

2. Relating to astrology.

Astrological prayers seem to me to be built on as good reason as the predictions. Stilling fleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the astrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

ASTROLO'GICALLY.† adv. [from astrology.] In an astrological manner; with an astrological meaning.

Plutarch interprets astrologically that tale of Mars and Venus. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 452.

Some are astrologically well disposed, who are morally highly vicious. Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 7.

In Lambeth Marsh at the same time lived one Captain Bubb, who resolved horary questions astrologically. Lilly, Hist. p. 36.

To ASTRO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from astrology.] To practise astrology.

ASTRO'LOGY. n. s. [astrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the stars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and false.

I know the learned think of the art of astrology, that the stars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. s. [from ἄστρον, a star, and νόμος, a rule or law.] One that studies the celestial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the astronomers speak of, in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

Astronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the sun. Locke.

The old and new astronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain.
Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from astronomy.]
ASTRONO'MICK. } Belonging to astronomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the sun's progress through the zodiack, they registrate and set them down in their astronomical canons. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Can he not pass an astronomick line,
Or dreads the sun th' imaginary sign,
That he should ne'er advance to either pole?
Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICALLY.† adv. [from astronomical.] In an astronomical manner.

Images astronomically framed under certain constellations to preserve from several inconveniences. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 1.

This was the figure of the heavens when they were first formed, the same being astronomically calculated and erected according to Tycho's tables. Gregory's Posthuma, (1650) p. 213.

To ASTRO'NOMIZE.* v. n. [from astronomy.] To study astronomy.

The old ascetick Christians found a paradise in a desert, and with little converse on earth held a conversation in heaven; thus they astronomized in caves; and, though they beheld not the stars, had the glory of heaven before them. Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 9.

ASTRO'NOMY. n. s. [ἀστρονομία from ἄστρον, a star, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical science teaching the knowledge of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, distances, periods, eclipses, and order. Pythagoras taught that the earth and planets turn round the sun, which stands immoveable in the center. From the time of Pythagoras, astronomy sunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt, and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain; and restored this science to Europe. Chambers.

To this must be added the understanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and astronomy. Cowley.

A'STROSCOPY. n. s. [ἀστὴρ a star, and σκοπέω, to view.] Observation of the stars. Dict.

A'STRO-THEOLOGY. n. s. [from astrum, a star, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the observation of the celestial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the sun, I shew in the preface of my Astro-Theology.
Derham, Physico-Theology.

ASTRU'T.* adv. [from a and strut. See STRUT. This is a useful old Eng. word, and is found in the Prompt. Parv. of 1510, where it is defined strowtingly, and translated turgidè.] In a swelling manner.

To ASTU'N.* v. a. [Sax. ꝑtunian.] To stun.

The guns astun, with sounds' rebounds from shore,
The soldiers' ears.
Mir. for Mag. Niccols's Eng. Eliz. p. 863.

On the solid ground
He fell rebounding; breathless and astunn'd,
His trunk extended lay.
Somerville, Rural Games, c. ii.

A'STUTE.* adj. [Lat. astutus, Fr. astut.] Cunning; penetrating; sly.

We terme those most astute, which are most versute. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. p. 168.

ASU'NDER.† adv. [Goth. sundr, sundro, ąrunꝺꝑan, Sax.] Apart; separately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go asunder.
Spenser on Ireland.

Sense thinks the planets spheres not much asunder;
What tells us then their distance is so far?
Davies.

Greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us asunder.
Milton, P. L.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worse;
Which, when asunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far asunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and steel they meet again.
Dryden, Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued asunder, and in single corpuscles, and that which was amassed and concreted into nodules, subsided. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ASWO'ON.* adv. [Sax. ąꝑunan, to swoon; ąꝑuanian, to faint, ąꝑuonꝺ, languid, weakened. See Lye's Sax. Goth. Dict. and Tooke's Divers. of Purley, vol. i. p. 471.] In a swoon.

And with this worde she fell to grounde
Aswoune, and there she laid astounde.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 4.

ASY'LUM.† n. s. [Lat. from the Gr. ἄσυλον, from α, not, and συλέω, to pillage. Asylum is placed among the hard words, which are explained in Sylvester's Du Bartas, ed. 1621, p. 654.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a sanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and security.

So sacred was the church to some, that it had the right of an asylum or sanctuary.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

ASY'MMETRAL.* adj. [from asymmetry.] Not agreeing.

Long before this time the church had become asymmetral. More, Against Idolatry, ch. 8.

ASYMME'TRICAL.* adj. [from asymmetry.] Differing.

Asymmetrical or unsociable, that is, such as we see not how to reconcile with other things evidently and confessedly true.
Boyle, in Norris on Reason and Faith, ch. 3.

ASY'MMETRY. n. s. [from α, without, and συμμέτρια, symmetry.]

1. Contrariety to symmetry; disproportion.

The asymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew.

2. This term is sometimes used in mathematicks, for what is more usually called incommensurability; when between two quantities there is no common measure.

A'SYMPTOTE.† n. s. [from α, priv. συν, with, and πίπτω, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Asymptotes are right lines which approach nearer and nearer to some curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite distance. Chambers.

The everlasting approximation and impossible concourse of asymptots. Bp. Seth Ward's Apology for the Mysteries of the Gospel, 1673. p. 26.

Asymptote-lines, though they may approach still nearer together, till they are nearer than the least assignable distance, yet, being still produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew.

ASYMPTO'TICAL. adj. [from asymptote.] Curves are said to be asymptotical, when they continually approach, without a possibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON.† n. s. [ἀσύνδετον, of α, priv. and συνδέω, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a sentence; as in veni, vidi, vici, et is left out.

Asyndeton is a figure, which keeps the parts of our speech together without help of any conjunctions. — "Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men." 1 Thess. v. 14. "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." S. Matt. x. 8. When matters require brevity, this figure is chiefly to be used, or when we signify the quick dispatch of a deed.
Peacham's Garden of Eloquence, sign. I. iiii.

AT.† prep. [Goth. at, æt, Saxon.]

1. At before a place, notes the nearness of the place; as, a man is at the house before he is in it.

This custom continued among many, to say their prayers at fountains. Stillingfleet.

2. At before a word signifying time, notes the co-existence of the time with the event: the word time is sometimes included in the adjective: we commonly say at a minute, at an hour, on a day, in a month.

We thought it at the very first a sign of cold affection. Hooker.

How frequent to desert him, and at last
To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds. Milton.

At the same time that the storm beats upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have most weakened the common enemy, and, at the same time, enriched ourselves. Swift.

3. At before a causal word signifies nearly the same as with, noting that the event accompanies or immediately succeed the action of the cause.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heav'n giv'n his hand,
They presently amend. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Ev'n at this news he dies. Shaks. K. John.

Much at the sight was Adam in his heart

High o'er their heads a mouldering rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.
Dryden.

4. At before a superlative adjective implies in the state; as, at best, in the state of most perfection, &c.

Consider any man as to his personal powers, they are not great; for, at greatest, they must still be limited. South.

We bring into the world with us a poor, needy, uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.

5. At before a person, is seldom used otherwise than ludicorusly; as, he longed to be at him, that is, to attack him.

6. At before a substantive sometimes signifies the particular condition or circumstances of the person; as, at peace, in a state of peace.

Under pardon,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmless mildness. Shaksp.

It bringeth the treasure of a realm into a few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end of the game most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

Hence walk'd the fiend at large in spacious field. Milton.

The rest, for whom no lot is yet decreed,
May run in pastures, and at pleasure feed.
Dryden, Virgil.

Deserted, at his utmost need,
By those his former bounty fed.
Dryden, St. Cecilia.

What hinder'd either in their native soil,
At ease to reap the harvest of their toil.
Dryden, Fables.

Wise men are sometimes over-borne, when they are taken at a disadvantage. Collier of Confidence.

These have been the maxims they have been guided by: take these from them, and they are perfectly at a loss, their compass and pole-star then are gone, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.

One man manages four horses at once, and leaps from the back of another at full speed.
Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.

They will not let me be at quiet in my bed, but pursue me to my very dreams. Swift.

7. At before a substantive sometimes marks employment or attention.

We find some arrived to that sottishness, as to own roundly what they would be at. South.

How d'ye find yourself, says the doctor to his patient? A little while after he is at it again, with a pray how d'ye find your body?
L'Estrange.

But she who well enough knew what,
Before he spoke, he would be at,
Pretended not to apprehend. Hudibras.

The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.

8. At is sometimes the same with furnished with, after the French a.

Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him naked foil a man at arms. Shaks.

9. At sometimes notes the place where any thing is, or acts.

Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet.
Shakspeare.

He that in tracing the vessels began at the heart

though he thought not at all of a circulation; yet made he the first true step towards the discovery. Grew.

To all you ladies now at land
We men at sea indite. Buckhurst.

Their various news I heard, of love and strife,
Of storms at sea, and travels on the shore. Pope.

10. At sometimes signifies in immediate consequence of.

Impeachments at the prosecution of the house of commons, have received their determinations in the house of lords. Hale.

11. At marks sometimes the effect proceeding from an act.

12. At sometimes is nearly the same as in, noting situation; as he was at the bottom, or top of the hill.

She hath been known to come at the head of these rascals, and beat her lover. Swift.

13. At sometimes marks the occasion, like on.

Others, with more helpful care,
Cry'd out aloud, Beware, brave youth, beware!
At this he turn'd, and, as the bull drew near,
Shunn'd, and receiv'd him on his pointed spear. Dryden.

14. At sometimes seems to signify in the power of, or obedient to.

But thou of all the kings, Jove's care below,
Art least at my command, and most my foe. Dryden.

15. At sometimes notes the relation of a man to an action.

He who makes pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier of Friendship.

16. At sometimes imports the manner of an action.

One warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden, Fables.

Not with less ruin than the Bajan mole,
At once comes tumbling down. Dryden, Æneid.

17. At, like the French chez, means sometimes application to, or dependence on, Dr. Johnson says; but Mr. Tooke denies the assimilation of chez.

The worst authors might endeavour to please us, and in that endeavour deserve something at our hands. Pope.

18. At all. In any manner; in any degree.

Nothing more true than what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

A'TABAL. n. s. A kind of tabour used by the Moors.

Children shall beat our atabals and drums,
And all the noisy trades of war no more
Shall wake the peaceful morn. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

ATARA'XIA. } n. s. [ἀταραξία.] Exemption from vexation; tranquillity.
A'TARAXY. }

The scepticks affected an indifferent equiponderous neutrality, as the only means to their artaraxia, and freedom from passionate disturbances. Granville, Scepsis.

A'TAXY.* n. s. [Gr. ἀταξία, old Fr. ataxie.] Disturbance; confusion.

They [the fallen angels] being all embodied spirits, that is, vitally united to matter, they must of necessity be capable both of pain and pleasure, the sense of which is more or less acute and vigorous according to either the tenuity or grossness of their bodies; and by consequence they are liable and obnoxious to harm and injury from those of their own society; which, considering the mischievousness of their natures and dispositions, (each one's particular lusts being the grand rule and measure of his actions,) would certainly breed an infinite ataxy and confusion amongst them, and at last the ruin and destruction of their kingdom, if not prevented by some external restraint and discipline. Halliwell's Melampronœa, p. 16.

Three ways of church-government I have heard of, and no more; the Episcopal, the Presbyterial, and that new-born bastard Independency: "Non datur quartum." The last of these is nothing but a confounding ataxy, rent upon rent, and a schism of schisms, until all church community be torn into atoms. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 141.

ATE. The preterite of eat. See To EAT.

And by his side, his steed the grassy forage ate. Spenser.

Even our first parents ate themselves out of paradise; and Job's children junketted and feasted together often. South.

ATE'LLAN.* n. s. [old Fr. atellanes, espéce de piéce dramatique, Lacombe; from Atella, an ancient town of Campania in Italy, where farces, differing from low comedy only by greater licentiousness, originated.] Dramatick representation, satirical or licentious.

Many old poets — did write fescennines, atellans, and lascivious songs. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 414.

Love-stories, plays, comedies, atellans, jigs. Ibid. p. 542.

ATE'LLAN.* adj. [Lat. atellanus.] Relating to the dramas at Atella.

Their Fescennin, and Atellan way of wit was in early days prohibited. Shaftsbury.

ATHANA'SIAN.* n. s. He who espoused, in the early ages of Christianity, the doctrine and opinions of Athanasius.

Upon the revival of the Arian controversy in Gaul, under the influence of the Burgundian kings, it was obvious to call one side Athanasians, and the other side Arians; and so also to name the orthodox faith the Athanasian faith, as the other Arian. Waterland, Hist. of the Athan. Creed.

ATHANA'SIAN.* adj. Relating to the Creed of St. Athanasius, as it is denominated in our Liturgy; and to the principles of that person.

About the year 570, it [the Creed] became famous enough to be commented upon, like the Lord's Prayer, and Apostles' Creed, and together with them. All this while, and perhaps for several years lower, it had not yet acquired the name of the Athanasian Faith, but was simply styled the Catholick Faith. But before 670, Athanasius's admired name came in to recommend and adorn it; being in itself also an excellent system of the Athanasian principles of the Trinity and incarnation, in opposition chiefly to Arians, Macedonians, and Apollinarians. Waterland, Hist. of the Athan. Creed.

ATHA'NOR. n. s. [a chymical term, borrowed from ἀθάνατος; or, as others think, תנור.] A digesting furnace, to keep heat for some time; so that it may be augmented or diminished at pleasure, by opening or shutting some apertures made on purpose with sliders over them, called registers. Quincy.

A'THEISM. n. s. [from atheist. It is only of two syllables in poetry.] The disbelief of a God.

God never wrought miracles to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. Bacon.

It is the common interest of mankind, to punish all those who would seduce men to atheism. Tillotson.

A'THEIST.† n. s. [Gr. ἄθεος, without God. Milton is the earliest authority cited by Dr. Johnson; and it appears that the word was not common before Milton wrote, atheist being placed among the hard words, which are explained in Sylvester's Du. Bart. ed. 1621, p. 655.] One that denies the existence of God.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly! to the trains, and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton, P. L.

Though he were really a speculative atheist, yet if he would but proceed rationally, he could not however be a practical atheist, nor live without God in this world. South.

Atheist, use thine eyes,
And having view'd the order of the skies,
Think, if thou canst, that matter blindly hurl'd,
Without a guide, should frame this wond'rous world. Creech.

No atheist, as such, can be a true friend, an affectionate relation, or a loyal subject. Bentley.

A'THEIST. adj. Atheistical; denying God.

Nor stood unmindful Abdiel to annoy
The atheist crew. Milton, P. L.

ATHEI'STICAL. adj. [from atheist.] Given to atheism; impious.

Men are atheistical, because they are first vicious; and question the truth of Christianity, because they hate the practice. South.

ATHEI'STICALLY. adv. [from atheistical.] In an atheistical manner.

Is it not enormous, that a divine, hearing a great sinner talk atheistically, and scoff profanely at religion, should, instead of vindicating the truth, tacitly approve the scoffer? South.

I entreat such as are atheistically inclined to consider these things. Tillotson.

ATHE'ISTICALNESS. n. s. [from atheistical.] The quality of being atheistical.

Lord, purge out of all hearts profaneness and atheisticalness. Hammond, Fund.

ATHEI'STICK. adj. [from atheist.] Given to atheism.

This argument demonstrated the existence of a Deity, and convinced all atheistick gainsayers. Ray on the Creation.

To A'THEIZE.* v. n. [from Gr. ἄθεος.] To talk or argue like an unbeliever.

All manner of atheists whatsoever, and those of them who most pretend to reason and philosophy, may in some sense be justly styled both enthusiasts and fanaticks: Forasmuch as they are not led, or carried into this way of atheizing by any clear dictates of their reason or understanding; but only by an ὁρμη αλογος, a certain blind and irrational impetus. Cudworth, Int. Sys. p. 134.

A'THEL, ATHELING, ADEL, and ÆTHEL. from adel, noble, Germ. So Æthelred is noble for counsel; Æthelard, a noble genius; Æthelbert, eminently noble; Æthelward, a noble protector. Gibson's Camden.

ATHEOLO'GIAN.* n. s. [from a and theologian.] One who is the opposite to a theologian.

They of your society, [Jesuits,] as they took their original from a soldier, so they are the only atheologians, whose heads entertain no other object but the tumult of realms; whose doctrine is nothing but confusion and bloodshed. Hayward's Ans. to Dolman, ch. 9.

A'THEOUS.† adj. [Gr. ἄθεος. The word, expressing the same thing, was atheal, till the beginning of the seventeenth century. See Quodlibets of Religion and State, 4to. 1602, in which it repeatedly occurs. To Bishop Hall, and to Milton, the establishment of atheous, more consonant to the etymology, belongs.] Atheistick; godless.

Thy Father, who is holy, wise, and pure,
Suffers the hypocrite or atheous priest
To tread his sacred courts. Milton, P. R.

A whole year was found little enough for the wife to mourn for her husband departed; and so is still amongst the very Chineses, though atheous Pagans. Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. iv. 7.

That monster of impious sacrilege, of atheous profaneness. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

ATHERO'MA. n.s. [ἀθέρωμα, from ἄθηρα, pap or pulse.] A species of wen, which neither causes pain, discolours the skin, nor yields easily to the touch.

If the matter forming them, resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if it be like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatoma. Sharp.

ATHERO'MATOUS. adj. [from atheroma.] Having the qualities of an atheroma, or curdy wen.

Feeling the matter fluctuating, I thought it atheromatous. Wiseman, Surgery.

ATHI'RST.† adj. [from a and thirst.] Thirsty; in want of drink.

When thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn. Ruth, ii. 9.

When saw we thee an hungred, or athirst? St. Matt. xxv. 44.

With scanty measure then supply their food;
And when athirst restrain them from the flood. Dryden.

A'THLETE.* n. s. [Gr. ἀθλητης.] A contender for victory.

David's combat compared with that of Dioxippus, the Athenian athlete. Delany, Life of David.

Having opposed to him a vigorous athlete. A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sent.

ATHLE'TICK.† adj. [Fr. athletique, Lat. athleta, Gr. ἀθλητὴς, a wrestler.]

1. Belonging to wrestling.

The athletick diet was of pulse, alphiton, maza, barley, and water; whereby they were advantaged sometimes to an exquisite state of health. Sir T. Brown's Misc. Tracts, p. 17.

For the judiciary combats, as also for common athletick exercises, they [the Goths] formed an amphitheatrical circus of rude stones: "quædam [saxa] circos claudebant, in quibus gigantes et pugiles duello strenuè decertabant," Worm. p. 62. Warton, Hist. Eng. i. Diss. 1.

2. Strong of body; vigorous; lusty; robust.

Seldom shall one see in rich families that athletick soundness and vigour of constitution, which is seen in cottages, where nature is cook, and necessity caterer. South.

Science distinguishes a man of honour from one of those athletick brutes, whom undeservedly we call heroes. Dryden.

ATHWA'RT. prep. [from a and thwart.] See THWART.

1. Across; transverse to any thing.

Themistocles made Xerxes post out of Grecia, by giving out a purpose to break his bridge athwart the Hellespont. Bacon, Ess.

Execrable shape!
That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreated front athwart my way.
Milton, P. L.

2. Through: this is not proper.

Now, athwart the terrors that thy vow
Has planted round thee, thou appear'st more fair.
Addison.

ATHWA'RT. adv. à tort.

1. In a manner vexatious and perplexing; crossly.

All athwart there came
A post from Wales loaden with heavy news.
Shakspeare.

2. Wrong; à travers.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

ATI'LT.† adv. [from a and tilt, or at tilt.]

1. In the manner of a tilter; with the action of a man making a thrust at an antagonist.

In the city Tours,
Thou ran'st atilt, in honour of my love,
And stol'st away the ladies hearts from France.
Shakspeare.

Oh, how my fancies run at tilt.
Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta, i. 3.

To run atilt at men, and wield
Their naked tools in open field. Hudibras.

2. In the posture of a barrel raised or tilted behind, to make it run out.

Such a man is always atilt; his favours come hardly from him. Spectator.

Speak; if not, this stand
Of royal blood shall be abroach, atilt and run
Even to the lees of honour.
Beaum. and Fl. Phil. v. 1.

ATLANTE'AN.* [Lat. atlanteus.] Resembling Atlas, who is feigned to bear up the world.

Sage he stood
With atlantean shoulders fit to bear,
The weight of mightiest monarchies.
Milton, P. L. ii. 306.

What more than Atlantean shoulder props
The incumbent load.
Young, Night Thoughts, 9.

ATLA'NTICK.* adj. [Lat. Atlanticus.] Relating to that part of the ocean, which lies between Europe and Africa on the one side, and America on the other.

Hesperus, the glory of the west,
The brightest star that from his burning crest
Lights all on this side the Atlantick seas.
B. Jonson, Masques.

The gilded car of day,
His glowing axle doth allay,
In the steep Atlantick stream.
Milton, Comus, v. 97.

A'TLAS.† n. s.

1. A collection of maps, so called probably from a picture of Atlas supporting the heavens, prefixed to some collection.

2. A large square folio; so called from these folios, which, containing maps, were made large and square.

3. Sometimes the supporters of a building.

4. A rich kind of silk or stuff made for women's cloaths. [Germ. atlas, satin.]

I have the conveniency of buying Dutch atlasses with gold and silver, or without. Spectator.

5. A term applied to paper; atlas-fine, and atlas-ordinary.

The preservation of this faith is of more consequence than the duties on red lead, or white-lead, or on broken glass, or atlas-ordinary, or demy-fine, or blue royal. Burke on Amer. Tax.

A'TMOSPHERE. n. s. [ἄτμος, vapour, and σφαῖρα, a sphere.]

The exteriour part of this our habitable world is the air, or atmosphere; a light, thin, fluid, or springy body, that encompasses the solid earth on all sides. Locke.

Immense the whole excited atmosphere
Impetuous rushes o'er the sounding world.
Thomson.

ATMOSPHE'RICAL. adj. [from atmosphere.] Consisting of the atmosphere; belonging to the atmosphere.

We did not mention the weight of the incumbent atmospherical cylinder as a part of the weight resisted. Boyle.

A'TOM. n. s. [atomus, Lat. ἄτομος.]

1. Such a small particle as cannot be physically divided; and these are the first rudiments, or the component parts of all bodies. Quincy.

Innumerable minute bodies are called atoms, because, by reason of their perfect solidity, they were really indivisible. Ray.

See plastick nature working to this end,
The single atoms each to other tend,
Attract, attracted to, the next in place,
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace.
Pope.

2. Any thing extremely small.

It is as easy to count atoms, as to resolve the propositions of a lover. Shakspeare, As you like it.

ATO'MICAL. adj. [from atom.]

1. Consisting of atoms.

Vitrified and pellucid bodies are clearer in their continuities, than in powders and atomical divisions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Relating to atoms.

A vacuum [is] another principal doctrine of the atomical philosophy. Bentley, Serm.

A'TOMISM.* n. s. [Fr. atomisme.] The doctrine of atoms.

A'TOMIST.† n. s. [Fr. atomiste.] One that holds the atomical philosophy, or doctrine of atoms.

The atomists, who define motion to be a passage from one place to another, what do they more than put one synonymous word for another? Locke.

Now can judicious atomists conceive,
Chance to the sun could his just impulse give.
Blackmore.

A'TOMLIKE.* adj. [from atom and like.] Resembling atoms.

They all would vanish, and not dare appeare,
Who atom-like when their sun shined cleare,
Danc'd in his beame. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

A'TOMY.† n. s.

1. An obsolete word for atom.

Drawn with a team of little atomies,
Athwart men's noses, as they be asleep. Shaksp.

2. An abbreviation of anatomy; meaning a carcass-like, a meagre person; proper in the mouth of the speaker, Shakspeare's hostess, who uses many other strange words.

You starved blood-hound!—Thou atomy, thou!
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To ATO'NE.† v. n. [from at one, as the etymologists remark, to be at one, is the same as to be in concord. This derivation is much confirmed by the passage of Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says, and appears to be the sense still retained in Scotland. He might have added, that this derivation may be traced to higher authority. "If gentilmen, or other of that contree were wroth, she wolde bringen hem at one." Chaucer, Clerk's Tale. "And the next day, he shewed himself unto them, as they strove, and would have set them at one again." Acts, vii. 26. See also To ATONE, v. a. This word is often written, in our elder language, ATTONE.]

1. To agree; to accord.

He and Aufidius can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariety. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. To stand as an equivalent for something; and particularly used of expiatory sacrifices; with the particle for before the thing for which something else is given.

From a mean stock the pious Decii came;
Yet such their virtues, that their loss alone,
For Rome and all our legions did atone.
Dryden, Juv.

The good intention of a man of weight and worth, or a real friend, seldom atones for the uneasiness produced by his grave representations. Locke.

Let thy sublime meridian course
For Mary's setting rays atone:
Our lustre, with redoubled force,
Must now proceed from thee alone. Prior.

His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins imbru'd;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood.
Pope.

To ATO'NE. † v. a.

1. To reduce to concord; to appease.

If any contention arose, he knew none fitter to be their judge to atone and take up their quarrels but himself. Drummond.

If he had been cool enough to tell us that, there had been some hope to attone you; but he seems so implacably enraged. B. Jonson, Epicœne.

If the duke shall once but permit himself to be atoned and won by our united applications, not only our afflicted brethren, but we ourselves, shall reap the noble and abounding harvest and reward of this laborious undertaking. Milton, Letters of State.

I have been attoning two most wrangling neighbours;
They had no money, therefore I made even. Beaum. and Fl. Sp. Cur. iii. 4.

Endeavour is the child of hope; and we attempt not to attone one whom we conclude implacable. Decay of Christ. Piety, p. 182.

The sweating image shakes his head, but he
With mumbled prayers atones the deity. Dryden, Juv. Sat. 6.

2. To expiate; to answer for.

Soon should yon boasters cease their haughty strife,
Or each atone his guilty love with life. Pope.

ATO'NE.* } adv. At one; together; at ATTO'NE. } once.

So beene they both atone, and doen upreare
Their beavers bright each other for to greet. Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 29.

All his senses seem'd bereft attone. Ibid. st. 42.

And home they bringen in a royall throne,
Crowned as king; and his queen attone
Was lady Flora. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May, v. 30.

ATO'NEMENT. † n. s. [from atone. Formerly written attonement.]

1. Agreement; concord; reconciliation. Not now in use.

He seeks to make atonement
Between the Duke of Glo'ster and your brothers. Shakspeare.

A fair moderation and civil attonement may be mediated between ladies' countenances and their consciences, by the intercession of judicious and religious persons. Dp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 135.

Offer in one hand the peaceful olive
Of concord, or if that can be denied,
By powerful intercession in the other
Carry the Hermian rod, and force attonement.
Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn, v. i.

2. Expiation; expiatory; equivalent; with for.

And the Levites were purified, and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them. Numbers.

Surely it is not a sufficient atonement for the writers, that they profess loyalty to the government, and sprinkle some arguments in favour of the dissenters, and, under the shelter of popular politicks and religion, undermine the foundations of all piety and virtue. Swift.

ATO'NER.* n. s. [from atone.] One who reconciles, who makes friends.

ATO'NICK.* adj. [from atony.] Wanting tone.

A'TONY.* n. s. [Fr. atonie, from Gr. a and τόνος.] In medicine, want of tone or elasticity.

ATRABILA'RIAN.† adj. [old Fr. atrabiliare, from atra bilis, black choler.] Melancholy, replete with black choler.

The atrabilarian constitution, or a black, viscous, pitchy, consistence of the fluids, makes all secretions difficult and sparing. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ATRABILA'RIOUS. adj. [from atra bilis, black choler.] Melancholick.

The blood, deprived of its due proportion of serum, or finer and more volatile parts, is atrabilarious; whereby it is rendered gross, black, unctuous, and earthy. Quincy.

From this black adust state of the blood, they are atrabilarious. Arbuthnot on Air.

ATRABILA'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from atrabilarious.] The state of being melancholy; repletion with melancholy.

ATRAME'NTAL. adj. [from atramentum, ink, Lat.] Inky; black.

If we enquire in what part of vitriol this atramental and denigrating condition lodgeth, it will seem especially to lie in the more fixed salt thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ATRAMEN'TOUS.† adj. [from atramentum, ink, Lat.] Inky; black.

I am not satisfied, that those black and atramentous spots, which seem to represent them, are ocular. Brown.

Whenever provoked by anger or labour, an atramentous quality, of most malignant nature, was seen to distil from his lips. Swift, Battle of the Books.

A'TRED.* adj. [Lat. ater.] Tinged with a black colour.

It cannot express any other humour than yellow choler, or atred, or a mixture of both. Whitaker's Blood of the Grape, p. 76.

ATRO'CIOUS.† adj. [atrox, Lat. atroce, Fr.] Wicked in a high degree; enormous; horribly criminal.

An advocate is necessary, and therefore audience ought not to be denied him in defending causes, unless it be an atrocious offence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ATRO'CIOUSLY.† adv. [from atrocious.] In an atrocious manner; with great wickedness.

As to my publishing your letters, I hold myself fully justified by the injury you have done me by abusing me infamously and atrociously. Lowth to Warburton, Let. 2.

ATRO'CIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from atrocious.] The quality of being enormously criminal.

He [Herod] thought of John's character, the atrociousness of the murder, and the opinion which the world would entertain of the murderer. Horne, Life of St. John Bapt. p. 218.

The atrociousness of the crime made all men look with an evil eye upon the claim of any privilege, which might prevent the severest justice. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

ATRO'CITY.† n. s. [old Fr. atrocité, Lat. atrocitas.] Horrible wickedness; excess of wickedness.

I never recall it to mind, without a deep astonishment of the very horrour and atrocity of the fact in a Christian court. Wotton.

They desired justice might be done upon offenders, as the atrocity of their crimes deserved. Clarendon.

A'TROPHY.† n. s. [old Fr. atrophie, Gr. ἄτροφια.] Want of nourishment; a disease in which what is taken at the mouth cannot contribute to the support of the body.

Pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milton.

As if (according to the fable) the arm should resolve to work for the belly no longer, but for itself; a folly quickly punishing itself with atrophy and consumption. Whitlock's Mann. of the Eng. (1654.) p. 374.

The mouths of the lacteals may be shut up by a viscid mucus, in which case the chyle passeth by stool, and the person falleth into an atrophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ATTA'CH. v. a. [attacher, Fr.]

1. To arrest; to take or apprehend by commandment or writ. Cowel.

Eftsoons the guard, which on his state did wait,
Attach'd that traitor false, and bound him strait. Spenser.

The tower was chosen, that if Clifford should accuse great ones, they might, without suspicion or noise, be presently attached. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Bohemia greets you,
Desires you to attach his son, who has
His dignity and duty both cast off. Shakspeare.

2. Sometimes with the particle of, but not in present use.

You, lord archbishop, and you, lord Mowbray,
Of capital treason I attach you both. Shakspeare.

3. To seize in a judicial manner.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants goods at Bourdeaux. Shakspeare.

All the nobility here could not attain the same favour as Wood did. Swift.
2. To overtake; to come up with: a sense now little in use.
The earl hoping to have overtaken the Scottish king, and to have given him battle; but not attaining him in time, set down before the castle of Aton.
Bacon.
3. To come to; to enter upon.
Canaan he now attains; I see his tents
4. To reach; to equal.
So the first precedent, if it be good, is seldom attained by imitation. Bacon.

To ATTA'IN. v. n.
1. To come to a certain state: with to.
Milk will soon separate itself into a cream, and a more serous liquor, which, after twelve days, attains to the highest degree of acidity.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. To arrive at.
Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high; I can not attain unto it. Psalm cxxxix. 6.
To have knowledge in most objects of contemplation, is what the mind of one man can hardly attain unto. Locke.

ATTA'IN. n. s. [from the verb.] The thing attained: attainment: a word not in use.
Crowns and diadems, the most splendid terrene attains, are akin to that which to-day is in the field, and to-morrow is cut down. Glanville's Scepsis.

ATTA'INABLE.† adj. [old Fr. attainable.] That may be attained; procurable.
He wilfully neglects the obtaining unspeakable good, which he is persuaded is certain and attainable. Tillotson.
None was proposed that appeared certainly attainable, or of value enough. Rogers.

ATTA'INABLENESS. n. s. [from attainable.] The quality of being attainable.
Persons become often enamoured of outward beauty, without any particular knowledge of its possessor, or its attainableness by them. Cheyne.

ATTA'INDER.† n. s. [old Fr. attainder, jugement de condamnation. Lacombe.]
1. The act of attainting in law; conviction of a crime. See To ATTAINT.
The ends in calling a parliament were chiefly to have the attainders of all his party reversed; and, on the other side, to attaint by parliament his enemies. Bacon.
2. Taint; sully of character.
So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakspeare.

ATTA'INMENT. n. s. [from attain.]
1. That which is attained; acquisition.
We dispute with men that count it a great attainment to be able to talk much, and little to the purpose. Glanville.
Our attainments are mean, compared with the perfection of the universe. Grew.
2. The act or power of attaining.
The Scripture must be sufficient to imprint in us the character of all things necessary for the attainment of eternal life. Hooker.
Education in extent, more large, of time shorter, and of attainment more certain. Milton.
Government is an art above the attainment of an ordinary genius. South.
If the same actions be the instruments, both of acquiring fame and procuring this happiness, they would nevertheless fail in the attainment of this last end, if they proceeded from a desire of the first.
Addison.
The great care of God for our salvation must appear in the concern he expressed for our attainment of it. Rogers.

To ATTA'INT.† v. a. [old Fr. atteindre, low Lat. attaminare.]
1. To disgrace; to cloud with ignominy.
His warlike shield
Was all of diamond perfect pure and clean,
For so exceeding shone his glistering ray,
That Phœbus golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay.
Spenser, F. Q.
2. To attaint is particularly used for such as are found guilty of some crime or offence, and especially of felony or treason. A man is attainted two ways, by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double; one at the bar before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers Guilty, never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury. The other is before the coroner or sanctuary, where he, upon his confession, was in former times constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed, and choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. Attainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment not guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies, and is not found till five times called publickly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default.
Cowel.
Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called. Spenser.
I must offend before I be attainted. Shakspeare.
3. To taint; to corrupt. [Dr. Johnson's example, from Shakpeare, exhibits attaint for attainted. But the latter is found in Barret's old dictionary for tainted, viz. "attainted and stinking flesh."]
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love. Shakspeare.

ATTA'INT.* part. adj. [old Fr. attainct, attaint.] Convicted.
Nor need I to shew how suitable our law is to the law of nature, in providing that no infant, ideot, alien, abjured, perjured, or attaint, outlawed, or in præmunire, be of any inquest or jury; especially, in case of life and death.
Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, p. 179.

ATTA'INT.† n. s. [old Fr. attainte, in the Fr. law.]
1. Any thing injurious; as illness, weariness. This sense is now obsolete.
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and overbears attaint
With cheerful semblance. Shakspeare, Henry V.
2. Stain; spot; taint.
No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of; nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stain of it. Shakspeare.
3. In horsemanship. A blow or wound on the hinder feet of a horse.
Farrier's Dict.
4. In law. A writ so called.
He threatened them with an attaint of jury.

A writ of attaint lieth to enquire, whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict. Blackstone.

ATTA'INTMENT.* n. s. [from attaint.] The state of being attainted.
This manor and castle was made over by Hen. VIII. to that great man, [Cardinal Wolsey,] upon whose attaintment, that sacrilegious prince re-annexed it to the crown.
Ashmole's Berkshire, i. 45.

ATTA'INTURE. n. s. [from attaint.] Legal censure; reproach; imputation.
Hume's knavery will be the duchess's wreck,
And her attainture will be Humphry's fall.
Shakspeare.

To ATTA'MINATE.† v. a. [attamino, Lat.] To corrupt; to spoil. Coles, 1685.

To ATTA'SK.* v. a. [from task. This word is introduced into the text of Shakspeare by the modern editors, in the room of an unintelligible word in the old copies.] To task; to tax.
You are much more attask'd for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.
Shakspeare, K. Lear, i. 4.

To ATTA'STE.* v. a. [from the prefix a or at, and taste.] To taste. Obsolete.
For gentlemen (they said) was nought so fit,
As to attaste by bold attempts the cup
Of conquest's wine, whereof I thought to sup.
Mirrour for Mag. p. 297.

To ATTE'MPER.† v. a. [Lat. attempero, old Fr. attemprer.]
1. To mingle; to weaken by the mixture of something else; to dilute.

Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 390.

Cassiodorus affirms — that it is done in an attick or elegant stile: wherein many things are spoken subtily indeed, but not so warily as they should have been.

Hanmer, View of Antiquity, p. 95.

Far be it from me to insinuate so unscholar-like a thing, as if we had the same use for good English, that a Greek had for his Attick elegance. Warburton, Pref. to Shakspeare.

I call Erasmus a wonderful man, not only on account of the variety and classical purity of his works, but of that penetration, that strong and acute sense, which enabled him to pierce through the absurdities of the times, and expose them with such poignant ridicule and attick elegance. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope, i. 188.

A'TTICK.* n. s.

1. A native of Attica.

A time, when the Atticks were as unlearned as their neighbours. Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 390.

2. In architecture, the garret or uppermost room in the house; also that kind of building, which conceals the roof.

To ATTI'NGE.† v. a. [attingo, Lat.] To touch lightly or gently. Coles, 1685.

To ATTI'RE.† v. a. [attirer, Fr.]

1. To dress; to habit; to array.

Let it likewise your gentle breast inspire
With sweet infusion, and put you in mind
Of that proud maid, whom now those leaves attire,
Proud Daphne. Spenser.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies;
Finely attired in a robe of white.
Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

With the linen mitre shall he be attired.
Lev. xvi. 4.

Now the sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms. Philips.

2. [In heraldry.] Attired is used among heralds, when they have occasion to speak of the horns of a buck or stag. Bullokar.

ATTI'RE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; dress; habit.

It is no more disgrace to Scripture to have left things free to be ordered by the church, than for Nature to have left it to the wit of man to devise his own attire. Hooker.

After that the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in use among them. Davies on Ireland.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Hath cost a mass of publick treasury.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

And in this coarse attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muses I confer. Donne.

When lavish Nature, with her best attire,
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire.
Waller.

I pass their form, and ev'ry charming grace,
But their attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is fresh within my mind.
Dryden.

2. The head-dress, in particular. [Old Fr. attour, or, as Barret proposes, from tiara, an ornament on women's heads in Persia. Chaucer uses attour, however, in this sense, Rom. R. 3718. And Cotgrave interprets attour, a French hood, or any tire for women's heads.] See ATTIRING.

3. In hunting. The horns of a buck or stag.

4. In botany. The flower of a plant is divided into three parts, the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or semiform. Florid attire, called thrums or suits, as in the flowers of marigold and tansey, consist sometimes of two, but commonly of three parts. The outer part is the floret, the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowslip flower, into five distinct parts. Semiform attire consists of two parts, the chives and apices; one upon each attire. Dict.

ATTI'RER. n. s. [from attire.] One that attires another; a dresser. Dict.

ATTI'RING.* n. s. [from attire.] The head-dress; "attirings, that which gentlewomen wear on their heads, redimicula," Huloet; dress, in general.

This small wind, which so sweet is,
See how it the leaves doth kiss,
Each tree, in his best attiring:
Sense of love to love inspiring.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

In the attiring and ornament of their bodies, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness. Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 171.

To ATTI'TLE.* v. a. [low Lat. attitulare.] To entitle; to name. Obsolete.

This Aries out of the twelve
Hath March attitled for hym selfe.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 7.

A'TTITUDE.† n. s. [attitude, Fr. from atto, Ital. not in use, Mr. Malone observes, in 1668, Evelyn using attitudo instead of it, of which word he gives a definition as then little known. See his Idea of the Perfection of Painting, 8vo. 1668.] The posture or action in which a person, statue, or painted figure, is placed.

Bernini would have taken his opinion upon the beauty and attitude of a figure. Prior's Dedication.

They were famous originals that gave rise to statues, with the same air, posture, and attitudes. Addison.

It is certain, that no poet has given more graceful and attractive images of beauty than Milton, n his various portraits of Eve, each in a new situtution and attitude. Warton's Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

ATTO'LLENT. adj. [attollens, Lat.] That raises or lifts up.

I shall farther take notice of the exquisite libration of the attollent and depriment muscles. Derham, Physico-Theology.

To ATTO'NE.* v. a. } See ATONE and ATTO'NE. adv. } ATONEMENT.
ATTO'NEMENT. n. s. }

To ATTO'RN or ATTU'RN.* v. a. [old Fr. attorner, transporter à un autre un droit qu'on a. Lacombe; low Lat. attornare.] To transfer the property or service of a vassal or tenant.

In some case a lord might atturn and assign his vassal's service to some other: but he might not atturn him to his deadly foe. Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, p. 16.

To ATTO'RN.* v. n. To acknowledge a new possessor of property, and accept tenancy under him. See ATTOURNMENT.

If one bought an estate with any lease for life or years standing out thereon, and the lessee or tenant refused to attorn to the purchaser, and to become his tenant, the grant or purchase was in most cases void. Blackstone.

ATTO'RNEY.† n. s. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui qui vient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices subit. Old Fr. attorney, actourné, atourné, mot Celt. Lacombe.]

1. Such a person as by consent, commandment, or request, takes heed, sees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's business, in their absence.

Attorney is either general or special: Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or suits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the same with Procurator Cæsaris in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before justices in eyre, in open court. Attorney special or particular, is he that is employed in one or more causes particularly specified. There are also, in respect of the divers courts attorneys at large, and attorneys special, belonging to this or that court only. Cowel.

Attorneys in common law, are nearly the same with proctors in the civil law, and solicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys sue out writs or process, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other persons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having served a clerkship for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c., and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a subject,
And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To mine inheritance. Shakspeare.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions.
Shakspeare.

Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an useless race. Pope.

It would indeed be too gross, too fulsome, and too shameless a request for any one to come to his prince and say, Sir, I will not be quiet unless your majesty will make me treasurer, or chancellor, chief justice, or secretary of state, attorney-general, or the like. South, Serm. vi. 67.

2. It was anciently used for those who did any business for another; for him who was deputed to fight the battle of his employer at the tourn or tournament. See Madox's Hist. of the Exchequer. Now used only in law.

I will attend my husband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home. Shaks.

I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother.
Shakspeare, K. Richard III.

To ATTOR'NEY.† v. a. [old Fr. attorner, low Lat. attornare, the verb is now not in use.]

1. To perform by proxy.

Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts. Shakspeare.

2. To employ as a proxy.

As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still
Attornied to your service. Shakspeare.

ATTO'RNEYSHIP. n. s. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney; proxy; vicarious agency.

Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship. Shakspeare.

ATTO'URNMENT. n. s. [attournement, Fr.] A yielding of the tenant to a new lord, or acknowledgement of him to be his lord; for, otherwise, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get possession. Cowel.

To ATTRA'CT.† v. a. [old Fr. attraicter, from attraho, attractum, Lat.]

1. To draw to something.

A man should scarce persuade the affections of the loadstone, or that jet and amber attracteth straws and light bodies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The single atoms each to other tend,
Attract, attracted to, the next in place
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace. Pope.

2. To allure; to invite.

Adorn'd
She was indeed, and lovely, to attract
Thy love; not thy subjection. Milton.

Shew the care of approving all actions so, as may most effectually attract all to this profession. Hammond.

Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart subdue!
What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you! Pope.

ATTRA'CT.† n. s. [old Fr. subst. attraict.] Attraction; the power of drawing: not in use, though Butler repeatedly employs it.

Feel darts and charms, attracts and flames,
And woo and contract in their names. Hudibras.

ATTRACTABI'LITY.* n. s. [from attract.] That which has the power of attraction.

There is a strong propensity, which dances through every atom, and attracts the minutest particle to some peculiar object; search this universe, from its base to its summit, from fire to air, from water to earth, from all below the moon to all above the celestial spheres, and thou wilt not find a corpuscle destitute of that natural attractability. Sir W. Jones, Tr. of Shirin and Ferhad, Asiat. Res. iv. 178.

ATTRA'CTER.* See ATTRACTOR.

ATTRA'CTICAL. adj. [from attract.] Having the power to draw to it.

Some stones are endued with an electrical or attractical virtue. Ray on the Creation.

ATTRA'CTINGLY.* adv. [from attract.] In an attracting manner.

ATTRA'CTION. n. s. [from attract.]

1. The power of drawing any thing.

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electrick bodies and the attraction in gold of the spirit of quicksilver at distance; and the attraction of heat at distance; and that of fire to naphtha; and that of some herbs to water, though at distance; and divers others, we shall handle. Bacon.

Loadstones and touched needles, laid long in quicksilver, have not amitted their attraction. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Attraction may be performed by impulse, or some other means; I use that word, to signify any force by which bodies tend towards one another. Newton, Opticks.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside,
I have no other charms. Shakspeare.

ATTRA'CTIVE.† adj. [Fr. attractif.]

1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What if the sun
Be centre to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue, and their own,
Incited, dance about him various rounds? Milton.

Some the round earth's cohesion to secure,
For that hard task employ magnetick power;
Remark, say they, the globe, with wonder own
Its nature, like the fam'd attractive stone. Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetism, and electricity; and these instances make it not improbable but there may be more attractive powers than these. Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies;
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes. Shakspeare.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,
The most averse, thee chiefly. Milton.

ATTRA'CTIVE.† n. s. [from the adjective.] That which draws or incites; allurement; except that attractive is of a good or indifferent sense, and allurement generally bad.

That beauty and attractive, which should take the king's eye in Anne of Cleve, not appearing. Lord Herbert's Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 455.

She applied to her advantage all the attractives of sweet unguents and perfumes. Bp. Taylor's Artificial Hands. p. 19.

When the lady of the house, diverted either by the attractives of his discourse or some other occasion, delayed the clients of her charity in alms, or that other most commendable one in surgery, he in his friendly way would chide her out of the room. Fell's Life of Hammond, sect. 2.

The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but attractives and invitation. South, Sermons.

ATTRA'CTIVELY. adv. [from attractive.] With the power of attracting or drawing.

ATTRA'CTIVENESS.† n. s. [from attractive.] The quality of being attractive.

Upon the observing the attractiveness of hot iron, it was queried, whether the same thing might not be done with a wood coal. Hist. of the Royal Society, iv. 268.

There were then the same incentives of desire on the one side, the same attractiveness in riches. South, Sermons, vii. 293.

ATTRA'CTOR.† n. s. [from attract.] The agent that attracts; a drawer.

If the straws be in oil, amber draweth them not; oil makes the straws to adhere so, that they cannot rise unto the attractor. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They are true attracters of love. Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 343.

A'TTRAHENT. n. s. [attrahens, Lat.] That which draws.

Our eyes will inform us of the motion of the steel to its attrahent. Glanville, Scepsis.

To ATTRA'P.* v. a. [low Lat. trappatura, Span. trapo; from trapus, a piece of cloth, Fr. drap.] To clothe; to dress.

Attrapped royally; "instratus ornatu regio." Barret's Alvearie.

For all his armour was like salvage weed
With woody moss bedight, and all his steed
With oaken leaves attrapt. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 39.

ATTRECTA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. attrectation, from attrectatio, Lat.] Frequent handling. Dict.

ATTRI'BUTABLE. adj. [attribuo, Lat.] That may be ascribed or attributed; ascribable; imputable.

Much of the origination of the Americans seem to be attributable to the migrations of the Seres. Hale.

To ATTRI'BUTE.† v. a. [attribuo, Lat. Formerly the accent was on the first syllable; and poetry of later times has adopted either accent for its purpose.]

1. To ascribe; to give; to yield as due.

To their very bare judgement somewhat a reasonable man would attribute, notwithstanding the common imbecilities which are incident unto our nature. Hooker.

We attribute nothing to God that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power and wisdom have no repugnancy in them. Tillotson.

2. To impute, as to a cause.

Faulty men use oftentimes
To attribute their folly unto fate.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 28.

I have observed a Campania determine contrary to appearances, by the caution and conduct of a general, which were attributed to his infirmities. Temple.

The imperfection of telescopes is attributed to spherical glasses; and mathematicians have propounded to figure them by the conical sections. Newton, Opticks.

A'TTRIBUTE. n. s. [from to attribute.]

1. The thing attributed to another, as perfection to the Supreme Being.

Power, light, virtue, wisdom, and goodness, being all but attributes of one simple essence, and of one God, we in all admire, and in part discern. Ralegh.

Your vain poets after did mistake,
Who ev'ry attribute a god did make. Dryden.

All the perfections of God are called his attributes; for he cannot be without them. Watts, Logick.

2. Quality; characteristick disposition.

They must have these three attributes; they must be men of courage, fearing God, and hating covetousness. Bacon.

3. A thing belonging to another; an appendant; adherent.

His sceptre shows the force of temporal pow'r,
The attribute to awe and majesty:
But mercy is above the scepter'd sway,
It is an attribute to God himself. Shakspeare.

The sculptor to distinguish him, gave him, what the medallists call his proper attributes, a spear and a shield. Addison.

4. Reputation; honour.

It takes [height,
From our atchievements, though perform'd at
The pith and marrow of our attribute. Shakspeare.

ATTRIBU'TION.† n. s. [from to attribute.] Commendation; qualities ascribed.

If speaking truth,
In this fine age, were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world. Shakspeare.

We suffer him to persuade us we are as gods, and never suspect these glorious attributions may be no more than flattery. Decay of Piety.

Honour considered, according to the acknowledgement or attribution of it in the persons honouring. Bp. Wilkins, Nat. Rel. ii. 6.

The attribution of prophetical language to birds was common among the orientals. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet, i. Diss. 1.

ATTRI'BUTIVE.* adj. [old Fr. attributif.] That attributes, or communicates.

'Tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes, that is attributive
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress. ii. 2.

ATTRI'BUTIVE.* n. s. [from the adj.] The thing attributed.

▸ In abstract nouns [such as whiteness from white, goodness from good,] as also in the infinitive modes of verbs, the attributive is converted into a substantive. Harris, Herm. b. i.

The attributives hitherto treated, that is to say, verbs, participles, and adjectives, may be called attributives of the first order. Ibid.

ATTRI'TE.† adj. [attritus, Lat.]

1. Ground; worn by rubbing.
Or by collision of two bodies, grind
The air attrite to fire. Milton, P. L. x. 1073.

2. [With divines.] Sorry.
By virtue of the keys the sinner is instantly of attrite made contrite, and thereupon as soon as he hath made his confession, he presently receiveth his absolution; after this, some sorry penance is imposed, &c.
Abp. Usher on the Religion of the Anc. Irish, ch. 5.
Suppose a man to have lived in a course of wickedness for fifty or sixty years; and, being now upon his death-bed, to be attrite for his sins, that is, heartily to grieve for them, &c.
Bp. Bull's Works, i. 18.

ATTRI'TENESS. n. s. [from attrite.] The being much worn.

ATTRI'TION.† n. s. [attritio, Lat.]

1. The act of wearing things, by rubbing one against another.
This vapour, ascending incessantly out of the abyss, and pervading the strata of gravel, and the rest, decays the bones and vegetables lodged in those strata; this fluid, by its continual attrition, fretting the said bodies. Woodward.
The change of the aliment is effected by attrition of the inward stomach, and dissolvent liquor, assisted with heat. Arbuthnot.
"Omnia de lite," opposing wit to wit, wealth to wealth, strength to strength, fortunes to fortunes, friends to friends, as at a sea-fight we turn our broadsides, or [as] two millstones with continual attrition, we fire ourselves, or break another's backs, and both are ruined and consumed in the end. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 435.
Some exhalations shut up in the bowels of the earth, which either by their own nature, or by their violent motion and agitation, or attrition upon rocks, do gather heat, and so impart it to the waters. Howell's Letters, i. 6.

2. The state of being worn.

3. [With divines.] Grief for sin, arising only from the fear of punishment; the lowest degree of repentance.
Nor is it necessary to this absolution, that they should be contrite, or heartily sorry; for attrition, with auricular confession, shall pass in stead of contrition; that is, in effect, if they be but sorry for the penance, though they be not sorry for the sin. Wallis, Serm. p. 43.
They [Papists] equivocate with us in the term of contrition, and make a distinction thereof into perfect and imperfect. The former of these is contrition properly; the latter they call attrition, which howsoever in itself it be not true contrition, yet when the priest, with his power of forgiving sins, interposeth himself in the business, they tell us that "attrition by virtue of the keys is made contrition."
Abp. Usher, Answer to a Jesuit's Challenge, p. 105.
Where are those pandars of sin, the Romish casuists, that teach the least measure of sorrow, even meer attrition, is enough for a penitent!
Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 164.

To ATTU'NE.† v. a. [from tune.]

1. To make any thing musical.
Airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves. Milton, P. L. iv. 265.

2. To tune one thing to another; as, he attunes his voice to his harp.
This is what Epictetus calls, "to attune or harmonize one's mind to the things which happen."
Harris, Three Treat. Notes, iii.
Social friends,
Attun'd to happy unison of soul.
Thomson, Summer, ver. 1384.

ATTU'RNEY. n. s. See ATTORNEY.

ATWA'IN.* adv. Sax. [See TWAIN. Formerly written atwine, atwynne, from Sax. ꝺpinan.] In twain; asunder.
Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain
Which are too intrinse to unloose. Shaks. K. Lear.

ATWE'EN. adv. or prep. [See BETWEEN.] Betwixt; between; in the midst of two things: obsolete.
Her loose long yellow locks, like golden wire,
Sprinkled with pearl, and perling flowers atween,
Do, like a golden mantle, her attire.
Spenser, Epithalam.

ATWI'XT. prep. [See BETWIXT.] In the middle of two things: obsolete.
But with outrageous strokes did him restrain,
And with his body barr'd the way atwixt them twain. Spenser, F. Q.

ATWO'.* adv. [Sax. on ꝺpa.] Into two. Ancient, but not obsolete.
And eke an axe to smite the cord atwo.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

To AVA'IL. v. a. [from valoir, Fr. To avail being nearly the same thing with faire valoir.]

1. To profit; to turn to profit: with of before the thing used.
Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join
Secular pow'r. Milton.
Both of them avail themselves of those licences, which Apollo has equally bestowed on them.
Dryden.

2. To promote; to prosper; to assist.
Mean time he voyag'd to explore the will
Of Jove on high Dodono's holy hill,
What means might best his safe return avail.
Pope.

To AVA'IL. v. n. To be of use; to be of advantage.
Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.
When real merit is wanting, it avails nothing to have been encouraged by the great.
Pope, Preface to his Works.

AVA'IL.† n. s. [old Fr. subst. availe.] Profit; advantage; benefit.
For all that else did come, were sure to fail;
Yet would he further none but for avail. Spenser.
I charge thee,
As heav'n shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly. Shakspeare.
Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than errour. Locke.

AVA'ILABLE.† adj. [old Fr. available, qui est valable. Lacombe.]

1. Profitable; advantageous.
Mighty is the efficacy of such intercessions to avert judgements; how much more available then may they be to secure the continuance of blessings?
Atterbury.
All things subject to action, the will does so far incline unto, as reason judges them more available to our bliss. Hooker.

2. Powerful; in force; valid.
Laws human are available by consent. Hooker.
Drake put one of his men to death, having no authority nor commission available. Ralegh.

AVA'ILABLENESS. n. s. [from available.]

1. Power of promoting the end for which it is used.
We differ from that supposition of the efficacy or availableness, or suitableness of these to the end.
Hale.

2. Legal force; validity.

AVA'ILABLY. adv. [from available.]

1. Powerfully; profitably; advantageously.

2. Legally; validly.

AVA'ILMENT. n. s. [from avail.] Usefulness; advantage; profit.

To AVA'LE.† v. a. [avaler, to let sink, Fr. from the adverb aval, downward, below. Avallare, low Lat.] To let fall; to depress; to make abject; to sink: a word out of use.
By that th' exalted Phœbus 'gan avale
His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heav'n 'gan overhale.
Spenser, F. Q.
He did abase and avale the sovereignty into more servitude towards that see, than had been among us. Wotton.

To AVA'LE.† v. n. To sink; to descend, or come down.
But when his later ebb 'gins to avale,
Huge heaps of mud he leaves. Spenser, F. Q.
They thither marcht: but when they came in sight,
And from their sweaty coursers did avale,
They found the gates fast barred long ere night.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 10.

AVA'NT.† The front of an army. See VAN. It is the Fr. adverb avant, in front.
Shall no man know by his chere,
Which is avant, and which arere.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

AVA'NT-COURIER.* n. s. [Fr. avant-coureur, which Cotgrave renders an avant-curror, a fore-runner.] One who is dispatched in haste before the rest of the company, to notify their approach.

AVA'NT-GUARD. n. s. [avantgarde, Fr.] The van; the first body of an army.
The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without shuffling with the battail or arriere. Hayward.

A'VARICE. n. s. [avarice, Fr. avaritia, Lat.] Covetousness; insatiable desire.
There grows
In my most ill compos'd affection, such
A staunchless avarice, that were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaks.
This avarice of praise in times to come,
Those long inscriptions crouded on the tomb.
Dryden.
Nor love his peace of mind destroys,
Nor wicked avarice of wealth. Dryden.
Avarice is insatiable; and so he went still pushing on for more. L'Estrange.
Be niggards of advice on no pretence,
For the worst avarice is that of sense. Pope.

AVARI'CIOUS. adj. [avaricieux, Fr.] Covetous; insatiably desirous.
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.
This speech has been condemned, as avaricious; and Eustathius judges it to be spoken artfully.
Broome on the Odyssey.

AVARI'CIOUSLY.† adv. [from avaricious.] Covetously.
Each is contented with his own possessions, nor

1. To revenge.

I will avenge me of mine enemies. Isaiah.

They stood against their enemies, and were avenged of their adversaries. Wisdom.

I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu. Hosea.

2. To punish.

Till Jove, no longer patient, took his time
T' avenge with thunder your audacious crime.
Dryden.

AVE'NGE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Revenge; vengeance. Not now in use.

And if to that avenge by you decreed
This hand may helpe, or succour aught supply,
It shall not fail when so ye shall it need.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 8.

AVE'NGEANCE. n. s. [from avenge.] Punishment.

This neglected fear
Signal avengeance, such as overtook
A miser. Philips.

AVE'NGEMENT. n. s. [from avenge.] Vengeance; revenge.

That he might work th' avengement for his shame
On those two caitives which had bred him blame.
Spenser.

All those great battles which thou boaststo win
Through strife and bloodshed, and avengement
Now praised, hereafter thou shalt repent.
Spenser.

AVE'NGER.† n. s. [from avenge, and Fr. vengeur.]

1. Punisher.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such.
1 Thess.

Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this
Can fit his punishment, or their revenge. Milton.

2. Revenger; taker of vengeance for.

The just avenger of his injured ancestors, the victorious Louis, was darting his thunder. Dryden.

But just disease to luxury succeeds,
And ev'ry death its own avenger breeds. Pope.

AVE'NGERESS.† n. s. [from avenger, or the old Fr. vengeresse.] A female avenger. Not in use.

There that cruel queen avengeress
Heap on her new waves of weary wretchedness.
Spenser, F. Q.

A'VENS. n. s. [caryophyllata, Lat.] The same with herb bennet. Miller.

AVE'NTURE. n. s. [aventure, Fr.] A mischance, causing a man's death, without felony; as when he is suddenly drowned, or burnt, by any sudden disease falling into the fire or water. See ADVENTURE. Cowel.

A'VENUE. n. s. [avenue, Fr. It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as Watts observes; but has it generally placed on the first.]

1. A way by which any place may be entered.

Good guards were set up at all the avenues of the city, to keep all people from going out.
Clarendon.

Truth is a strong hold, and diligence is laying siege to it: so that it must observe all the avenues and passes to it. South.

2. An alley, or walk of trees before a house.

To AVE'R. v. a. [averer, Fr. from verum, truth, Lat.] To declare positively, or peremptorily.

The reason of the thing is clear;
Would Jove the naked truth aver. Prior.

Then vainly the philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
How can we justly diff'rent causes frame,
When the effects entirely are the same? Prior.

We may aver, though the power of God be infinite, the capacities of matter are within limits.
Bentley.

A'VERAGE. n. s. [averagium, Lat.]

1. In law, that duty or service which the tenant is to pay to the king, or other lord, by his beasts and carriages.
Chambers.

2. In navigation, a certain contribution that merchants proportionably make towards the losses of such as have their goods cast overboard for the safety of the ship in a tempest; and this contribution seems so called, because it is so proportioned, after the rate of every man's average, or goods carried. Cowel.

3. A small duty which merchants, who send goods in another man's ship, pay to the master thereof for his care of them, over and above the freight. Cham.

4. A medium; a mean proportion.

A'VERAGE.* n. s. [Fr. hiver, winter, and Eng. eatage.] Winter eatage. Craven Dialect. The breaking of corn fields, eddish, roughings. North in general. Grose.

To A'VERAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To compare several sorts or quantities of goods, and thence to fix a price; to estimate according to a given period of time; to proportion.

AVE'RMENT.† n. s. [from aver.]

1. Establishment of any thing by evidence.

To avoid the oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate, which is eigne, the party will sue a pardon. Bacon.

2. An offer of the defendant to justify an exception, and the act as well as the offer. Blount.

3. Simply, affirmation.

Thus much of the civil and canon lawyers' averment of an elder brother's right to his father's fortunes. The Younger Brother's Apology, p. 22.

Your lordship's absence was excused by an averment that you were indisposed.
Bp. Nicholson to Bp. Hoadley, p. 19.

That it is the province of the jury, in informations and indictments for libels, to try nothing more than the fact of the composing and of the publishing averments and innuendos, is a doctrine held at present by all the judges of the King's Bench. Burke, on the Powers of Juries in Prosecutions for Libels.

AVE'RNAT. n. s. A sort of grape. See VINE.

A'VERPENNY.* n. s. [from averia or avere and penny. V. AVERAGE. "Averpenny, hoc est, quietum esse de diversis denariis pro averagio domini regis," Rastall.] A word of frequent occurrence in our old charters.

Averpenny, money paid towards the king's carriages by land, instead of service by the beasts (averia) in kind.
Burn, Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. Gloss.

AVERRUNCA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. averroncation.] The act of rooting up any thing.

Whether averruncation of epidemical diseases, by telesms, be feasible and lawful.
Robinson, Endoxa, (1658) p. 82.

To AVERRU'NCATE.† v. a. [averrunco, Lat. averronquer, old Fr.] To root up; to tear up by the roots.

Sure some mischief will come of it,
Unless by providential wit,
Or force, we averruncate it. Hudibras.

AVERSA'TION.† n. s. [from aversor, Lat.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; turning away with detestation.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversation and hostility included in its essence. South.

Folly is freakish and humorous, impertinent and obstreperous, inconstant and inconsistent, peevish and exceptious; and consequently fastidious to society, and productive of aversation and disrespect. Barrow's Works, i. 4.

2. It is most properly used with from before the object of hate.

There was a stiff aversation in my lord of Essex from applying himself to the earl of Leicester.
Wotton.

They are not all affected with it; nay, on the contrary, find an aversation of their spirits from it. Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 568.

Which impressions or dispositions either produce in the heart a positive inclination to, or at least extinguish its former aversation from, the sin suggested to it. South, Serm. vi. 261.

3. Sometimes with to; less properly.

There is such a general aversation in human nature to contempt, that there is scarce any thing more exasperating. I will not deny, but the excess of the aversation may be levelled against pride. Government of the Tongue.

4. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

A natural and secret hatred and aversation towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast. Bacon.

5. Sometimes with of.

There is in man's nature an aversation or abhorrency of disgrace.
Barrow, Expos. on the Creed.

God hath always declared his delight in the felicity, and his aversation of the misery and destruction of his creatures.
Hallywell's Saving of Souls, p. 32.

AVE'RSE, adj. [aversus, Lat.]

1. Malign; not favourable; having such a hatred as to turn away.

Their courage languish'd, as their hopes decay'd,
And Pallas, now averse, refus'd her aid. Dryden.

2. Not pleased with; unwilling to.

Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove
With the first tumults of a real love?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now bless'd his sway,
By turns averse, and joyful to obey? Prior.

Averse alike to flatter, or offend,
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.
Pope.

3. It has most properly from before the object of aversion.

Laws politick are never framed as they should be, unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature.
Hooker.

They believed all who objected against their undertaking to be averse from peace. Clarendon.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ,
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy. Pope.

4. Very frequently, but improperly, to, Dr. Johnson says; but, as Campbell, in his Philosophy of Rhetoric, observes, from is the Latin idiom; and to is more agreeable to the analogy of our language; dislike and hatred, words synonymous with averseness and aversion, being so construed. Perhaps a number of examples with from to averse and aversion, before Clarendon, might be brought to shew its prevalence then over the usage of to. But the latter seems now to prevail.

He had, from the beginning of the war, been very averse to any advice of the privy council. Clarendon.

Diodorus tells us of one Charondos, who was averse to all innovation, especially when it was to proceed from particular persons. Swift.

AVE'RSELY.† adv. [from averse.]

1. Unwillingly; unfavourably.

My black-wing'd fate
Hovers aversely over that fond hope.
Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maid, ii. 2.

2. Backwardly.

Not only they want those parts of secretion, but it is emitted aversely, or backward, by both sexes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

AVE'RSENESS.† n. s. [from averse.]

1. Unwillingness, backwardness.

Not avoiding his company, or doing any thing of averseness, save in the very act of punishment. Herbert's Country Parson, ch. 25.

Subject we must be, whether we will or no; but if willingly, then is our service perfect freedom; if unwillingly, then is our averseness everlasting misery. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

The corruption of man is in nothing more manifest, than in his averseness to entertain any friendship or familiarity with God. Atterbury.

2. With from before the object of dislike.

Is it not commonly sloth rather than activity, an averseness from this rather than an inclination to any other employment, which diverteth us from our prayers? Barrow's Works, i. 61.

Applauding himself for his forwardness to all due reformation, and his averseness from all such kind of sacrilege. Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 14.

3. With to before the object.

Many impotencies, or rather averseness to good, are charged upon a natural account, which indeed are the effects only of habitual sins. South, Serm. vi. 426.

Some men have an averseness to it [dancing,] and these it seldom becomes. Feltham's Resolves, R. 70. B. 2.

AVE'RSION† n. s. [aversion, Fr. aversio, Lat.]

1. Hatred; dislike; detestation; such as turns away from the object.

What if with like aversion I reject
Riches and realms? Milton.

The aversion of God's face is confusion; the least bending of his brow is perdition. Bp. Hall's Rem. p. 24.

2. It is used most properly with from before the object of hate.

They had an inward aversion from it, and were resolved to prevent it by all possible means. Clarendon.

With men these considerations are equally causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God, so many reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Sprat.

The same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be a reason for rejecting any proof whatsoever. Atterbury.

3. Sometimes, less properly, with to, Dr. Johnson says; perhaps not correctly, as is shewn in the observation on averse with to.

A freeholder is bred with an aversion to subjection. Addison.

I might borrow illustrations of freedom and aversion to receive new truths from modern astronomy. Watts.

4. Sometimes with for.

The Lucquese would rather throw themselves under the government of the Genoese, than submit to a state for which they have so great aversion. Addison.

This aversion of the people for the late proceedings of the commons, might be improved to good uses. Swift.

5. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

His aversion towards the house of York was so predominant, as it found place not only in his councils but in his bed. Bacon.

6. The cause of aversion.

They took great pleasure in compounding lawsuits among their neighbours; for which they were the aversion of the gentlemen of the long robe. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire;
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire. Pope.

7. Simply, conversion or change.

The addition of the words "you and the rest," is a familiar figurative speech, called apostrophe, which is an aversion of speech from one thing or person to another. Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 101.

To AVE'RT. v. a. [averto, Lat.]

1. To turn aside; to turn off.

I beseech you
T' avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

At this, for the last time, she lifts her hand,
Averts her eyes, and half unwilling drops the brand. Dryden.

2. To cause to dislike.

When people began to espy the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their hearts were utterly averted from it. Hooker.

Even cut themselves off from the opportunities of proselyting others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.

3. To put by as a calamity.

O Lord! avert whatsoever evil our swerving may threaten unto his church. Hooker.

Diversity of conjectures made many, whose conceits averted from themselves the fortune of that war, to become careless and secure. Knolles.

These affections earnestly fix our minds on God, and forcibly avert from us those things which are displeasing to him, and contrary to religion. Sprat.

Thro' threaten'd lands they wild destruction throw,
Till ardent prayer averts the public woe. Prior.

To AVE'RT.* v. n. [Lat. averto.] To turn away. A latinism.

Cold, and averting from our neighbour's good. Thomson.

AVE'RTER.* n. s. [from avert.] That which averts or puts by.

Averters and purgers must go together, as tending all to the same purpose, to divert this rebellious humour, [melancholy,] and turn it another way. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 393.

Averters must be used to the liver and spleen. Ibid. p. 405.

AUF.† n. s. [of alf, Dutch.] A fool, or silly fellow. Dict.

A meer changeling, a very monster, an auf imperfect. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 524.

A'UGER. n. s. [egger, Dutch.] A carpenter's tool to bore holes with.

The auger hath a handle and bit; its office is to make great round holes. When you use it, the stuff you work upon is commonly laid low under you, that you may the easier use your strength: for in twisting the bit about by the force of both your hands, on each end of the handle one, it cuts great chips out of the stuff. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

AUGHT. pronoun. [auht, aht, Saxon. It is sometimes improperly written ought.] Any thing.

If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him. Shaks.

They may, for aught I know, obtain such substances as may induce the chymists to entertain other thoughts. Boyle.

But go, my son, and see if aught be wanting
Among thy father's friends. Addison, Cato.

To AUGME'NT. v. a. [augmenter, Fr.] To encrease; to make bigger or more.

Some cursed weeds her cunning hand did know;
That could augment his harm, encrease his pain. Fairfax.

Rivers have streams added to them in their passage, which enlarge and augment them. Hale's Common Law of England.

To AUGME'NT. v. n. To encrease; to grow bigger.

But as his heat with running did augment,
Much more his sight encreas'd his hot desire. Sidney.

The winds redouble, and the rains augment;
The waves on heaps are dash'd. Dryden, Virgil.

A'UGMENT. n. s. [augmentum, Lat.]

1. Encrease; quantity gained.

You shall find this augment of the tree to be without the diminution of one drachm of the earth. Walton's Angler.

2. State of encrease.

Discutients are improper in the beginning of inflammations; but proper, when mixed with repellents, in the augment. Wiseman.

AUGME'NTABLE.* adj. [from augment.] Capable of augmentation.

Our elixirs be augmentable infinitely. Ashmole, Theat. Chem. 1652, p. 182.

AUGMENTA'TION.† n. s. [from augment.]

1. The act of encreasing or making bigger.

Those who would be zealous against regular troops after a peace, will promote an augmentation of those on foot. Addison.

2. The state of being made bigger.

What modification of matter can make one embryo capable of so prodigiously vast augmentation, while another is confined to the minuteness of an insect. Bentley.

3. The thing added, by which another is made bigger.

By being glorified, it does not mean that he doth receive any augmentation of glory at our hands; but his name we glorify, when we testify our acknowledgment of his glory. Hooker.

4. In heraldry, an especial mark of honour, borne either as an escutcheon, or a canton; as the baronets of England bear the arms of Ulster in Ireland, in an escutcheon on their own arms.

AUGMENTA'TION Court.† A court erected by king Henry the Eighth, for the increase of the revenues of his crown, by the suppression of monasteries.

In the year 1536, he was constituted, by the king, treasurer of the court of augmentations of the king's revenue, on its first establishment by act of parliament. Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 11.

AUGME'NTATIVE.* adj. [Fr. augmentatif.] Having the quality of augmenting.

Some of them [terminations of verbal nouns] being augmentative, some diminutive. Instructions for Oratory, p. 92.

AUGME'NTER.* n. s. [from augment, an old substantive indeed, preserved by Cotgrave in augmentateur, but not noticed in the dictionary of Johnson, though it had been employed by him in his plan of it.] One who enlarges or augments.

The Egyptians, who were the world's seminaries for arts, ascribe all to learning, as to its patroness and augmenter.

Waterhous's Apol. for Learn. &c. 1653, p. 177.

Perhaps I may at last have reason to say, after one of the augmenters of Furetier, that my book is more learned than its author.

Johnson's Plan of an English Dict.

A'UGRE. n. s. A carpenter's tool. See AUGER.

Your temples burned in the cement, and
Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an augre's bore. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

A'UGRE-HOLE. n. s. [from augre and hole.] A hole made by boring with an augre; proverbially a narrow space.

What should be spoken here,
Where our fate, hid within an augre-hole,
May rush and seize us. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A'UGUR. n. s. [augur, Lat.] One who pretends to predict by omens, as by the flight of birds.

What say the augurs? ———
— They would not have you stir forth to day:
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.
Shakspeare.

Calchas, the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew:
Supreme of augurs. Dryden, Fables.

As I and mine consult thy augur,
Grant the glad omen; let thy fav'rite rise
Propitious, ever soaring from the right. Prior.

To A'UGUR. v. n. [from augur.] To guess; to conjecture by signs.

The people love me, and the sea is mine,
My pow'r's a crescent, and my aug'ring hope
Says it will come to the full. Shakspeare.

My aug'ring mind assures the same success.
Dryden.

To A'UGUR.* v. a. To foretell.

I did augur all this to him before-hand.
B. Jonson, Poetaster.

To A'UGURATE.† v. n. [auguror, Lat.] To judge by augury.

I have just now from Bath got sight of the remarks. I augurated truly the improvement they would receive this way.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. cii.

AUGURA'TION. n. s. [from augur.] The practice of augury, or of foretelling by events and prodigies.

Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he continued the tripudiary augurations.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

A'UGURER. n. s. [from augur.] The same with augur.

These apparent prodigies,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the capitol to-day. Shaks.

AUGU'RIAL. adj. [from augury.] Relating to augury.

On this foundation were built the conclusions of soothsayers in their augurial and tripudiary divinations. Brown.

To A'UGURISE. v. n. [from augur.] To practise divination by augury. Dict.

A'UGUROUS. adj. [from augur.] Predicting; prescient; foreboding.

So fear'd
The fair-mann'd horses, that they flew back, and their chariots turn'd,
Presaging in their augurous hearts the labours that they mourn'd. Chapman's Iliad.

A'UGURY. n. s. [augurium, Lat.]

1. The act of prognosticating by omens or prodigies.

Thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my augury deceive me not,
Witness good breeding. Shakspeare.

The winds are chang'd, your friends from danger free,
Or I renounce my skill in augury.
Dryden, Æneid.

She knew by augury divine,
Venus would fail in the design. Swift.

2. An omen or prediction.

What if this death, which is for him design'd,
Had been your doom (far be that augury!)
And you not, Aurengzebe, condemn'd to die?
Dryden.

The pow'rs we both invoke,
To you, and yours, and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with an augury. Dryden.

A'UGUST. n. s. [Augustus, Lat.] The name of the eighth month from January inclusive.

August was dedicated to the honour of Augustus Cæsar, because, in the same month, he was created consul, thrice triumpher in Rome, subdued Egypt to the Roman empire, and made an end of civil wars; being before called Sextilis, or the sixth from March. Peacham.

AUGU'ST. adj. [augustus, Lat.] Great: grand; royal; magnificent; awful.

There is nothing so contemptible, but antiquity can render it august and excellent. Glanv. Scepsis.

The Trojan chief appear'd in open sight,
August in visage, and serenely bright;
His mother goddess, with her hands divine,
Had form'd his curling locks, and made his temples shine. Dryden.

AUGU'STNESS.† n. s. [from august.] Elevation of look; dignity; loftiness of mien or aspect.

He was daunted at the augustness of such an assembly.

Shaftesbury, in Walpole's R. and N. Authors.

A'VIARY. n. s. [from avis, Lat. a bird.] A place inclosed to keep birds in.

In aviaries of wire, to keep birds of all sorts, the Italians bestow vast expence; including great scope of ground, variety of bushes, trees of good height, running waters, and sometimes a stove annexed, to contemper the air in winter.

Wotton's Architecture.

Look now to your aviary; for now the birds grow sick of their feathers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

AVI'DIOUSLY.* adv. [Lat. avidus, Fr. avide, Welsh awyddus, greedy, covetous.] The old Eng. adverb for eagerly; greedily. Not now in use. See AVIDITY.

Nothing is more avidiously to be desired than is the sweet peace of God.

Bale, on the Revelation, sign. D, viii.

Avydyously we drynke the wynes of other landes, we bye up their fruites and spyces.

Leland's New Year's Gift, sign. K, 3. b.

AVI'DITY.† n. s. [avidité, Fr. aviditas, Lat. awydd, Welsh, corresponding with the old Fr. avyd, (desir brulant,) from the Celtick. V. Lacombe. Avidity is an old English word, as it occurs in a dictionary of 1623, and is used by an excellent writer of that period; though Dr. Johnson found no example.] Greediness; eagerness; appetite; insatiable desire.

In all which we may see an infinite avidity; and such as cannot be satisfied with any finite object.

Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 199.

To AVI'LE.* v. a. [old Fr. aviler, to despise.] To depreciate; to hold cheap.

Being deprest awhile,
Want makes us know the price of what we avile.
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Much less to debase and avile the excellent gifts of God. Bp. Bedell's Letters, Life, &c. p. 314.

To AVI'SE.* v. n. [Fr. aviser.] To consider. Not now in use. See To AVIZE.

They stay'd not to avise who first should bee,
But all spurr'd after, fast as they mote fly,
To reskew her from shamefull villany.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 18.

AVI'SE.* } n. s. [Fr. avis, Ital. aviso, low
AVI'SO. } Lat. adviso.] Advice; intelligence.

All the lords
Have him in that esteem for his relations,
Corants, avises, correspondences
With this ambassador and that agent.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady, i. 7.

I had yours of the tenth current; and besides your avisos, I must thank you for those rich flourishes wherewith your letter was embroidered every where. Howell's Letters, ii. 68.

AVI'SEMENT.* n. s. [Fr.] Advisement; counsel. Obsolete.

I think there never
Marriage was manag'd with a more avisement.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, ii. 1.

To AVI'ZE. v. a. [aviser, Fr.] A word out of use.

1. To counsel.

With that, the husbandman 'gan him avize,
That it for him was fittest exercise. Spenser.

2. With a reciprocal pronoun, to bethink himself; s' aviser, Fr.

But him avizing, he that dreadful deed
Forbore, and rather chose, with scornful shame,
Him to avenge. Spenser.

3. To consider; to examine.

As they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to avize. Spenser.

A'UK.* n. s. [Isl. aulka, Dan. alke.] A sea-bird, of which the puffin is a species.

The great auk is a bird observed by seamen never to wander beyond soundings.

Pennant's Zoology, ii. 508.

A'UKWARD. See AWKWARD.

AULA'RIAN.* n. s. [Lat. aula.] The member of a hall; and so called, at Oxford, by way of distinction from collegians.

Dr. Adams [Principal of Magdalen Hall] made a little speech, and entertained the vice-chancellor and aularians with a glass of wine.

Life of A. Wood, p. 383.

AULD. adj. [alb, Sax.] A word now obsolete; but still used in the Scotch dialect.

'Tis pride that pulls the country down;
Then take thine auld cloak about thee.
Shakspeare, Othello.

AULE'TICK. adj. [Gr. ἀυλὸς.] Belonging to pipes. Dict.

A'ULICK. adj. [aulicus, Lat.] Belonging to the court.

AULN. n. s. [aulne, Fr.] A French measure of length; an ell.

To AUMA'IL. † v. a. [from maille, Fr., the mesh of a net; whence a coat of aumail, a coat with network of iron.] To variegate; to figure. Upton explains it, to enamel; and he is right, though

Dr. Johnson seems to doubt it; and the word may be referred to the low Lat. amelatus, amelled. Fr. esmail, ammel, or enamel. See AMELLED.

In gilden buskins of costly cordwaine,
All bard with golden bendes, which were entail'd
With curious anticks, and full fair aumail'd.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 27.

AE'MBRY. See AMBRY.

AUNT.† n.s. [tante, Fr. amita, Lat. Dr. Johnson says; but it is from the old Fr. ante, which is derived from the Celtick. V. Lacombe.] A father or mother's sister, correlative to nephew or niece.

Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Glo'ster.
Shakspeare.

She went to plain work, and to purling brooks,
Old fashion'd halls, dull aunts and croaking rooks.
Pope.

A'UNTER.* n.s. The old word for ADVENTURE, of which it is a corruption.

AVOCA'DO. n.s. [Span. persica, Lat.] The name of a tree that grows in great plenty in the Spanish West Indies.

The fruit is of itself very insipid, for which reason they generally eat it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to give it a poignancy. Miller.

To A'VOCATE.† v.a. [avoco, Lat.] To call off from business; to call away.

Seeing now all proceedings in England inhibited, the cause avocated to Rome, Campegius recalled, &c.
Ld. Herbert's Hist. Hen. VIII. p.259.

Their divesture of mortality dispenses them from those laborious and avocating duties to distressed christians, and their secular relations, which are here requisite. Boyle.

AVOCA'TION.† n.s. [from avocate. All Dr. Johnson's examples give the word in the plural number, and Mr. Boucher denies that it is used in the singular. It should seem, by our old lexicography, to have been received in the singular: "AVOCATION, a withdrawing, or calling from; a distraction;" Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words.]

1. The act of calling aside.

The bustle of business, the avocations of our senses; and the din of a clamorous world, are impediments. Glanville.

Stir up that remembrance, which his many avocations of business have caused him to lay aside.
Dryden.

God does frequently inject into the soul blessed impulses to duty, and powerful avocations from sin. South.

2. The business that calls; or the call that summons away.

It is a subject that we may make some progress in its contemplation within the time, that in the ordinary time of life, and with the permission of necessary avocations, a man may employ in such a contemplation. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

By the secular cares and avocations which accompany marriage, the clergy have been furnished with skill in common life. Atterbury.

A'VOCATIVE.* n.s. [from avocate.] That which calls off from; dehortation; dissuasion.

Setting this apart, all other incentives to virtue, and avocations from vice, seem very blunt and faint.
Barrow, on the Creed.

To AVOID.† v.a. [vuider, Fr.]

1. To shun; to decline.

The wisdom of pleasing God, by doing what he commands, and avoiding what he forbids.
Tillotson.

2. To escape; as, he avoided the blow, by turning aside.

3. To endeavour to shun.

The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it. Shakspeare.

4. To evacuate; to quit.

What have you to do here, fellow? pray you, avoid the house. Shakspeare.

If any rebel should be required of the prince confederate, the prince confederate should command him to avoid the country. Bacon.

He desired to speak with some few of us: whereupon six of us only stayed, and the rest avoided the room. Bacon.

5. To emit; to throw out.

A toad contains not those urinary parts which are found in other animals to avoid that serous excretion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

6. To oppose; to hinder effect.

The removing that which caused putrefaction, doth prevent and avoid putrefaction. Bacon.

7. To vacate; to annul. [old Fr. avoyde, nul, compté pour rien.]

How can these grants of the king's be avoided without wronging of those lords which had these lands and lordships given them? Spenser.

Many who had followed the king in the war, and so made themselves liable to those penalties which the parliament had prepared for them and subjected them to, had made many feigned conveyances, with such limitations and so absolutely (that no trust might be discovered by those who had power to avoid it) that they were indeed too absolute to be avoided by themselves; and their estates became so much out of their own disposal, that they could neither apply them to the payment of their just debts, or to the provision for their children. Ld. Clarendon's Life, ii. 307.

To AVO'ID. v.n.

1. To retire.

And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it: and David avoided out of his presence twice. 1 Sam.

2. To become void or vacant.

Bishopricks are not included under benefices: so that if a person takes a bishoprick, it does not avoid by force of that law of pluralities, but by the ancient common law. Ayliffe.

AVO'IDABLE. adj. [from avoid.]

1. That may be avoided, shunned, or escaped.

Want of exactness in such nice experiments is scarce avoidable. Boyle.

To take several things for granted, is hardly avoidable to any one, whose task it is to shew the falsehood or improbability of any truth. Locke.

2. Liable to be vacated or annulled.

The charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them.
Judge Hale.

AVO'IDANCE.† n.s. [from avoid.]

1. The act of avoiding.

Both of them [light and darkness] are mentioned with an intention of drawing in an exhortation to that purity which we should affect, and the avoidance of all the state and works of darkness which we should abhor. Bp. Hall's Rem. p.37.

It is appointed to give us vigour in the pursuit of what is good, or in the avoidance of what is hurtful. Watts.

2. The course by which any thing is carried off.

For avoidances and drainings of water, where there is too much, we shall speak of. Bacon.

3. The act or state of becoming vacant.

Avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice, is 1. by death, which is the act of God. 2. by resignation, which is the act of the incumbent. 3. by cession, or the acceptance of a benefice incompatible, which also is the act of the incumbent. 4. by deprivation, which is the act of the ordinary. 5. by the act of the law; as in case of simony; not subscribing the articles or declaration; or not reading the articles or the common prayer. Burn.

4. The act of annulling.

AVO'IDER.† n.s. [from avoid.]

1. The person that avoids or shuns any thing.

Good sir, steal away; you were wont to be a curious avoider of woman's company.
Beaumont & Fl. Honest Man's Fortune, iv. i.

2. The person that carries any thing away.

3. The vessel in which things are carried away.

AVO'IDLESS.† adj. [from avoid.] Inevitable; that cannot be avoided.

She too, when ripen'd years she shall attain,
Must, of avoidless right, be yours again.
Dryden, Trans. of Ovid's Met. b. 10.

That avoidless ruin in which the whole empire would be involved. Dennis's Letters.

AVOIRDUPO'IS.† n.s. [avoir du poids, Fr. Dr. Johnson says; but he should have added averia ponderis, Lat., literally, goods of weight, i.e. goods sold by weight, aver in old Fr. and avoir in modern, signifying goods, like the low Lat. averium, averum, avere. V. Du Cange. Our word is also written averdupois.] A kind of weight, of which a pound contains sixteen ounces, and is in proportion to a pound Troy, as seventeen to fourteen. All the larger and coarser commodities are weighed by avoirdupois weight. Chambers.

Probably the Romans left their ounce in Britain, which is now our avoirdupois ounce: for our Troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To AVO'KE.* v.a. [Lat. avoco. Mr. Boucher has noticed this verb, but with the example only of a Scottish author. It is an old Eng. verb, found in a vocabulary of 1623.] To call from, or back again. Not now in use. Cockeram.

AVOLA'TION. n.s. [from avolo, to fly away, Lat.] The act of flying away; flight; escape.

These airy vegetables are made by the relicks of plantal emissives, whose avolation was prevented by the condensed enclosure. Glanville's Scepsis.

Strangers, or the fungous parcels about candles, only signify a plurious air, hindering the avolation of the favillous particles. Brown, Vulg. Errours.

To AVO'UCH. v.a. [avouer, Fr. for this word we now generally say vouch.]

1. To affirm; to maintain; to declare peremptorily.

They boldly avouched that themselves only had the truth, which they would at all times defend.
Hooker.

Wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion that will prove
What is avouched here. Shakspeare, King Lear.

2. To produce in favour of another.

Such antiquities could have been avouched for the Irish. Spenser, Ireland.

3. To vindicate; to justify.

You will think you made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing.
Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

AVO'UCH. n.s. [from the verb.] Declaration; evidence; testimony.

I might not this believe,

Without the sensible and try'd avouch
Of mine own eyes. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

AVO'UCHABLE.† adj. [from avouch.] That may be avouched. Sherwood.

AVO'UCHER.† n. s. [from avouch.] He that avouches.

AUSTE'RELY.† adv. [from austere.] Severely; rigidly.

Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye,
That he did plead in earnest. Shakspeare.

Hypocrites austerely talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence. Milton, P. L.

I am not so austerely scrupulous as to deny the lawfulness of these abundant provisions, upon just occasions. Bp. Hall, Occ. Meditations, lxxxi.

AUSTE'RENESS. n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; strictness; rigour.

My unsoil'd name, th' austereness of my life,
May vouch against you; and my place i' th' state
Will so your accusation overweigh. Shakspeare.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness into a smile, he hardly could resist the proper motives thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Roughness in taste.

AUSTE'RITY. n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; mortified life; strictness.

Now, Marcus Cato, our new consul's spy,
What is your sour austerity sent t' explore? B. Jon.

What was that snakey-headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

This prince kept the government, and yet lived in this convent with all the rigour and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

2. Cruelty; harsh discipline.

Let not austerity breed servile fear;
No wanton sound offend her virgin ear. Roscom.

Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. ii. Records, p. 363.

Nothing can be more pleasant than to see virtuosos about a cabinet of medals, descanting upon the value, rarity, and authenticalness of the several pieces. Addison.

To AUTHE'NTICATE.* v. a. [old Fr. authentiquer.] To prove by authority; to make authentick.

Bishop Kennet's "Parochial Antiquities," however elaborate or exact, replete with research and authenticated by curious evidences, are restricted to a few places and a short period.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref. p. vi.

We are surprised to find verses of so modern a cast as the following at such an early period; which in this sagacious age we should judge to be a forgery, was not their genuineness authenticated, and their antiquity confirmed, by the venerable types of Caxton, &c.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 59.

AUTHENTI'CITY. n. s. [from authentick.] Authority; genuineness; the being authentick.

AUTHE'NTICK.† adj. [authenticus, Lat. authentique, Fr.] That has every thing requisite to give it authority, as an authentick register. It is used in opposition to any thing by which authority is destroyed, as authentick, not counterfeit. It is never used of persons, Dr. Johnson says; whereas no word is more frequently applied to persons, as my examples will shew. Genuine; not fictitious; having authority.

Thou art wont his great authentick will Interpreter through highest heav'n to bring.
Milton.

She joy'd th' authentick news to hear,
Of what she guess'd before, with jealous fear.
Cowley.

But censure's to be understood
The authentick mark of the elect,
The publick stamp Heav'n sets on all that's great and good. Swift.

Stillingfleet Orig. Sac. ii. 1.

They would receive no books as the writings of inspired men, but such of whose authentickness they had rational grounds.
Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. xxvi.

A'UTHOR. n. s. [auctor, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be blessed for ever. Hooker.

The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker.

I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? Milton, P. L.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

If the worship of false gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance.
Shakspeare.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
The wound's great author close at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden, Fables.

From his loins
New authors of dissention spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sovereign sway. Philips.

That the land Salike lies in Germany. Shaksp.

To AU'THOR.* v. a. [from the noun.] To occasion; to effect.

Oh, execrable slaughter,
What hand hath author'd it?
Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

Do you two think much,
That he thus wisely, and with need, consents
To what I author for your country's good? Ibid.

A'UTHORESS.* n. s. [old Fr. authrice, "an autrix, authoress, or actress." Cotgrave.]

1. A female efficient.

O Amarillis, auth'ress of my flame!
Sir R. Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p. 14.

Albeit his [Adam's] loss, without God's mercy, was absolutely irrecoverable; yet we never find he twitted her as authoress of his fall.
Feltham, Serm. on St. Luke, xiv. 20.

2. A female author; a female writer. This sense is only of modern usage.
This woman was authoress of scandalous books.
Warburton, Notes on Pope's Dunciad.

AUTHO'RITATIVE.† adj. [from authority.]

1. Having due authority.
As the original word for Almighty is not put only for the Lord of Hosts, but often also for the Lord Shaddai; so we must not restrain the signification to the power authoritative, but extend it also to that power which is properly operative and executive. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.
It is of perilous consequence, that foreigners should have authoritative influence upon the subjects of any prince.
Barrow, on the Pope's Supremacy.
Tempering the rigour of an authoritative character with the affability of a companion.
Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 86.

2. Having an air of authority.
I dare not give them the authoritative title of aphorisms, which yet may make a reasonable moral prognostick. Wotton.
The mock authoritative manner of the one, and the insipid mirth of the other. Swift, Examiner.

AUTHO'RITATIVELY.† adv. [from authoritative.]

1. In an authoritative manner; with a shew of authority.
The authority of the church stands thus; to determine controversies of faith only ministerially, as the ordinary dispensers of the Word, as servants of Christ, and ministers of the Gospel; not absolutely and authoritatively, as lords of our faith and infallible interpreters of scripture.
Leslie, of priv. Judg. &c. p. 29.
It is a matter of prudence, that our essays of this kind be rather perfective than destructive; that is, that we do not take upon us authoritatively to quash and controul other discourse.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Con. P. I.
He resumes the chair, and thus authoritatively dictates to us. Boyle against Bentley, p. 74.

2. With due authority.
No law foreign binds in England, till it be received, and authoritatively engrafted, into the law of England. Hale.
No man can forgive them [sins] absolutely, authoritatively, by primer and original power.
Mountague's Appeal to Cæsar, p. 317.
This church doth authoritatively teach; secondly, judge; thirdly, command; fourthly, punish those who disobey. Bp. Barlow's Rem. p. 598.
The indiscriminate collation of degrees has justly taken away that respect which they originally claimed, as stamps by which the literary value of men so distinguished was authoritatively denoted.
Dr. Johnson's Journ. West. Isl.

AUTHO'RITATIVENESS. n. s. [from authoritative.] An acting by authority; authoritative appearance. Dict.

AUTHO'RITY. n. s. [auctoritas, Lat.]

1. Legal power.
Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away! Shaksp. K. Lear.
Adam's sovereignty, that by virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

2. Influence; credit.
Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many; but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.
The woods are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example.
Locke.

3. Power; rule.
I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shakspeare.
But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.
1 Tim. ii. 12.

4. Support; justification; countenance.
Do'st thou expect th' authority of their voices,
Whose silent wills condemn thee? B. Jonson.

5. Testimony.
Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed.
Sidney.
We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of antient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Having been so hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborne by a torrent of authorities.
Glanville, Scepsis.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility; cogency of evidence.
They consider the main consent of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authority of scriptures, ever sithence the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour.
Hooker.

AUTHORIZA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. autorization.] Establishment by authority.
Employ learned and unprejudiced men to prepare things for your deliberation and authorization.
Waterhous's Apology for Learn. &c. 1653, p. 199.
The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from their admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale.

To A'UTHORIZE. v. a. [autoriser, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.
Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see, that all favour and power depended upon her. Sydney.
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. To make any thing legal.
Yourself first made that title which I claim,
First bid me love, and authoriz'd my flame.
Dryden.
I have nothing farther to desire,
But Sancho's leave to authorize our marriage.
Dryden.
To have countenanced in him irregularity and disobedience to that light which he had, would have been, to have authorized disorder, confusion, and wickedness in his creatures. Locke.

3. To establish any thing by authority.
Lawful it is to devise any ceremony, and to authorize any kind of regimen, no special commandment being thereby violated. Hooker.
Those forms are best which have been longest received and authorized in a nation by custom and use. Temple.

4. To justify; to prove a thing to be right.
All virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires, where reason does not authorize them.
Locke.

5. To give credit to any person or thing.
Although their intention be sincere, yet doth it notoriously strengthen vulgar errour, and authorize opinions injurious unto truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Be a person in vogue with the multitude, he shall authorize any nonsense, and make incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for rhetorick. South.

AU'THORLESS. * adj. [from author and less.] Without an author or authority.
As I am not ignorant, so ought I to be sensible of the false aspersions some authorless tongues have laid upon me.
Sir E. Sackville, Guardian, No. 133.

A'UTHORSHIP.* n. s. The quality of being an author.
The gentlemen, whose merit lies toward authorship, are unwilling to make the least abatement on the foot of ceremonial. Shaftesbury.

AUTO'CRASY.† n. s. [αὐτοκράλεια, from αὐτὸς, self, and κράτος, power.] Independent power; supremacy.
It [the Divine Will] moves not by the external impulse or inclination of objects, but determines itself by an absolute autocracy.
South, Serm. viii. 285.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 7.

AUTOGE'NEAL.* adj. [αὐτογενὴς, Gr.] Self-begotten.
God often lets things fall out preternatural, that we might admire Him supernatural, and leave the events of all things to that Power which is autogeneal and supreme.
Waterhous's Apol. for Learn. &c. 1653, p. 129.

A'UTOGRAPH.* n. s. [Fr. autographe, Gr. αὐτὸς and γράφω.] The particular handwriting of a person; the original writing, and not a copy, in opposition to apograph; the signature.
Who can demonstrate amongst varieties of text which was the autograph?
Richworth's Dialogues, (Paris,) 1640, p. 579.
The ancient reading of the Greek, sometimes corrupted in the autograph, is to be recovered by help of these transcripts.
Hammond, Works, vol. 4. 1683.
Pref. to the Psalms.
It is the author's autograph; and the work is dedicated to Humphry, duke of Gloucester.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, ii. 45.

AUTO'GRAPHAL.* adj. Of the particular hand-writing of persons.
The autographal subscription of the Convocation of 1571 to the same Articles is still extant.
Bennet's Essay on the 39 Articles, 1715, p. 376.

AUTOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from autography.] Of one's own writing. Dict.

AUTO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [αὐτογραφὶν, from αὐτὸς, and γράφω, to write.] A particular person's own writing; or the original of a treatise, in opposition to a copy.
Persons unknown, but, in the anonymous autography of their requisition, denominating themselves the gentlemen of this theatre.
Dr. Knox's Narrative, &c. 1793.

AUTO'MATAL.* adj. A more elegant word than automatical, or automatous; which see.
The whole universe is as it were the automatal harp of that great and true Apollo.
Annot. on Glanville's Lux. Orient. 1682, p. 129.

AUTOMA'TICAL. adj. [from automaton.] Belonging to an automaton; having the power of moving itself.

AUTO'MATON. n. s. [Gr. αὐτόματον. In the plural, automata.] A machine that hath the power of motion within itself, and which stands in need of no foreign assistance. Quincy.
For it is greater to understand the art, whereby the Almighty governs the motions of the great automaton, than to have learned the intrigues of policy. Glanville, Scepsis.

The particular circumstances for which the automata of this kind are most eminent, may be reduced to four. Wilkins.

AUTO'MATOUS. adj. [from automaton.] Having in itself the power of motion.

Clocks, or automatous organs, whereby we distinguish of time, have no mention in ancient writers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

AUTO'NOMY. n. s. [Gr. αὐτονομία.] The living according to one's mind and prescription. Dict.

A'UTOPSY. n. s. [Gr. αὐτοψία.] Ocular demonstration; seeing a thing one's self. Quincy.

AUTO'PTICAL.† adj. [from autopsy.] Perceived by one's own eyes.

Evinced by autoptical experience. Evelyn, b. iii. ch. 3. § 22.

AUTO'PTICALLY. adv. [from autoptical.] By means of one's own eyes.

Were this true, it would autoptically silence that dispute. Brown.

That the galaxy is a meteor, was the account of Aristotle; but the telescope hath autoptically confuted it: and he, who is not Pyrrhonian enough to the disbelief of his senses, may see that it is no exhalation. Glanville, Scepsis.

AUTOSCHEDIA'STICAL.* adj. [Gr. αὐτος and σχεδιαστικός.] Hasty; slight; extemporary.

You so much over-value my autoschediastical and indigested censure of St. Peter's primacy over the rest of the apostles, as if I had sent you some rare stuff which you had not (and much better) of your own. Dean Martin's Letters, p. 21.

A'UTUMN. n. s. [autumnus, Lat.] The season of the year between summer and winter, beginning astronomically at the equinox, and ending at the solstice; popularly, autumn comprises August, September and October.

For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack.
Shakspeare.

I would not be over confident, till he hath passed a spring or autumn. Wiseman, Surgery.

The starving brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn. Philips.

Autumn nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on. Thomson.

AUTU'MNAL. adj. [from autumn.] Belonging to autumn; produced in autumn.

No spring, or summer's beauty, hath such grace,
As I have seen in one autumnal face. Donne.

Thou shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or light'ning, thou shalt fall. Milton.

Bind now up your autumnal flowers, to prevent sudden gusts, which will prostrate all.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows.
Pope.

AUTU'MNITY.* n. s. [Lat. autumnitas.] The season of autumn.

Thy furnace reeks
Hot steams of wine, and can aloof descrie
The drunken draughts of sweet autumnitie.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 1.

AVU'LSED.* part. adj. [old Fr. avulsé, Lat. avulsus.] Plucked away.

Who scatter wealth, as though the radiant crop
Glitter'd on every bough; and every bough,
Like that the Trojan gather'd, once avuls'd,
Were by a splendid successor supplied,
Instant, spontaneous. Shenstone.

AVU'LSION. n. s. [avulsio, Lat.] The act of pulling one thing from another.

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion. Philips.

The pressure of any ambient fluid can be no intelligible cause of the cohesion of matter; though such a pressure may hinder the avulsion of two polished superfices one from another, in a line perpendicular to them. Locke.

AUXE'SIS.† n. s. [Latin.] An increasing; an exornation, when, for amplification, a more grave and magnificent word is put instead of the proper word.
Smith's Rhetorick.

By this figure, auxesis, the orator doth make a low dwarf a tall fellow; of a little cottage, a great castle; of pebble stones, pearls; and of thistles, mighty oaks.
Peacham's Garden of Eloquence, sign. N. iiij.

AUXE'TICK.* adj. [from auxesis.] Amplifying; encreasing.

This auxetic power of the preposition is observable in the Epist. to Philemon, ver. 19.
Dr. Hutchinson, Serm. at Oxf. 1740, p. 8.

AUXI'LIAR.† } adj. [Fr. auxiliaire, from
AUXI'LIARY. } auxilium, Lat.] Assistant; helping; confederate.

The giant brood,
That fought at Thebes and Ilium on each side,
Mix'd with auxiliar gods. Milton, P. L.

Their tractates are little auxiliary unto ours, nor afford us any light to detenebrate this truth.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

There is not the smallest capillary vein but it is present with, and auxiliary to it, according to its use. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

Nor from his patrimonial heav'n alone
Is Jove content to pour his vengeance down;
Aid from his brother of the seas he craves,
To help him with auxiliary waves. Dryden.

AUXI'LIARY Verb. A verb that helps to conjugate other verbs.

AUXI'LIAR. } n. s. Helper; assistant; con-
AUXI'LIARY. } federate.

In the strength of that power, he might, without the auxiliaries of any further influence, have determined his will to a full choice of God. South.

There are, indeed, a sort of underling auxiliaries to the difficulty of a work, called commentators and criticks. Pope.

In almost all languages, some of the commonest nouns and verbs have many irregularities; such are the common auxiliary verbs to be and to have, to do and to be done, &c. Watts.

AUXILIA'TION. n. s. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Help; aid; succour. Dict.

AUXI'LIATORY.* adj. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Assisting; helping.

So sweet is the taste of gain from whatsoever; the visiting their holy reliques, the purchasing of masses both auxiliatory and expiatory, their rewards for praying, their collections for preachings.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

To AWA'IT. v. a. [from a and wait. See WAIT.]

1. To expect; to wait for.

Even as the wretch condemn'd to lose his life,
Awaits the falling of the murd'ring knife.
Fairfax.

Betwixt the rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of th' angelick guards, awaiting night.
Milton.

2. To attend; to be in store for.

To shew thee what reward
Awaits the good; the rest, what punishment.
Milton.

Unless his wrath be appeased, an eternity of torments awaits the objects of his displeasure.
Rogers.

AWA'IT. n. s. [from the verb.] Ambush. See WAIT.

And least mishap the most bliss alter may;
For thousand perils lie in close await
About us daily, to work our decay. Spenser.

To AWA'KE.† v. a. [Sax. apacian. To awake has the preterite awoke, Sax. apoc, or, (as we now more commonly speak,) awaked, Sax. apacob, Goth. and Icel. waka, Germ. waecke.]

1. To rouse out of sleep.

Take heed,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war.
Shakspeare.

Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. John, xi. 11.

2. To raise from any state resembling sleep.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head:
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd he stares round.
Dryden, St. Cæcilia.

3. To put into new action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel.
Spenser, F. Q.

The fair
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face. Pope.

To AWA'KE. v. n. To break from sleep; to cease to sleep.

Alack, I am afraid they have awak'd;
And 'tis not done! Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I awaked up last of all, as one that gathereth after the grape-gatherers. Ecclus. xxxiii. 16.

AWA'KE. adj. [from the verb.] Not being asleep; not sleeping.

Imagination is like to work better upon sleeping men, than men awake. Bacon.

Cares shall not keep him on the throne awake,
Nor break the golden slumbers he would take.
Dryden.

To AWA'KEN.† v. a. and v. n. The same with Awake.

Awake, Argantyr, Hervor the only daughter
Of thee and Suafu doth awaken thee. Hickes.

The book ends abruptly with his awakening in a fright. Pope, Note in his Temple of Fame.

AWA'KENER.* n. s. [from awaken. Formerly written awaker. V. Cotgrave in esveilleur.] That which awakens.

Eternal flames become their first awakeners; and men begin to be wise when it is too late.
Stilling fleet, Sermons, p. 29.

AWA'KENING.* n. s. [from awaken.] The act of awaking.

Supposing the inhabitants of a country quite sunk in sloth, or even fast asleep, whether upon the gradual awakening and exertion, first of the sensitive and locomotive faculties, next of reason and reflexion, then of justice and piety, the momentum of such country or state, would not, in proportion thereunto, become still more and more considerable? Bp. Berkely, Querist, 591.

To AWA'RD.† v. a. [derived by Skinner, somewhat improbably, from peapb, Sax. towards, Dr. Johnson says, and very justly; but he proposes no other etymology. It is from the old Fr. awarder, "prononcer sur le competence des juges d'une affaire;" not from à garder, as Mr. Tooke would lead us to believe in his Diversions of Purley, according to his definition, "to have or hold in possession," in contradiction to Spelman's "custodire, to keep;" over whom he therefore needlessly triumphs. Award is also the old Fr. subst. for arbitrage, an award. V. Lacombe and Roquefort.] To adjudge; to give any thing by a judicial sentence.

A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine; The court awards it, and the law doth give it. Shakspeare.

It advances that grand business, and according to which their eternity hereafter will be awarded. Decay of Piety.

A church which allows salvation to none without it, nor awards damnation to almost any within it. South.

Satisfaction for every affront cannot be awarded by stated laws. Collier, on Duelling.

To AWA'RD. v. n. To judge; to determine.

Th' unwise award to lodge it in the tow'rs, An off'ring sacred. Pope's Odyssey.

AWA'RD.† n. s. [old Fr. award.] Judgement; sentence; determination.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove To her, and him who best deserves her love. Dryden.

Affection bribes the judgment, and we cannot expect an equitable award, where the judge is made a party. Glanville.

To urge the foe, Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair, Were to refuse the awards of Providence. Addison's Cato.

AWA'RDER.* n. s. [from award.] A judge.

The just awarder of vengeance upon those miscreant wretches. Barrow, vol. 1. Serm. 2.

The high awarders of immortal fame. Thomson, Liberty, ii.

AWA'RE.† adv. [from a and ware, an old word for cautious; it is however, perhaps an adjective; ȝepapian, Sax. Dr. Johnson says. He might have confirmed his supposition by the Goth. and Su.adj. war, Sax. pap.] Excited to caution; vigilant; in a state of alarm; attentive.

Ere I was aware, I had left myself nothing but the name of a king. Sidney.

Ere sorrow was aware, they made his thoughts bear away something else besides his own sorrow. Sidney's Arcadia.

Temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves; so that we are but little aware of them, and less able to withstand them. Atterbury.

To AWA'RE. v. n. To beware; to be cautious.

So warn'd he them aware themselves; and Instant, without disturb, they took alarm. Par. Lost.

This passage is by others understood thus, He warned those who were aware, of themselves.

To AWA'RN.* v. a. [from a and warn.] To caution.

Now gan the humid vapour shed the ground With perly deaw, and th' earthës gloomy shade Did dim the brightnesse of the welkin round, That every bird and beast awarned made To shrowd themselves, while sleep their senses did invade. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 46.

AWA'Y.† adv. [apeȝ, Saxon.]

1 In a state of absence; not in any particular place.

They could make Love to your dress, although your face were away. Ben Jonson, Catiline.

It is impossible to know properties that are so annexed to it, that any of them being away, that essence is not there. Locke.

2. From any place or person.

I have a pain upon my forehead here — — Why that's with watching; 'twill away again. Shakspeare.

When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abraham drove them away again. Gen. xv. 11.

Would you youth and beauty stay, Love hath wings, and will away. Waller.

Summer suns roll unperceiv'd away. Pope.

3. Let us go.

Away, old man; give me thy hand; away; King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en; Give me thy hand. Come on. Shakspeare, King Lear.

4. Begone. [Sax. apeȝ-ȝan, away go.]

Away, and glister like the god of war, When he intendeth to become the field. Shakspeare, K. John.

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes: Come, let's away; hark, the shrill horn resounds. Smith, Phædra and Hippolitus.

Away, you flatt'rer! Nor charge his gen'rous meaning. Rowe, Jane Shore.

5. Out of one's own hands; into the power of something else.

It concerns every man, who will not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, to inquire into these matters. Tillotson.

6. It is often used with a verb; as to drink away an estate; to idle away a manor; that is, to drink or idle till an estate or manor is gone.

He play'd his life away. Pope.

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase.

Sir Valentine, whether away so fast? Shaksp.

8. Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company; Dr. Johnson says. It certainly means endure; as the instance, which I bring from Scripture, also shews.

She never could away with me. ———— Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow. Shakspeare.

The calling of assemblies, I cannot away with. Isaiah, i. 13.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas. S. Luke, xxiii. 18.

If you dare think of deserving our charms, Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms. Dryden.

AWA'YWARD.* adv. [Sax. apeȝ peapd.] Our elder adverb for away, in the sense of turning aside, from a place or person.

But he, that kyng, with eyen wrothe, His chere [his face] aweiwarde fro me caste. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

AWE.† n. s. [Goth. ogan, to fear; agis, terrour: eȝe, oȝa, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence. Spenser, State of Ireland.

This thought fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God: and yet with a filial fear, which at the same time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction. South.

What is the proper awe and fear which is due from man to God? Rogers.

To AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear; to keep in subjection.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him: or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. Bacon.

Why then was this forbid? Why, but to awe? Why, but to keep you low, and ignorant, His worshippers? Milton.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law, To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues, will work on more. Atterbury.

AWE'ARY.* adj. [from a and weary. A word, Mr. Mason says, twice used by Shakspeare. I believe it is used full half a dozen times by the great poet; from whom it has been perhaps adopted by Wycherley, in an example which Mr. Tooke has cited.] Weary; tired.

I am aweary; give me leave a while. Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

Are you aweary of that title? Wycherley, Love in a Wood.

AWE-BAND. n. s. [from awe and band.] A check. Dict.

AWE-COMMANDING.* adj. [from awe and command.] Striking with awe.

Her lion port, her awe-commanding face, Attemper'd sweet to virgin grace. Gray, The Bard.

AWE-STRUCK.* part. adj. [from awe and strike.] Impressed with awe.

I was awe-struck, And, as I past, I worshipt. Milton, Comus, ver. 301.

A'WFUL.† adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen least wise. Milton, P. L.

I approach thee thus, and gaze Insatiate; I thus single; nor have fear'd Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd, Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair! Milton.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth Thrust from the company of awful men. Shaks.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

To pay their awful duty to our presence. Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men. Watts.

A'WFULLY.† adv. [from awful.]

1. In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

All men will be ready most awfully to dread Him, unto whom they see princes themselves humbly to stoop and bow. Barrow's Works, i. 36.

How shall I then attempt to sing of Him, Who, Light Himself, in uncreated light Invested deep, dwells awfully retir'd From mortal's eye, or angel's purer ken! Thomson, Summer, ver. 177.

2. In a manner striking with awe.

The lion awfully forbids the prey. Dryden, Hind and Panther, v. 304.

A'WFUL-EYED.* adj. [from awful and eye.] Having eyes exciting awe.

Pure and undefiled temperance, manly and awful-eyed fortitude. More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 373.

A'WFULNESS. n. s. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness, and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrours upon every thing. Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe; little used.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

To AWHA'PE.† v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonick language had anciently wapen, to strike, or some such word, from which weapons, or offensive arms, took their denomination. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. The word is found both in Chaucer and Lidgate; and the etymology seems to be Sax. either apeoppan, to cast down, or papean, to wonder or be amazed.] To strike; to confound; to terrify.

Ah! my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape,
Deeply do your sad words my wits awhape,
Both for because your grief doth great appear,
And eke because myself am touched near.
M. Hubbard's Tale.

AWHE'ELS.* adv. On wheels.

And will they not cry then, the world runs awheels. B. Jonson, Masques, Vis. of Delight.

AWHI'LE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;
And if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile. Shaksp.
Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,

AWH'IT.* adv. [Sax. apiht. This word is sometimes used adverbially, but it is only a whit, that is, a jot, a tittle.

Did he [God] find our sins laid upon the blessed Son of his love, of his nature? He spares him not awhit. Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 188.

AWK.† adj. [A barbarous contraction of the word awkward, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites L'Estrange in proof. But the fact is, awk is one of our old adjectives; and is found in the Promptuarium Parvulorum, (1510,) with two definitions; "awke or angry, contrarius; awke or wrong, sinister." The adverb awkly or perversely, is also there. It may be from the old Goth. auk, a beast.] Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits as the steeples; and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration. L'Estrange.

A'WKWARD. adj. [Dr. Johnson gives the Saxon æpeapb, i. e. backward, untoward, as the etymology. Perhaps the German qwar or qwer, opposite, oblique, or crooked, may have contributed to the formation of this word; or rather it is the old adj. awk with the Sax. peapb, towards.]

1. Inelegant; unpolite; untaught; ungenteel.

Proud Italy,
Whose manners still our tardy, apish nation
Limps after in base awkward imitation. Shaksp.
Their own language is worthy their care; and they are judged of by their handsome or awkward way of expressing themselves in it. Locke.

An awkward shame, or fear of ill usage, has a share in this conduct. Swift.

2. Unready; unhandy; not dexterous; clumsy.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;
So true, that he was awkward at a trick. Dryden.

3. Perverse; untoward.

And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. 2.
A kind and constant friend
To all that regularly offend;
But was implacable and awkward,
To all that interlop'd and hawker'd. Hudibras.

A'WKWARDLY. adv. [from awkward.] Clumsily; unreadily: inelegantly; ungainly.

Dametas nodding from the waste upwards, and swearing he never knew man go more awkwardly to work. Sidney.
When any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it was suitable to their breeding. Locke.
If any pretty creature is void of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working. Addison.
She still renews the ancient scene;
Forgets the forty years between;
Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry;
Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry. Prior.
If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

A'WKWARDNESS. n. s. [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unsuitableness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italians, which easily discovers their airs not to be natural. Addison.
All his airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them; but these awkward airs are worn away in company. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

AWL.† n. s. [Goth. aal, Sax. æle, ale, Germ. ahl. "Ahl, quodlibet oblongum et tenue; hinc ale, acicula Gallis, nostrum schuchahl, &c." Loesch. Celt. Lit. p. 67.] A pointed instrument to bore holes.

He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl. Hooker.
You may likewise prick many holes with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth. Mortimer, Husbandry.

A'WLESS. adj. [from awe, and the negative less.]

1. Wanting reverence; void of respectful fear.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force,
The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shaks.
He claims the bull with awless insolence,
And having seiz'd his horns, accosts the prince.
Dryden.

2. Wanting the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house;
The tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind:
Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

AWME, or AUME. n. s. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight steckans, or twenty verges or verteels; answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one sixth of a ton of France, or one-seventh of an English ton. Arbuthnot.

AWN.† n. s. [Goth. ahana, Su. agn.] The beard growing out of the corn or grass. An old subst. in the Prompt. Parv. and still a common word in the north of England.

A'WNING.† n. s.

1. A cover spread over a boat or vessel, to keep off the weather.

Our ship became sulphureous, no decks, no awnings, nor invention possible, being able to refresh us. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 7.

2. A covering to defend those who sit under it from the rays of the sun.

Round the parapet-wall at top are placed rows of square pillars, meant either for ornament according to some traditional mode of decoration, or to fix awnings to, that such as sit there for the benefit of the sea-breeze may be sheltered from the rays of the sun. Swinburne's Trav. through Spain, Let. 28.

AWO'KE. The preterite from awake.

And she said, the Philistines be upon thee, Sampson. And he awoke out of his sleep. Judges, xvi. 20.

AWO'RK. adv. [from a and work.] On work; into a state of labour; into action.

So after Phyrrhus' pause,
Aroused vengeance sets him new awork. Shaks.
By prescribing the condition, it sets us awork to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hammond.

AWO'RKING. adj. [from awork.] Into the state of working.

Long they thus travelled, yet never met
Adventure which might them aworking set.
Hubbard's Tale.

AWRY'.† adv. [from the Sax. pṗiðan, Su. wrida, to writhe.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes still fast'ned on the ground,
Are governed with goodly modesty;
That suffers not one look to glance awry,
Which may let in a little thought unsound.
Spenser.
Like perspectives which rightly gaz'd upon,
Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,
Distinguish form. Shakspeare, Richard II.
A violent cross wind, from either coast,
Blows them transverse; ten thousand leagues awry,
Into the devious air. Milton.

2. Asquint; with oblique vision:

You know the king
With jealous eyes has look'd awry
On his son's actions. Denham's Sophy.

3. Not in the right or true direction.

I hap to step awry, where I can see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Brerewood.

4. Not equally between two points; unevenly.

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage. Pope.

5. Not according to right reason; perversely.

All awry, and which wried it to the most wry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amiss, than how it should be amended. Sidney.
Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none. Milton.

AXE.† n. s. [eax, acre, Sax. ascia, Lat. auizi, Goth. ax, Su-Dalekarl. "Ax Scandis aliisque Celtis securim notabat." Loesch. Celt. Lit. p. 81.] An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.

No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakspeare.

There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No sounding axe presum'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryd.

A'XHEAD.* n. s. [from axe and head.] The head or iron part of the axe.

As one was felling a beam, the axhead fell into the water. 2 Kings, vi. 5.

If an axhead be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically much lighter than it; it had been supernatural at that time, as well as in the days of Elisha. Bentley, Serm. p. 131.

AXILLA. n. s. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit. Quincy.

AXI'LLAR. } adj. [from axilla, Lat.] Be-
A'XILLARY. } longing to the arm-pit.

Axillary artery is distributed unto the hand; below the cubit, it divideth into two parts. Brown.

A'XIOM. n. s. [axiomo, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω.]

1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.

Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hooker.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.

The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hooker.

Their affirmations are no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing. Brown.

AXIOMA'TICAL.* adj. [from axiom.] Relating to an axiom.

Hippocrates did well to front his axiomatical experiments (the book of Aphorisms) with the grand miscarriages in the practice of most able physicians. Whitlock's Man. of the Eng. p. 109.

A'XIS. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.

But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.

It might annually have compassed the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.

On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope.

A'XLE.† } n. s. [axis, Lat. axel, Su.
A'XLE-TREE. } Goth. and Teut.] The pin which passes through the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakspeare.

The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, What a dust do I raise. Bacon.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton, Comus.

He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne or burning axle-tree could bear. Milton, Christ's Nativity.

AY.† adv. [perhaps from aio, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. But we derive it more probably from the Goth. and Sax. ga and ıa, yea. Brit. and Corn. a, yes. Armorick also ha, yes.]

1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.

Return you thither? ———
— Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakspeare.

What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our consort? Say ay; and be the captain of us all. Shakspeare.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yes, certainly; and more than that.

Remember it, and let it make thee crest fall'n; Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakspeare.

AY ME.* interj. [Gr. οιμοι, Ital. ahime.] A phrase, often found in pastoral and elegiack poetry, implying dejection and sorrow; and so much used in the courtship of elder days, as to render it the object of laughter and contempt. It is the same as ah me! See AH.

Ay me! I fondly dream! Milton, Lycidas, ver. 56.

Aymees, and hearty heigh-hoes,
Are sallets fit for soldiers! Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca, i. 2.

Cupid is the hero of heigh-hoes, [and] admiral of ay-mees. Heywood's Love's Mistress.

Sonnets from the melting lover's brain,
Aymees and elegies. The Woman Hater, (1607) iii. 1.

AYE.† adv. [Goth. aiv (an aiva, for ever,) Sax. apa, or rather aa, from the old Goth. a, always.] Always; to eternity; for ever. It is now rarely used, and only in poetry.

And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedyless for aye he doth him hold. Spenser, F. Q.

Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life. Shakspeare.

The soul, though made in time survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir J. Davies.

And hears the muses, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.

The astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.

A'YGREEN. n. s. The same with houseleek; which see. Dict.

A'YRY.† n. s. [It should be written eyery or eyry. Teut. ey, an egg.] The nest of the hawk.

I should discourse on the brancher, the haggard, and then treat of their several ayries. Walton's Angler.

A'ZEROLE.* n. s. [Fr. azarole.] A small medlar tree, called the three-grained medlar, or Neapolitan medlar-tree. Cotgrave.

A'ZIMUTH. n. s. [Arab.]

1. The azimuth of the sun, or of a star is, an arch between the meridian of the place, and any given vertical line.

2. Magnetical Azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.

3. Azimuth Compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetic azimuth.

4. Azimuth Dial, is a dial whose stile or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.

5. Azimuths, called also verticle circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles, in all the points thereof. Chambers.

A'ZURE. adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazur, Arab. from lazuli, a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.

Like pomels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney.

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

To A'ZURE.* v. a. [from the adj.] To colour any thing blue. Elyot's Dict.

A'ZURED.* adj. [from azure.] Blue.

I have bedimm'd [winds,
The noon-tide sun, call'd forth the mutinous
And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The proceeding and power of God, covering, from his heaven and azured throne, his poor children, exposed otherwise unto all injuries of weather, storms, and tempests. Harmar's Transl. of Beza's Sermons, p. 371.

Come, serene looks,
Clear as the crystal brooks,
Or the pure azur'd heaven. Sir H. Wotton's Rem. p. 391.

A'ZURN.* adj. [Fr. azurin, Ital. azzurino.] Of a bright blue colour; azury, as Cotgrave calls it, or sky-coloured.

The azurn sheen
Of turkis blue, and emerald green. Milton, Comus, v. 893.

A'ZYME.* n. s. [Fr. azyme, from Gr. a, without, and ζύμη, leaven. This word was introduced into our language by the earlier translators of the Bible, and is condemned by the translators of the present version in their address to the reader.] Unleavened bread.

We have shunned the obscurity of the Papists in their azymes, tunick, &c. The Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

B.

B, The second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gascons with V; from which an epigrammatist remarks, That bibere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

BAA.† n. s. [Bisc. and old Fr. bee, bleating.] The cry of a sheep.

— Therefore thou art a sheep ———
Such another proof would make me cry baa.
Shakspeare.

To BAA.† v. n. [balo, Lat. bee, Fr. See the substantive.] To cry like a sheep.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is fet,
He treble baas for help, but none can get. Sidney.
He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.
Shakspeare, Coriol. ii. 1.

To BA'BBLE.† v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr. balbus, Lat. supposed from babel, Heb. See BABEL.]

1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praises I repeat no more,
But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore. Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these he used to babble indifferently in all companies. Arbuthnot.
Let the silent sanctuary show,
What from the babbling schools we may not know.
Prior.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.

There is more danger in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy.
L'Estrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shaksp.
And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,
In all the speeches of the babbling earth. Prior.
The babbling echo had descry'd his face;
She, who in other's words her silence breaks.
Addison.

To BA'BBLE.* v. a. To prate.

Others [of the old philosophers] have gone yet farther, and babbled something of eternal life.
Harmar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, 1587, p. 108.

BA'BBLE. n. s. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.

This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;
Here is a coil with protestation! Shakspeare.
Come, no more,
This is mere moral babble. Milton.
With volleys of eternal babble,
And clamour more unanswerable. Hudibras.
The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes. Glanville.

BA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from babble.] Senseless prate; empty words.

Deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge. Milton, of Education.

BA'BBLER.† n. s. [from babble, and Germ. babbeler.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a babbler. Shakspeare.
The serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler is no better. Eccles. x. 11.
The apostle had no sooner proposed it to the masters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of secrets.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime.
Spenser, F. Q.
Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust,
L'Estrange.

BA'BBLING.* n. s. [from babble.] Foolish or unprofitable talk.

O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. 1 Tim. vi. 20.

BABE.† n. s. [babbe, Su.-Goth. baban, Welch; babbaerd, Dutch.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means; and easy tasks;
He might have child me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakspeare.
Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden.
The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles.
Dryden.

BA'BEL.* n. s. [Heb. "That pregnant relique of the new world's ambition, Babel by name; so called from the event of that, because there their language was confounded. For so the Hebrews intimate by the word babel; a word which, in our mother tongue, we yet retain from our Saxon ancestors, as they from Askenaz; for when we hear a man speak confusedly, we say he bables." Gregory's Posthuma, 1650, p. 186. The word is in our old dictionaries. Bullokar's Exposition of Hard Words defines it confusion.] Disorder; irregular mixture; tumult.

I heard a hundred cries, the devil, the devil;
Then roaring, and then tumbling; all the chambers
Are a mere babel, or another bedlam.
Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.
That babel of strange heathen languages.
Hammond, Serm. p. 508.
The whole babel of sectaries joined against the church, the king, and the nobility for twenty years.
Swift, Rom. Cath. Reasons for Rep. the Test.
We have seen what a lofty babel has been raised by this grand architect of mischief and confusion, the devil. South's Sermons, viii. 124.

BA'BERY. n. s. [from babe.] Finery to please a babe or child.

So have I seen trim books in velvet dight,
With golden leaves and painted babery
Of seely boys, please unacquainted sight. Sidney.

BA'BISH.† adj. [from babe.] Childish.

If he be bashful, and will soon blush, they call him a babish and ill brought up thing. Ascham.
They that are childish, or rather babish, will be scandalized with every little offensive thing.
Dr. Tooker, of the Fabrick of the Ch. &c. 1604, p. 75.

BA'BISHLY.* adv. [from babish.] Childishly.

One that spake so babishly.
Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 404.

BABO'ON.† n. s. [babouin, Fr. It is supposed by Skinner to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe. Bryant says, that it is so called from the Egyptian deity Babon, to which it was sacred. Anc. Mythol.] A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboons. Shakspeare.
He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon. Addison.

BA'BY. n. s. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum. Shakspeare.
The child must have sugar plums, rather than make the poor baby cry. Locke.
He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay for the portion, nor the mother for babies to play with. Locke.

2. A small image in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke saw that Perkin would prove a runnagate; and it was the part of children to fall out about babies. Bacon.
Since no image can represent the great Creator, never think to honour him by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay. Stillingfleet.

BA'BY.* adj. [from the substantive.] Like a baby; diminutive; small.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subséquent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. Shaksp. Tr. and Cres.
What is this,
That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To BA'BY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To treat one like a baby; to impose upon.

At best it [wealth] babies us with endless toys,
And keeps us children till we drop to dust.
Young, Night Thoughts, 6.

BA'BYHOOD.* } n. s. [from baby.] The
BA'BYSHIP. } latter of these words is in Minsheu's old dictionary. Infancy; childhood.

BA'BYISH.* adj. [from baby, Welsh babiaidd. This is the modern word; for it was anciently written babysh, without the i. See also BABISH, as given by Johnson.] Childish; in the state of an infant.

Humbleness of spirite, babysh submission.
Confutation of N. Shaxton, 1546, sign. G. 4. b.
He was then so weake, so infatuate, and babyshe, that not only wyse men, learned men, and strong men, did set him light, but also yonge maydes, children, &c. Bale on the Revel. sign. D d. 7. b.

BABYLO'NICAL.* adj. [from Babel, or Babylon.] Tumultuous; disorderly.

He saw plainly their antiquity, novelty; their universality, a babylonical tyranny; and their consent, a conspiracy.

Harington's Br. View of the Church, p. 97.

BA'CCATED. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Beset with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BA'CCHANAL.* adj. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] Drunken; revelling.

Your solemne and bacchanal feasts, that you observe yearly.

Crowley's Deliberate Answer, 1587, fol. 26.

BA'CCHANAL.* n. s. A reveller; a devotee to Bacchus, the god of wine.

Living voluptuous like a bacchanal.

Marston's Scourge of Vill. iii. 9.

Arnobius, satirizing upon the Bacchanals, says, You wind yourselves round with snakes.

Stukely, Palæograph. Sacra, p. 44.

BACCHANA'LIAN.† n. s. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard. Dr. Johnson has given no example of this word; and perhaps it has not been beyond a century in our language. Coles takes no notice of it in his Dict. at the close of the 17th century. I find it used by Dr. Stukeley, a physician and divine of great learning, in his remarks on the followers of Bacchus, printed in one of his Antiquarian Discourses in 1736. He appliés the adjective also (which is common enough in late times, though wholly unnoticed by Dr. Johnson,) to what respects the festivals of those followers.

All sculptures of the Bacchinalians [Bacchanalians] represent frantick men and women.

Stukely, Palæograph. Sacra, p. 24.

BACCHANA'LIAN.* adj. Relating to revelry.

If the one represents a religious or a bacchanalian subject, its companion represents another of the same kind. A. Smith, of the Imitative Arts.

West-country lads, who drank ale, smoked tobacco, punned, and sung bacchanalian catches the whole evening.

Graves's Recoll. of Shenstone, p. 15.

BA'CCHANALS. n. s. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor,
Shall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink? Shakspeare.

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled?

Decay of Piety.

Both extremes were banish'd from their walls, Carthusian fasts, and fulsome bacchanals.

Pope, Imit. of Horace.

BA'CCHUS-BOLE. n. s. A flower not tall, but very full and broad-leaved.

Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and fero, to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing. Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such as bear a caliculate or naked berry; the flower and calix both falling off together; and leaving the berry bare; as the sassafras trees.
2. Such as have a naked monospermous fruit, that is, containing in it only one seed; as the arbutes.
3. Such as have but polyspermous fruit, that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jesminum, ligustrum.
4. Such as have their fruit composed of many acini, or round soft balls set close together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina. Ray.

BA'CCHICK. } lating to the riotous feasts of Bacchus.

They [the Grecian sophists] raised up a kind of bacchical enthusiasm, and transported their hearers, with some honey words, soft and effeminate phrases and accents, and a kind of singing tones.

Spencer's Vanity of Vulgar Prophecies, p. 78.

The bacchick orgia were celebrated on the tops of hills and desolate wild places.

Stukeley, Palæograph. Sacra, p. 39.

BACC'IVOROUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and voro, to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries. Dict.

BA'CHELOR.† n. s. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology, it not being well known what was its original sense. Junius derives it from βάκηλος, foolish; Menage, from bas chevalier, a knight of the lowest rank; Spelman, from baculus, a staff; Cujas, from buccella, an allowance of provision. The most probable derivation seems to be from bacca laurus, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. They are often addressed at Oxford, as florentissimi. Dr. Lawrence has observed, that Menage's etymology is much confirmed by the practice in our universities of calling a Bachelor, Sir. In Latin, baccalaureus, Sax. bachilep, old Fr. bacheler. Barbazan derives the word from baccalia, the bay or laurel tree, which Roquefort approves; though that of Menage is not to be discarded in the contemptuous manner which Roquefort would dictate.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such separation
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid. Shaksp.

The haunting of dissolute places, or resort to courtesans, are no more punished in married men than in bachelors. Bacon.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty which belongs to the bachelor's estate. Dryden.

Let sinful bachelors their woes deplore,
Full well they merit all they feel and more. Pope.

2. A man who takes his first degrees at the university in any profession.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to speak against the pope. Ascham.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of physick.

Mart. Scriblerus.

3. A knight of the lowest order. This is a sense now little used.

King Richard II. in the first year of his reign is said to have constituted certain persons to be of counsel to him; 1. Earls; 2. Barons; 3. Bannerets; and 4. Bachiliers. And, in the instrument of his deposition, the lower house of parliament are called the bachelers and commons of the land. But by bachelers in those two places is to be understood, I think, not the commons in general, but knights; and to this very day simple knights are styled knights bachelers.

Hody, Hist. of Convocations, p. 354.

4. Applied by Ben Jonson to an unmarried woman.

We do not trust your uncle; he would keep you
A bachelor still, by keeping of your portion;
And keep you not alone without a husband,
But in a sickness. Magnetick Lady.

BA'CHELORSHIP.† n. s. [from bachelor.]

1. The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship. Shaksp.

2. The state of him who has taken his first degree at the university.

The third year of my bachelorship should at once both make an end of my maintenance, and in respect of standing, give me a capacity of further preferment in that house.

Bp. Hall, Rem. Life, p. 8.

BACK.† n. s. [Goth. ibukai, bac, bæc, Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

Part following enter, part remain without,
And mount on others backs, in hopes to share.
Dryden.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is shut: opposed to the palm.

Methought love pitying me, when he saw this,
Gave me your hand, the backs and palms to kiss.
Donne.

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires clothes; opposed to the belly.

Those who, by their ancestors, have been set free from a constant drudgery to their backs and their bellies, should bestow some time on their heads. Locke.

4. The rear: opposed to the van.

He might conclude that Walter would be upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his.

Clarendon.

5. The place behind.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that speaketh, so does the echo: for you have many back echoes to the place where you stand. Bacon.

Antheus, Sergestus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng. Dryd.

6. The part of any thing out of sight.

Trees set upon the backs of chimnies do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

9. To turn the back; to go away, to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.

His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies.

10. A large vessel used by brewers and distillers; a vat.

11. The bat is called the back or rere-mouse, in Huloet's old dictionary; and appears to have been once the usual word for it.

The other face — had winges like a backe or flindermouse. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 9. b.

BACK. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To the place from which one came.

Back you shall not to the house, unless
You undertake that with me. Shakspeare.

He sent many to seek the ship Argo, threatening that if they brought not back Medea, they should suffer in her stead. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Where they are, and why they came not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. Milton.

Back to thy native island might'st thou sail,
And leave half heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

2. Backward; as retreating from the present station.

I've been surpris'd in an unguarded hour,
But must not now go back; the love that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all
Its weak restraints. Addison.

5. Again: in return.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakspeare.

6. Again; a second time.

This Cæsar found, and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage. Waller.

The epistles being written from ladies forsaken by their lovers, many thoughts came back upon us in divers letters. Dryden.

To BACK. v. a. [from the noun back.]

1. To mount on the back of a horse.

That roan shall be my throne.
Well I will back him straight. O Esperance!
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. Shaksp.

2. To break a horse; to train him to bear upon his back.

Direct us how to back the winged horse;
Favour his flight, and moderate his course. Roscommon.

3. To place upon the back.

As I slept, methought,
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back'd,
Appear'd to me. Shakspeare.

4. To maintain; to strengthen; to support; to defend.

Back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'CON.† n. s. [probably from baken, that is, dried flesh, Dr. Johnson says; and Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is evidently the past participle of the Sax. bacan, to bake or dry by heat, Div. of Pur. vol. ii. p. 71. I may, however, refer, perhaps as strongly to the old Fr. bacon, which means dried flesh and pork. V. Lacombe, Wachter, Le Grand, and Roquefort. The Welsh also have bacwn.]

1. The flesh of a hog salted and dried.

High o'er the hearth a chine of bacon hung,
Good old Philemon seiz'd it with a prong,
Then cut a slice. Dryden.

2. The animal itself.

A young bacon,
Or a fine little smooth horse-colt.
Kyd's Spanish Tragedy.

3. To save the bacon, is a phrase for preserving one's self from being hurt; borrowed from the care of housewives in the country, where they have seldom any other provision in the house than dried bacon, to secure it from the marching soldiers.

What frightens you thus? my good son! says the priest;
You murder'd, are sorry, and have been confest.
O father! my sorrow will scarce save my bacon:
For 'twas not that I murder'd, but that I was taken.
Prior.

BACULO'METRY. n. s. [from baculus, Lat. and μέτρον.] The art of measuring distances by one or more staves. Dict.

BAD.† adj. [quaad, Dutch; compar. worse; superl. worst. Sir T. Herbert, in his Travels, tells us, that in the Mogul language "badd Adam is a bad man," p. 99. The Gothick baud, insipid, has been thought by Mr. H. Tooke to be the etymological root; but it may be doubted. I have met with the direct superlative of bad, which I offer as a curiosity, and not for imitation: "The baddest among the cardinals is chosen pope." Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion. It occurs also, strange to tell, in Wodroephe's old French and English Grammar, p. 318.]

1. Ill; not good: a general word, used in regard to physical or moral faults, either of men or things.

Most men have politicks enough to make, through violence, the best scheme of government a bad one. Pope.

2. Vicious; corrupt.

Thou may'st repent,
And one bad act, with many deeds well done,
May'st cover. Milton.

Thus will the latter, as the former, world
Still tend from bad to worse, Milton.

Our unhappy fates
Mix thee amongst the bad, or make thee run
Too near the paths, which virtue bids thee shun.
Prior.

3. Unfortunate; unhappy.

The sun his annual course obliquely made,
Good days contracted, and enlarg'd the bad.
Dryden.

4. Hurtful; unwholesome; mischievous; pernicious; with for.

Reading was bad for his eyes, writing made his head ake. Addison.

5. Sick: with of; as, bad of a fever.

BAD.
BADE. } The preterite of bid.

And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

BADGE.† n. s. [A word derived by Junius from bode or bade, a messenger; and supposed to be corrupted from badage, the credential of a messenger; but taken by Skinner and Minsheu from bagghe, Dut. a jewel, or bague, a ring, Fr. But it seems to come from bajulo, to carry, Lat. The Sax. bab or babe, a pledge, may also be offered.]

1. A mark or cognizance worn to shew the relation of the wearer to any person or thing.

But on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear resemblance of his dying lord;
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore.
Spenser.

The outward splendour of his office, is the badge and token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears. Atterbury.

2. A token by which one is known.

A savage tygress on her helmet lies;
The famous badge Clarinda us'd to bear. Fairfax.

3. The mark or token of any thing.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge. Shaksp.
Let him not bear the badges of a wreck,
Nor beg with a blue table on his back. Dryden.

To BADGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark as with a badge.
Your royal father's murdered——
—— Oh, by whom? ——
Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had don't;
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To mark actually with a badge.
A man may walk from one end of the town to the other, without seeing one beggar regularly badged. Swift, on giving Badges to the Poor.

BA'DGELESS.* adj. [from badge and less.] Having no badge.
While his light heels their fearful flight can take,
To get some badgeless blue upon his back.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

BA'DGER. n. s. [bedour, Fr. melis.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.
That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily. Brown.

To BA'DGER.* v. a. [perhaps from the noun.] To weary a person; to confound. Used only in colloquial language.

BA'DGER-LEGGED. adj. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.
His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger-legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange.

BA'DGER.† n. s. [perhaps from the Latin bajulus, a carrier; but, by Junius, derived from the badger, a creature who stows up his provision; and by Minsheu from baggage. Bajulus, however, seems to be the true etymology. Fuller, in his Worthies, (under Sussex,) mentions "higglers as bajulating provisions to London."] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another. Cowel.
Such exemption ought not to extend to badgers, or those who carry on a trade of buying of corn or grain, selling it again without manufacturing, or of other goods unmanufactured to sell the same again.
Nicolson and Burn's Hist. of Cumberland, p. 312.

BA'DINAGE.* } n. s. [Fr. The first of BADI'NERIE. } these words was in use for foolery a century and a half ago. See Coles's English Dict. in V.] Light or playful discourse.
When you find your antagonist beginning to grow warm, put an end to the dispute by some genteel badinage. Ld. Chesterfield.
The fund of sensible discourse is limited; that of jest and badinerie is infinite. Shenstone.

BA'DLY. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.
How goes the day with us? O tell me, Hubert.—
Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty?
Shakspeare.

BA'DNESS. n. s. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral; desert; depravity.
It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set at work by a reprovable badness in himself. Shaksp.
There is one convenience in this city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.
I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault. Addison.

To BA'FFLE.† v. a. [Fr. befler, according to Dr. Johnson, which indeed signifies to deceive. But it may be traced to the old Fr. en bas fouler; and also to baffoüer, which Cotgrave translates into baffle and disgrace.]

1. To elude; to make ineffectual.
They made a shift to think themselves guiltless in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.
He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to defeat with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing; to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer.
Etruria lost,
He brings to Turnus' aid his baffled host. Dryden.
When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question will not baffle, discourage, or break it. Locke.
A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as shall baffle his designs upon their country. Addison.

3. To disgrace; to insult; to mock.
[He] blotted out his arms with falshood blent,
And himself bafful'd, and his armes unherst,
And broke his sword in twaine.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 37.
See him laught at, see him baffel'd!
Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 81.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here.
Shakspeare, K. Richard II.
Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!
Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

To BA'FFLE.* v. n. To practise deceit.
Do we not palpably baffle, when, in respect to God, we pretend to deny ourselves, yet, upon urgent occasion, allow him nothing?
Barrow, Works, i. 437.
To what purpose can it be to juggle and baffle for a time? Ibid, iii. 180.

BA'FFLE.† n. s. [from the verb.] A defeat.
It is the skill of the disputant that keeps off a baffle. South.
The authors having missed of their aims, are fain to retreat with frustration and a baffle. South.
The Earl of Bristol had much wronged that great monarch, giving him a baffle insupportable.
Bp. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, P. I. p. 169.

BA'FFLER. n. s. [from baffle.] One that puts to confusion, or defeats.
Experience, that great baffler of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG.† n. s. [belze, Sax. from whence perhaps by dropping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, bage, bag; Goth. balgs, a pouch or bag; Germ. balg.]

1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.
Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakspeare.
What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full? South.
Waters were inclosed within the earth as in a bag. Burnet.
Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke.
Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained. [Bagge, Icel. sarcina.]
The swelling poison of the several sects,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bag. Dryden.
Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd;
So may thy cows their burden'd bags distend.
Dryden.

3. An ornamental purse of silk tied to men's hair.
We saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and black silken bag tied to it. Addison.

4. A term used to signify different quantities of certain commodities; as, a bag of pepper; a bag of hops.

To BAG.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a bag.
Accordingly he drain'd those marshy grounds,
And bagg'd them in a blue cloud. Dryden.
Hops ought not to be bagg'd up hot. Mortimer.

2. To load with a bag.
Like a bee bagg'd with his honey'd venom,
He brings it to your hive.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

3. To cause to swell like a bag; to make tumid. [In the Prompt. Parv. 1514, "baggen or bolen out," occurs, and is rendered tumeo.]
How doth an unwelcome dropsy bag up the eyes, and mis-shape the face and body, with unpleasing and unkindly tumours!
Bp. Hall, Works, 1661. vol. ii. 335.

To BAG.† v. n. To swell like a full bag. Formerly used in the figurative sense of swelling with disdain; as was the obsolete adverb baggingly.
She gothe upright, and yet she halte,
That baggith foul, and lokith fair.
Chaucer, Dreme, ed. Urr. 623.
The skin seemed much contracted, yet it bagged, and had a porringer full of matter in it.
Wiseman.
Two kids that in the valley stray'd
I found by chance, and to my fold convey'd;
They drain two bagging udders every day.
Dryden.

BAGATE'LLE.† n. s. [bagatelle, Fr.] A trifle; a thing of no importance: a word not naturalised, Dr. Johnson says; which seems to be a mistake; for it has been in use nearly two centuries. Bp. Jeremy Taylor writes it bagatello. Howell's books were published in the former part of the 17th century.]
They [the nuns] will entertain discourse till one be weary, if he bestow on them some small bagatels, as English gloves, or knives or ribands.
Howell, Instruct. for Foreign Travel, p. 34.
By this correspondence with you, I do as our East India merchants use to do; I venture beads and other bagatels, out of the proceed whereof I have pearl and other oriental jewels returned me in your's. Howell, Letters, iv. 44.
Even so small bagatelloes, or toys.
Bp. Taylor's Artif. Handsomeness, p. 27.
Heaps of hair rings and cypher'd seals;
Rich trifles, serious bagatelles. Prior.

BA'GGAGE. n. s. [from bag; baggage, Fr. bagage, Su.]

1. The furniture and utensils of an army.
The army was an hundred and seventy thousand footmen, and twelve thousand horsemen, besides the baggage. Judith, vii. 2.

Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared, nor left behind, but they hinder the march. Bacon.

They were probably always in readiness, and carried among the baggage of the army. Addison on Italy.

2. The goods that are to be carried away, as bag and baggage.

They and their married women, with bagge and baggages, would runne awaie from hence unto the countrie of Grece. Martin, on the Marriage of Priests, (1554,) sign. M. iv. b.

For dame the doxey to march round the circuit,
With bag and baggage. B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

Dolabella designed, when his affairs grew desperate in Egypt, to pack up bag and baggage, and sail for Italy. Arbuthnot.

3. A worthless woman; in French bagasse; so called, because such women follow camps. Ital. bagascia. Roquefort derives the French term from vagus, vaga.

A spark of indignation did rise in her, not to suffer such a baggage to win away any thing of hers. Sidney.

When this baggage meets with a man who has vanity to credit relations, she turns him to account. Spectator.

4. Not always the worthless woman, which Dr. Johnson means, viz. her who has forfeited her honour; but a pert young woman, a flirt, as Cotgrave also renders bagasse; and used jocosely.

Though the baggage [Annabella Lizard] would not speak out, I found the sum of her wishes was a rich fool, or a man so turned to her purposes, that she might enjoy his fortune, and insult his understanding. Guardian, No. 31.

5. Refuse; lumber; trumpery.

I believe that this baptism ought to be ministered, not with oil, salt, spittle, and such-like baggage, but only in clean and fair water.

Bp. Hooper, Conf. of Chr. Faith, (1584) § 61.

He speaketh not of receiving the pope's pardons, jubilees, dispensations, absolutions, and such like baggage. Fulke against Allen, p. 473.

BA'GNIO. n. s. [bagno, Ital. a bath.] A house for bathing, sweating, and otherwise cleansing the body.

I have known two instances of malignant fevers produced by the hot air of a bagnio. Arbuthnot on Air.

BA'GPIPE. n. s. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A musical instrument, consisting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a foot-ball by means of a port vent or little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve; and three pipes or flutes, the first called the great pipe or drone, and the second the little one; which pass the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the compass of three octaves. Chambers.

No banners but shirts, with some bad bagpipes instead of drum and fife. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and saw a general animated with the sound. Addison, Freeholder.

BA'GPIPER. n. s. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shaksp.

BAGUE'TTE. n. s. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

To BAIGNE. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to soak; a word out of use.

The women forslow not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL.† n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

1. Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken; whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent speciality, special bail or surety must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. Cowel.

Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,
The unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail.
Roscommon.

And bribe with presents, or when presents fail,
They send their prostituted wives for bail.
Dryden.

2. A surety; a bondsman; one who gives security for another.

Let me be their bail —
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion. Titus Andronicus.

3. A certain limit or bound within a forest. Kersey. Figuratively, power.

So did Diana and her maydens all
Use silly Faunus, now within their baile.
Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 49.

To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail —
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion ——
Thou shalt not bail them. Titus Andronicus.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower, the house of commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

BA'ILABLE.† adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.

They are not bailable,
They stand committed without bail or mainprise,
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

BA'ILIF.† n. s. [a word of doubtful etymology, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr. In our old vocabularies written baily, and so a steward is still called in many places. Dr. Johnson would not have considered, if he had met with it, the following etymology as undeserving attention, "Baul veteri Celtico usu notabat portare; unde est Latinum bajulare; et Scandica vox baul, onus, in historiâ Gothrici, p. 73., ac Longobardica vox ab Italis hodierno etiam usu conservatæ, bailo, atque Gallicis bailif, quæ primùm notabat gestatorem oneris, deinceps officialem muneris gravissimi administratorem." Loescheri Lit. Celt. p. 88.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff sent every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the undersheriffs and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailiff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK. n. s. [of baillie, Fr. and pic, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowel.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwicks. Spenser.

There issued writs to the sheriffs, to return the names of the several land owners in their several bailiwicks. Hale.

BA'ILMENT.* n. s. The delivery of things whether writings, goods, &c. sometimes to be delivered back to the bailor, that is, to him that so delivered them; sometimes to the use of the bailee, that is, of him to whom they are delivered; and sometimes also to a third person. Cowel.

BA'ILY.* n. s. [Fr. baillie.] The office or jurisdiction of a bailiff. The word, with this meaning, is not found in modern dictionaries; but in that of Coles, nearly a century and a half since, it is defined government. By the editors of Wicliffe's translation of the N. Test. it has been mistakenly explained, in the Glossary only as the officer. This old word probably gave rise to bailiwick.

He seide also to his disciplis, Ther was a man that hadde a baylyf. And this was defamed to him, as he hadde wastid his goodis. And he clepide him, and seyde to him, What heare I this thing of thee? Yelde rekenyng of thi baylye, for thou myght not now be baylyf.
Wickliffe, S. Luke, xvi. 1. 2.

BAIN.* n. s. [Fr. bain, baign, Ital. bagno, from bagnare, Lat. balneum. A word which occurs in most of our old dictionaries.] A bath; a washing-place.

Our baines at Bath with Virgil's to compare,
For their effects, I dare almost be bold.
Hakewill's Apology, p. 134.

To lie sweating so long in the baines.
Ibid. p. 365.

To BAIN.* v. a. See To BAIGNE. To bathe. Obsolete.

Bayning my breast. Turberville's Poems, (1570.)
To be bained, or wet. Huloet.

BAIRN.* } n. s. [Sax. beapn.] A child.
BARN. } See BEARN.

To BAIT. v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in some place, to tempt fish or other animals.

Oh, cunning enemy, that to catch a saint
With saints dost bait thy hook! most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a sure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine host of the garter. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Many sorts of fishes feed upon insects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the sex improv'd in amorous arts!
What new-found snares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's self, or horses, on the road.

What so strong,
But wanting rest, will also want of might?
The sun, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steeds the ocean waves among. Spenser.

To BAIT.† v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather from the Icel. and Goth. beita, beitan, to incite, to stir up.]

1. To attack with violence.

Who seeming sorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Spenser, F. Q.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet;
And to be baited with the rabble's curse. Shakspeare, Macb.

2. To harass by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with mastiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To BAIT.† v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment. Perhaps this word is more properly bate; to abate speed, Dr. Johnson says. But it is more probably from Sax. batan, to offer a bait. Dr. Jamieson thinks the Icel. beita, to drive cattle to pasture, (whence beit, feeding; pasture,) as the original.

But our desires tyrannical extortion,
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Though bent on speed; so here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison, Spectator.

To BAIT.† v. n. [Written also bate. A term in falconry. The word is derived by Minsheu either from the Fr. batre, to beat, or s'abatre, to descend.] To flap the wings, to make an offer of flying; to flutter, as a hawk when it pounces on its prey.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shaksp.

Hood my unmann'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shaksp.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch these kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shaks.

BAIT.† n. s. [from the verb, or the Icel. sub. beit. See To BAIT. Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is the past participle of the verb bite, in the supposed confirmation of which he brings, from B. Jonson's Sejanus, "baits, baits, for us to bite at."]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait. Shaksp.

2. A temptation; an enticement; allurement.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast,
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spenser.

Taketh therewith the souls of men, as with the baits. Hooker.

Sweet words I grant, baits and allurements sweet,
But greatest hopes with greatest crosses meet. Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roscommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal glory,
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense. Addison.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

If you grow dry before you end your business, pray take a bait here; I have a fresh hogshead for you. Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

The men of this world enjoy the good things of this life as their ultimate happiness, beyond which they look no farther; but good men use them as a viaticum or bait, as a present support and refreshment in their pursuit of a far greater happiness. Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 660.

BAIZE. n. s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To BAKE. v. a. participle passive, baked or baken, [baka, Su.-Goth. bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth in some degree dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns
When dusty summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips.

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryd.

To BAKE. v. n.

1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakspeare.

2. To be heated or baked.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaksp. Macb.

BAKE-MEATS.† } Meats dressed by the BAKED MEATS. } oven.

In the uppermost basket there was all manner of bakemeats for Pharaoh. Gen. xl. 17.

There be some houses, wherein sweetmeats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than others. Bacon.

BA'KEHOUSE.† n. s. [Sax. bæchur.] A place for baking bread.

I have marked a willingness in the Italian artizans, to distribute the kitchen, pantry, and bakehouse under ground. Wotton.

BA'KEN. The participle from to bake.

There was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. 1 Kings.

BA'KER.† n. s. [Sax. bæcepe.] One whose trade is to bake.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'KER-FOOT.* n. s. An expression for an ill-shaped, or distorted foot.

The unhandsome warpings of bow-legs and baker-feet. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BA'KER-LEGGED.* adj. A person is said to be baker-legged, who has crooked legs, or goes in at the knees. Sherwood.

BA'LANCE. n. s. [balance, Fr. bilanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weighed,
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. [In astronomy.] One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our summers with thy rays,
And seated near the balance poise the days. Dryd.

To BA'LANCE. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for dirty interest. L'Estrange.

2. To regulate the weight in a balance; to keep in a state of just proportion.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to; to be equipollent; to counteract.

The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave
To balance the account of Blenheim's day. Prior.

Though I am very well satisfied, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Addison, Spectator.

To BA'LANCE. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered to any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BA'LANCER.† n. s. [Fr. balanceur.] The person that weighs any thing. Cotgrave.

BA'LANCING.* n. s. [from balance.] Equilibrium; poise.

Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds? Job, xxxvii. 16.

The strange balancings of parties for the safety of the whole. Dr. Spenser, Serm. (1660,) p. 50.

BA'LASS Ruby.† n. s. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term, according to Dr. Johnson. Some call it a Turkish ruby. Palsgrave renders it balé, and Cotgrave balay.] A kind of ruby.

Balass ruby is of a crimson colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

To BALBU'CINATE. v. n. [from balbutio, Lat.] To stammer in speaking. Dict.

To BALBU'TIATE. v. n. The same with balbucinate. Dict.

BALCO'NIED.* adj. [from balcony.] Having balconies.

The house was double-balconied in front. Roger North.

BALCO'NY.† n. s. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital. Formerly written balcone in our language. Sax. balc, a beam.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

Then pleasure came, who, liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weaken'd all by alteration. Herbert.

Houses of two stories have, many of them, very large upper rooms, which have many double doors in the sides of them, like those in our balconies, to open and let in fresh air.

Terry's Voyage to East India, (1655,) p. 190.

To look upon a woman, that passeth by, veiled; or to look up, if any be at a window, or in a balcone, is the cause of death [in the East] unto many. M. Casaubon, of Credulity, &c. p. 291.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.

BALD.† adj. [bal, Welsh. Written balled or ballid by Chaucer and Wicliffe, which seems to be the etymology. See BALL. "His head was balled, and shone as any glass," Prol. C. T. 198. i. e. smooth as a ball. Wicliffe uses ballid for despoiled of hair, Isaiah iii. 17. 1 Cor. xi. 6.]

1. Wanting hair; despoiled of hair by time or sickness.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.

I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.

He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addison.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shaksp.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end o' the table; but they stand bald before him. Shakspeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant. [old Fr. baulde, Rom. de R.]

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation of the Ilias, begins the praise of Homer where he should have ended it. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Mean; naked; without dignity; without value; bare.

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending their obedience fails
To the greater bench. Shakspeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thraseas, Tharasymachus, and Thrasybulus, &c. Gibson.

BA'LDACHIN.† n. s. [baldachino, Ital. baldechinon, old Fr. drap de fil d'or, Lacombe.] A piece of architecture, in form of a canopy, supported with columns, and serving as a covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, (Du Cange,) and was a canopy carried over the host. Builder's Dict.

No baldachino, no cloth of state, was there; the king being absent. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 185.

BA'LDERDASH.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson proposes the Sax. balb, bold, and dash; Dr. Jamieson suggests the Icelandick bulldur, the prating of fools. But the etymology is of laughable origin perhaps. Balderdash, in its primary sense, probably signified (as Mr. Malone has also observed) the froth or foam made by barbers in dashing their balls backwards and forwards in hot water; it afterwards seemed to denote a mixture of liquours. Yet a learned friend suggests that Lhuyd, in his Archaiologia Britannica, has given, among some Welsh words omitted in Davies's Welsh Dictionary, baldardhy, to stammer, and baldardhys, talkative; whence the word balderdash is therefore conjectured to be formed.] Any thing jumbled together without judgement; a rude mixture; a confused light, or frothy discourse.

They would no more live under the yoke of the sea, or have their heads washed with his bubbly spume or barbers balderdash. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe, 1599, p. 8.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance,
To drink such balderdash, or bonny clabber! B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 2.

Mine is such a drench of balderdash. Beaum. and Fl. Woman's Prize.

To BA'LDERDASH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To mix or adulterate any liquour.

When monarchy began to bleed,
And treason had a fine new name;
When Thames was balderdash'd with Tweed,
And pulpits did like beacons flame. The Geneva Ballad, 1674.

Can wine or brandy receive any sanction by being balderdashed with two or three sorts of simple waters? Mandeville, on Hypochondr. Dis. 1730, p. 279.

BA'LDLY. adv. [from bald.] Nakedly; meanly; inelegantly.

BA'LDMONY. n. s. The same with GENTIAN.

BA'LDNESS.† n. s. [from bald.]

1. The want of hair.

The baldness, thinness, and deformity of their hair, is usually supplied by borders and combings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 43.

2. The loss of hair.

Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting to a wound,
Spreads leprosy and baldness round. Swift.

3. Meanness of writing; inelegance.

Borde has all the baldness of allusion, and barbarity of versification, belonging to Skelton, without his strokes of satire and severity. Warton, Hist of Eng. Poetry, iii. 74.

BA'LDPATE.* n. s. [from bald and pate.] A head shorn of hair; applied to a friar.

Come hither, goodman baldpate; do you know me? Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'LDPATE.* } adj. Shorn of hair; with-
BA'LDPATED. } out natural covering.

Nor with Dubartas bridle up the floods,
Nor perriwig with snow the baldpate woods. Soame and Dryden, Art of Poetry.

You baldpated, lying rascal; you must be hooded, must you. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'LDRICK.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It was formerly written baudrick, and signified a belt of leather, from the old Fr. baudrier, derived from the verb baudroyer, to dress skins. V. Lacombe, low Lat. baudraius, Lat. balteus.]

1. A girdle. By some dictionaries it is explained a bracelet; but I have not found it in that sense.

Athwart his breast a baldrick brave he ware,
That shin'd like twinkling stars, with stones most precious rare. Spenser, F. Q.

A radiant baldrick o'er his shoulders ty'd,
Sustain'd the sword that glitter'd at his side. Pope.

2. The zodiack.

That like the twins of Jove, they seem'd in sight,
Which deck the baldrick of the heavens bright.
Spenser.

BALE.† n. s. [bale, Fr.]

1. A bundle or parcel of goods packed up for carriage.

One hired an ass in the dog-days, to carry certain bales of goods to such a town. L'Estrange.

It is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought over from China. Woodward.

2. A pair of dice. Obsolete.

It is a false die of the same bale, but not the same cut. Overbury, Charact. sign. Q. 2.

For exercise of arms a bale of dice.
B. Jonson, New Inn.

To BALE. v. n. [emballer, Fr. imballare, Ital.] To make up into a bale.

To BALE. v. a. A word used by the sailors, who bid bale out the water; that is, lave it out, by way of distinction from pumping. Skinner. I believe from bailler, Fr. to deliver from hand to hand.

BALE.† n. s. [bæl, Sax. bale, Dan. bal, bol, Icelandick, Cimbr. baul.] Misery; calamity; mischief; poison, its genuine meaning.

She look'd about, and seeing one in mail,
Armed to point, sought back to turn again;
For light she hated as the deadly bale.
Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 16.

BA'LEFUL.† adj. [Sax. bealofull.]

1. Full of misery; full of grief; sorrowful; sad; woful.

Ah! luckless babe, born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred.
Spenser, F. Q.

But when I feel the bitter baleful smart,
Which her fair eyes unwares do work in me,
I think that I a new Pandora see. Spenser.

Round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate.
Milton.

2. Full of mischief; destructive; poisonous. See BALE.

But when he saw his threat'ning was but vain,
He turn'd about, and search'd his baleful books again. Spenser, F. Q.

Boiling choler chokes,
By sight of these our baleful enemies. Shakspeare.

Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims,
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs;
His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides. Dryden.

Happy Ierne, whose most wholesome air
Poisons envenom'd spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad, and vipers from her shore.
Philips.

BA'LEFULLY. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; mischievously.

BA'LISTER.* n. s. [Lat. balista, Fr. baleste.] A cross-bow. See ARCUBALIST.

A spindle full of raw thread, to make a false string for the king's balister or cross-bow.
Blount's Tenures, p. 92.

BALK.† n. s. [balk, Dutch and Germ. balc, Sax.] A great beam, such as is used in building; a rafter over an outhouse or barn.

BALK.† n. s. [derived by Skinner from valicare, Ital. to pass over. It is the Welsh balc, the Sax. balc, and the Su.-Goth. balk.]

1. A ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of the field; land over which the plough slips without turning it up; figuratively, any thing over-passed untouched.

Doles and marks, which of ancient time were laid for the division of meres and balks in the fields, to bring the owners to their right.
Homilies, ii. 235.

The mad steele about doth fiercely fly,
Not sparing wight, ne leaving any balke,
But making way for death at large to walke.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 16.

2. A disappointment.

There cannot be a greater balk to the tempter, nor a more effectual defeat to all his temptations.
South, Serm. vi. 311.

To BALK.† v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To disappoint; to frustrate; to elude.

Another thing in the grammar schools I see no use of, unless it be to balk young lads in learning languages. Locke.

Every one has a desire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his understanding by what is too hard for it. Locke.

But one may balk this good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant. Prior.

The prices must have been high: for a people so rich would not balk their fancy. Arbuthnot.

Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monster flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries. Pope.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Pope.

2. To miss any thing; to leave untouched.

Who can believe, that we could so balk the substance, and name that only, which in comparison is but an appendix thereto.
Mede, Apostasy of the Latter Times, P. 2.

He [St. John] balked not one of Herod's sins, but reproved him of all the evils that he had done.
Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 116.

They were somewhat perplexed by espying the French embassador, with the king's coach and other attending him; which made them baulk the beaten road, and teach post-hackneys to leap hedges. Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 213.

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,
He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;
And as he runneth here and there,
An acorn cup he greeteth;
Which soon he taketh by the stalk,
About his head he lets it walk,
Nor doth he any creature balk,
But lays on all he meeteth. Drayton, Nimphid.

3. To omit, or refuse any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was balkt. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

I shall balk this theme. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 253.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or something like this, seems to be intended here.

Ten thousand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. 1.

To BALK.* v. n. [Twice used by Spenser, with arbitrary meanings.]

1. To turn aside.

When as the ape him heard so much to talke
Of labour, that did from his liking balke,
He would have slipt the collar handsomely.
Mother Hubberd's Tale, v. 268.

2. To deal in cross purposes; to speak differently from the intention.

But to occasion him to further talke,
To feed her humor with his pleasing style,
Her list in stryfull termes with him to balke,
And thus replyde. Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 12.

BA'LKERS. n. s. [In fishery.] Men who stand on a cliff, or high place on the shore, and give a sign to the men in the fishing-boats, which way the passage or shole of herrings is. Cowel.

The pilchards are pursued by a bigger fish, called a plusher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker.
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BALL. n. s. [bol, Dan. bol, Dutch.]

Bal, dimunitively Belin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls, Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bâl, or Bel, and likewise Ból and Biil. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Boile. Πόλος is the head or poll, and πολεῖν, is to turn. Βῶλος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and bell, and ball, which the Welsh term bél. By the Scotch also the head is named bhêl; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians, by βαλλην understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαάλ, βήλ, and likewise βῶλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, Ἦλ and Ἰλ, whence Ἴλος, and Ἥλιος, Γήλιος, and Βηλιος, and also in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, Ἔλενος, Γέλενος, and Βέλενος, signified the sun; and Ἑλένη, Γελένη, and Βελένη, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, hol and heil have the same meaning; whence the adjective holig, or heilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Worms with many feet, round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber.
Bacon.

Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead.
Dryden.

Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Howel.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the crystal darts. Addison.

Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls or nodules, which we find.
Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain.
Sidney.

Those I have se en play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.
For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe. Dryden.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden.

4. A globe; as the ball of the earth.

Julius and Anthony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball.
Granville.

Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.

Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, tossed from misery to misery, from place to place. Bacon.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as the lower and swelling part of the thumb, the apple of the eye.

Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball else. Shakspeare.

To make a stern countenance, let your brow bend so, that it may almost touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

7. The skin spread over a hollow piece of wood, stuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to spread it on the letters.

BALL. n. s. [bal, Fr. from ballare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of some particular person.

If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD. n. s. [balade, Fr.] A song.

Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakspeare.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakspeare.

To BA'LLAD.* v. n. [from the noun.] To write ballads.

A whining ballading lover. B. Jonson, Masq.
These envious libellers ballad against them.
Donne, Par. 1.

BA'LLAD-MAKER.* n. s. [from ballad and make.] One who writes a ballad.

Such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

BA'LLAD-MONGER.* n. s. [from ballad and monger.] A trader in ballads; a singer of ballads.

I had rather be a kitten, and cry — mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. s. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet and loud.
Gay.

BA'LLAD-STYLE.* n. s. [from ballad and style.] The air or manner of a ballad.

The familiarity which doctor Milles assigns to the ballad-style. Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 46.

BA'LLAD-TUNE.* n. s. [from ballad and tune.] The tune of a ballad.

By each of the royal [French] family, and the principal nobility of the court, a psalm [of Clement Marot's version] was chosen, and fitted to the ballad-tune which each liked best.
Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 163.

BA'LLAD-WRITER.* n. s. [from ballad and write.] A composer of ballads.

Thomas Deloney, a famous ballad-writer of these times, mentioned by Kemp, one of the original actors in Shakspeare's plays.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 430.

BA'LLADER.* n. s. [old Fr. baladeur.] A maker or singer of ballads.

Poor verbal quips, outworn by serving-men, tapsters, and milkmaids; even laid aside by balladers. Overbury's Character, sign. G 4.

BA'LLADRY.* n. s. [from ballad.] The subject or style of ballads.

Stay, till the abortive and extemporal din
Of balladry were understood a sin.
B. Jonson, Masques.

To see this butterfly,
This windy bubble, task my balladry!
Marston's Sc. of Vill. ii. 6.

To bring the gravity and seriousness of that sort of musick [Italian] into vogue and reputation among our countrymen, whose humour it is time now should begin to lose the levity and balladry of our neighbours. Purcell's Anthems, Pref.

To BA'LLARAG.* v. a. A ludicrous and low word, purporting to overpower by word or act; to bully; to threaten. It is still used in the North, and pronounced bullyrag. See To BULLYRAG.

On Minden's plains, ye meek Mounseers!
Remember Kingsley's grenadiers.
You vainly thought to ballarag us
With your fine squadron off Cape Lagos.
T. Warton, Newsman's Verses.

BA'LLAST.† n. s. [ballaste, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship to keep it steady to the center of gravity.

There must be middle counsellers to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roul too much. Bacon.

As for the ascent of a submarine vessel, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from it. Wilkins.

As when empty barks or billows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poising weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steady flight. Dryden.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Those men have not ballast enough of humility and fear. Hammond's Sermons, p. 612.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

To BA'LLAST,† v. a. [from the noun. Originally ballass, and the participle ballast, i. e. ballassed.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If this be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins.

2. To keep any thing steady.

That man that would be hoising sail in these deeps of scripture, had need be well ballast and well tackled. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

'Tis Charity must ballast the heart.
Hammond's Serm. p. 611.

Whilst thus to ballast love, I thought,
And so more steddily t' have gone,
I saw, I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryd.

BA'LLATED.* part. adj. [from ballare, Ital. whence ballata.] Sung in a ballad.

I make but repetition
Of what is ordinary and Ryalto talk,
And ballated, and would be plaid o' the stage
But that vice many times finds such loud friends,
That preachers are charm'd silent.
Webster's Vittoria Corombona.

BA'LLATRY.* n. s. [Ital. ballata, from ballare.] A jig; a song.

The ballatry and the gamut of every municipal fidler. Milton, Areopagitica.

BALLE'T.† n. s. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which some history is represented.

The title of ballet was [also] often applied to poems of considerable length.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 423.

BA'LLIARDS.† n. s. [from ball and yard, or stick to push it with. A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a stick; now corruptly called billiards, Dr. Johnson says. But billiards is not a corruption, being the Fr. billard, from bille, the term for the ball used in playing.]

With dice, with cards, with balliards, far unfit,
With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Spens.

BA'LLISTER. See BALUSTER.

BALLO'N.† } n. s. [ballon, Fr.]
BALLO'ON. }

1. A large round short-necked vessel used in chymistry.
2. [In architecture.] A ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar.
3. [In fireworks.] A ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a considerable height in the air, and then bursts into bright sparks of fire, resembling stars.
4. [In aerology.] A hollow vessel of silk, which is filled with inflammable air, and ascends with considerable weight annexed to it into the atmosphere. It is of recent usage; but there have not been wanting, of late years, several navigators in these frail barks. By the following citation it looks as if the existence of such a machine had been known 150 years since.

Like balloones full of wind, the more they are pressed down, the higher they rise.
Hewyt's Sermons, (1658.) p. 115.

5. A game at play; the wind-ball, as Minsheu calls it, to play withal.

Foot-ball, balloon, quintance, &c. which are the common recreations of the country folks.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 266.

BA'LLOT. n. s. [ballote, Fr.]

1. A little ball or ticket used in giving votes, being put privately into a box or urn.
2. The act of voting by ballot.

To BA'LLOT. v. a. [balloter, Fr.] To choose by ballot, that is, by putting little balls or tickets, with particular marks, privately in a box; by counting which it is known what is the result of the poll, without any discovery by whom each vote was given.

None of the competitors arriving to a sufficient number of balls, they fell to ballot some others. Wotton, Rem. p. 262.

To BA'LLOT.† v. n. To vote by ballot. Dr. Johnson has not given this definition, nor distinguished between the active and neuter verb. Antony Wood says, that Harrington and his Club in 1659, "had a balloting-box, and balloted how things should be carried; which being not used or known in England before upon this account, the room every evening was very full." Ath. Ox. ii. 439. ed. 1692. The citation from Wotton, under the verb active, refers to an election at Venice.

Giving their votes by balloting, they lie under no awe. Swift.

BALLOTA'TION. n. s. [from ballot.] The act of voting by ballot.

The election of the duke of Venice is one of the most intricate and curious forms in the world, consisting of ten several ballotations. Wotton, Rem. p. 260.

BALM. n. s. [baume, Fr. balsamum, Lat.]

1. The sap or juice of a shrub, remarkably odoriferous.

Balm trickles through the bleeding veins
Of happy shrubs, in Idumean plains. Dryden.

2. Any valuable or fragrant ointment.

Thy place is filled, thy sceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing that sooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakspeare.
Your praise's argument, balm of your age;
Dearest and best. Shakspeare.
A tender smile, our sorrow's only balm. Young.

BALM. } n. s. [melissa, Lat.] The BALM Mint. } name of a plant.

The species are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. Miller.

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants, is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It seems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases. Prideaux, Connec.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent, which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

To BALM. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm; or with any thing medicinal.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood. Shakspeare.

2. To sooth; to mitigate; to assuage.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy senses. Shaks.

To BA'LMIFY.* v. a. [balm and fio, Lat.] To render balmy.

The fluids have been entirely sweetened and balmified. Cheyne, English Mal. 1733, p. 306.

BA'LMY. adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,
In balmy sweat; which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd. Milton.

2. Producing balm.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree. Pope.

3. Soothing; soft; mild.

Come, Desdemona, 'tis the soldier's life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. Shakspeare.
Such visions hourly pass before my sight,
Which from my eyes their balmy slumbers fright. Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Those rich perfumes which, from the happy shore,
The winds upon their balmy wings convey'd,
Whose guilty sweetness first the world betray'd. Dryden.
First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent. Dryden.

5. Mitigating; assuasive.

Oh balmy breath, that doth almost persuade Justice to break her sword! Shakspeare.

BA'LNEAL.* adj. [from balneum, Lat.] Belonging to a bath.

The fermenting gentle temper of generative heat that goes to the production of the said minerals, doth impart and actually communicate this balneal virtue and medicinal heat to these waters. Howell's Letters, i. vi. 35.

BA'LNEARY. n. s. [balnearium, Lat.] A bathing-room.

The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BALNEA'TION. n. s. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.

As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the same way be relieved, as is observable in balneations, and fomentations of that part. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BA'LNEATORY.† adj. [balnearius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove. Coles.

BA'LNEUM. n. s. [Lat.] A word often used in chymistry; generally meaning a vessel filled with water, sand, or the like, in which another vessel, called the cucurbite, containing any matter to be distilled, and requiring a more gentle heat than the naked fire, is placed. See BATH and CUCURBITE.

I am unwilling to affront this atheist so much as to suppose him to believe, that the first organical body might possibly be effected in some fluid portion of matter, while its heterogeneous parts were jumbled and confounded together by a storm, or hurricane, or earthquake. To be sure, he will rather have the primitive man to be produced by a long process in a kind of digesting balneum, where all the heavier lees may have time to subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shocks, that would ruffle and break all the little stamina of the embryon, if it were a making before. Bentley, Serm. p. 133.

BA'LOTADE. n. s. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Farrier's Dict.

BA'LSAM. n. s. [balsamum, Lat.] Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.

Christ's blood our balsam; if that cure us here,
Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe. Denham.

BA'LSAM Apple. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.

BA'LSAM Tree.

This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate-tree; the blossoms are like small stars, very fragrant; whence spring out little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum. Calmet.

To BA'LSAM.* v. a. To render balsamick, or mild; to soften.

The gifts of our young and flourishing age are very sweet, when they are balsamed with discretion. Bp. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, P. I. p. 57.

BALSAMA'TION.* n. s. [from balsam.] That which has the qualities of balsam.

Mr. Hook produced a paper, which he had received from Mr. Haak, being an account of the several things affirmed to be performed by Dr. Elshot of Berlin; which paper was read. It contained an account of, 1. His universal balsamation. 2. His great vine and wine cure in five particulars, &c. Hist. of the Royal Society, iv. 109.

BALSA'MICAL.† } adj. [from balsam, and BALSA'MICK. } Fr. balsamique.] Having the qualities of balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.

If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it. Hale.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuthnot

BALSA'MICK.* n. s. That which has the qualities of balsam.

It is — good against too great a fluidity as a balsamick, and good against viscidity as a soap. Bp. Berkley, Siris, § 60.

BA'LSAM-SWEATING.* part. adj. [from balsam and sweat.] That yields balsam.

There is no need at all,
That the balsam-sweating bough
So coyly should let fall
Her med'cinable tears. Crashaw's Poems, p. 3.

BA'LUSTER.† n. s. [According to Du Cange, from balaustrium, low Lat. a bathing place, Dr. Johnson says. But it is rather from balestriera, Ital. a spike-hole, or loop-hole, to shoot out at; the intervals between balusters being similar to loop-holes. Mr. Malone agrees with me in this etymology. Baluster is sometime corruptly written banister, and often ballister; the latter being the word in some of our old dictionaries, and in Dr. Harris's Descript. of the King's Palace at Loo, 1699, p. 27. "There is a stone fabrick with ballisters in the middle." A small column or pilaster from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.

This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew.

BA'LUSTERED.* part. adj. [from baluster.] Having balusters.

Here is a vista, there the doors unfold,
Balconies here are balustred with gold.
Sir W. Soame's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

There is a black marble ballastred [balustred] over his body. A. Wood, Fasti, Oxon, i. 240.

BA'LUSTRADE.† n. s. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terras, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

The terraces and balustrades, built along the river, are now overgrown with roses.
Swinburne's Travels through Spain, L. 38.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibson.

BA'MBOO.† n. s. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots, much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. The bamboo is much larger than the sugar-cane.

They raise their houses upon arches or posts of bamboos that be large reeds.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 360.

To BAMBO'OZLE.† v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings, from the low word bam, a cheat, Canting Dict.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

After Nick had bamboozled about the money, John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

All the people upon earth, excepting those two or three worthy gentlemen, are imposed upon, cheated, bubbled, abused, bamboozled!
Addison, Drummer, i. 1.

BAMBO'OZLER. n. s. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.

There are a set of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN. n. s. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the cannon law, banna sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitæ. Cowel.

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your bans.
Shakspeare.

To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.

2. A curse; excommunication.

Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected.
Hamlet.

A great oversight it was of St. Peter, that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since friar Vincent could tell Atabalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's. Ralegh.

3. Interdiction.

Bold deed to eye
The sacred fruit, sacred to abstinence
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Milton.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.

He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proffered to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Howell.

To BAN.† v. a. [bannen, Dut. to curse, abannan, Sax. to denounce.] To curse; to execrate.

Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof. Hooker.

It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban, to curse, or bane, to poison.

In thy closet pent up, rue my shame
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine.
Shakspeare.

Before these Moors went a Numidian priest, bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

To BAN.* v. n. To curse.

With that all mad and furious he grew,
Like a fell mastiffe, through enraging heat,
And curst, and ban'd, and blasphemies forth threw
Against his gods, and fire to them did threat.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 12.

BANA'NA Tree. A species of plantain.

BAND.† n. s. [bende, Dutch; band, Sax. bandi, Goth. ban, Celt. a tye.]

1. A tye; a bandage; that by which one thing is joined to another.

You shall find the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity. Shakspeare.

2. A chain by which any animal is kept in restraint. This is now usually spelt, less properly, bond.

So wild a beast, so tame ytaught to be,
And buxom to his bands, is joy to see.
Spenser, M. Hubberd's Tale.

Since you deny him ent'rance, he demands
His wife, whom cruelly you hold in bands.
Dryden.

3. Any means of union or connexion between persons.

Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands. Shakspeare.

4. Something worn about the neck; a neckcloth. It is now restrained to what is worn by clergymen, lawyers, and students in colleges.

For his mind I do not care,
That's a toy that I could spare:
Let his title be but great,
His cloaths rich, and band sit neat. B. Jonson.

Little plain bands, which they liked not, because the Jesuits wore such.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 119.

He took his lodging at the mansion-house of a taylor's widow, who washes and can clear-starch his bands. Addison.

5. Any thing bound round another.

In old statues of stone in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, it appeared that the lead did swell. Bacon.

6. In architecture. Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.

7. A company of soldiers; as, the Train bands. [Ital. banda, Fr. bande.]

And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot.
Shakspeare.

8. A company of persons joined together in any common design, or profession; as a band of musick.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers.
Shakspeare.

The queen in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand. Dryden.

On a sudden, methought this select band sprang forward, with a resolution to climb the ascent, and follow the call of that heavenly musick. Tatler.

Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred Nine. Pope.

To BAND.† v. a. [from band.]

1. To unite together into one body or troop.

The bishop, and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakspeare.

Some of the boys banded themselves as for the major, and others for the king, who, after six days skirmishing, at last made a composition, and departed. Carew.

They to live exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne. Milton.

2. To bind over with a band.

And by his mother stood an infant lover,
With wings unfledg'd, his eyes were banded over.
Dryden.

3. [In heraldry.] Any thing tied round with a band of a different colour from the charge, is said to be banded; as, a sheaf of arrows argent, banded azure.

4. To drive away; to banish. [Ital. bandire.]

Sweet love such lewdness bands from his fair company. Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 41.

To BAND.* v. n. To associate; to unite.

With them great Ashur also bands,
And doth confirm the knot.
Milton, Psalm lxxxiii. 29.

Better it were that a man's desires or passions should band each against other, than that all of them should with joint force band against the spirit or conscience.
Dr. Jackson's Works, vol. iii. 538.

BANDS of a Saddle, are two pieces of iron nailed upon the bows of the saddle, to hold the bows in the right situation.

BA'NDAGE. n. s. [bandage, Fr.]

1. Something bound over another.

Zeal too had a place among the rest, with a bandage over her eyes; though one would not have expected to have seen her represented in snow. Addison.

Cords were fastened by hooks to my bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulliver.

2. It is used, in surgery, for the fillet or roller wrapped over a wounded member; and, sometimes, for the act or practice of applying bandages.

BA'NDBOX. n. s. [from band and box.] A slight box used for bands and other things of small weight.

My friends are surprised to find two bandboxes among my books, till I let them see that they are lined with deep erudition. Addison.

With empty bandbox she delights to range,
And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change.
Gay, Trivia.

BA'NDELET.† n. s. [bandelet, Fr. in architecture.] Any little band, flat moulding, or fillet.

The longer he wore the diadem, the bandelet still became more tight and irksome.
Orrery on Swift, p. 89.

BA'NDER.* n. s. [from band.] One who unites with others.
Yorke and his banders proudly preased in
To challenge the crown by title of right,
Beginning with law and ending with might.
Mir. for Mag. p. 352.

BA'NDIT.† n. s. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed.
No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity. Milton.
Just as much fidelity might be expected from them in a common cause, as there is amongst a troop of honest murdering and ravishing bandits.
Dryden, Post. to Hist. of the League.
No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rests self satisfy'd. Pope.

BANDI'TTO.† n. s. in the plural banditti. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed, or a robber.
A Roman sworder, and banditto slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. 2.
There we find the holy man in a great strait of affliction; wandering like an exile or bandito in the wilderness of Engedi.
Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 123.
Banditti saints disturbing distant lands.
Thomson, Liberty, P. 4.
Whether Mr. Bayle be sufficiently justified in calling this company a troop of banditti, that is, ruffians, robbers, and murderers, — the candid reader will judge for himself.
Delany, Life of David, i. 12.

BA'NDOG.† n. s. [from ban or band, and dog. The original of this word is very doubtful. Caius, De Canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from bana, a murderer. May it not come from ban, a curse, as we say a curst cur; or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties they call a great nut a ban-nut? To these remarks of Dr. Johnson it must be added, that several of our old dictionaries render this word in Latin, canis catenarius, or catenatus, i. e. a dog chained; and that several of our elder authours write it band-dog. Huloet, in his Dictionary, gives it bond-dog. It may be safely concluded, therefore, that bandog is merely a corruption of band-dog. See Minsheu, Bullokar, Bp. Hall's Works, ii. 75, and Marston's Satires, Sat. 5.] A kind of large dog.
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.
Shakspeare, Henry VI.
Or privy, or pert, if any bin,
We have great bandogs will tear their skin.
Spenser.

BA'NDLE.* n. s. An Irish measure of two feet in length. Cockeram.

BANDOLE'ERS.† n. s. [bandouliers, Fr.] Small wooden cases covered with leather, each of them containing powder that is a sufficient charge for a musket.
There we see one, whose head within few years
Did bear a mitre, now wear bandoliers.
Jordan's Divinity and Morality in Poetry, 3 b.

BA'NDON. n. s. [Fr.] Disposal; licence; full liberty for others to use, as Minsheu renders it. Obsolete. See To ABANDON.
For both the wise folke and unwise
Were wholly to her bandon brought.
Chaucer, Rom. R. v. 1163.

BANDO'RE.* n. s. [Gr. πανδῦρα.] A musical stringed instrument, resembling a lute, introduced into this country about the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign. Minsheu calls it a recent invention, and describes it as consisting of three strings; which the Grecian πανδῦρα also had. In the catalogue of King Charles the First's collections, one of these instruments occurs, p. 99.

BA'NDROL. n. s. [banderol, Fr.] A little flag or streamer; the little fringed silk flag that hangs on a trumpet.

BA'NDSTRING.* n. s. [from band and string.] The string or tassel appendant to the band or neckcloth, observable in old portraits.
The long hair, the loose cuffs, the large bandstrings, and other fine things, with which some of these so rigid yet very spruce and lady-like preachers think fit to gratify as their own persons, so their kind hearers and spectators.
Bp. Taylor's Artif. Handsomeness, p. 179.

BA'NDY.† n. s. [from bander, Fr. which may be from the low Lat. pandare, to make crooked.] A club turned round at bottom for striking a ball at play; the play itself.
The shooting stars,
Which in an eye-bright evening seem'd to fall,
Are nothing but the balls they lose at bandy.
Brewer's Lingua, ii. 6.
Your lordship is jealous, — lest your name should be used, and be brought to the bandy.
Bp. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, P. I. p. 49.

To BA'NDY. v. a. [probably from bandy, the instrument with which they strike balls at play, which being crooked, is named from the term bander; as, bander un arc, to string or bend a bow.]
1. To beat to and fro, or from one to another.
They do cunningly, from one hand to another, bandy the service like a tennis ball. Spenser.
And like a ball bandy'd 'twixt pride and wit,
Rather than yield, both sides the prize will quit.
Denham.
What, from the tropicks, can the earth repel?
What vigorous arm, what repercussive blow,
Bandies the mighty globe still to and fro?
Blackmore.
2. To exchange; to give and take reciprocally.
Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal?
Shakspeare.
'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words. Shakspeare.
3. To agitate; to toss about.
This hath been so bandied amongst us, that one can hardly miss books of this kind. Locke.
Ever since men have been united into governments, the endeavours after universal monarchy have been bandied among them. Swift.
Let not obvious and known truth, or some of the most plain and certain propositions, be bandied about in a disputation. Watts.

To BA'NDY. v. n. To contend, as at some game, in which each strives to drive the ball his own way.
No simple man that sees
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that he doth presage some ill event. Shaks.
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy:
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth. Shakspeare.
Could set up grandee against grandee,
To squander time away, and bandy;
Made lords and commoners lay sieges
To one another's privileges. Hudibras.
After all the bandying attempts of resolution, it is as much a question as ever. Glanville.

BA'NDYLEG. n. s. [from bander, Fr.] A crooked leg.
He tells aloud your greatest failing,
Nor makes a scruple to expose
Your bandyleg, or crooked nose. Swift.

BA'NDYLEGGED. adj. [from bandyleg.] Having crooked legs.
The Ethiopians had an one-eyed bandylegged prince; such a person would have made but an odd figure. Collier.

BANE.† n. s. [bana, Sax. a murderer, according to Dr. Johnson. But it may be referred to the Goth. bane, destruction, death.]
1. Poison.
Begone, or else let me. 'Tis bane to draw
The same air with thee. B. Jonson.
All good to me becomes
Bane; and in heav'n much worse would be my state. Milton.
They with speed,
Their course through thickest constellations held,
Spreading their bane. Milton.
Thus, am I doubly arm'd; my death and life,
My bane and antidote, are both before me:
This, in a moment, brings me to an end;
But that informs me I shall never die. Addison.
2. That which destroys; mischief; ruin.
Insolency must be represt, or it will be the bane of the Christian religion. Hooker.
I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. Shaks.
Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
And proves the source of all my miseries. Milton.
So entertain'd those ordorous sweets the fiend,
Who came their bane. Milton.
Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipio's worth, those thunderbolts of war,
The double bane of Carthage? Dryden.
False religion is, in its nature, the greatest bane and destruction to government in the world.
South.

To BANE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To poison.
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? Shakspeare.
If a shepherd knew not which grass will bane, or which not, how is he fit to be a shepherd?
Herbert's Country Parson, ch. 5.

BA'NEFUL. adj. [from bane and full.]
1. Poisonous.
For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Observant of the gods, and sternly just,
Ilus refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope.
2. Destructive.
The silver eagle too is sent before,
Which I do hope will prove to them as baneful,
As thou conceiv'st it to the commonwealth.
B. Jonson.
The nightly wolf is baneful to the fold,
Storms to the wheat, to buds the bitter cold.
Dryden.

BA'NEFULNESS. n. s. [from baneful.] Poisonousness; destructiveness.

BA'NEWORT. n. s. [from bane and wort.] A plant, the same with deadly nightshade.

To BANG.† v. a. [Teut. bengelen; Su-Goth. banga, M. Goth. Luc. x. 30. banjos, strokes, blows; banga also, Iceland

To bang is still a common word in many places for beat, and in some of the northern counties also for excel or surpass. In serious writing it would not now be used.]

1. To beat; to thump; to cudgel.

He shall gather them as sheaves into the floor, there to be thrashed and banged, as they do not dream of.
Stokes on the Minor Prophets, 1659. p. 312.

One receiving from them some affronts, met with them handsomely, and banged them to good purpose. Howell.

He having got some iron out of the earth, put it into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

Formerly I was to be banged, because I was too strong, and now, because I am too weak to resist; I am to be brought down, when too rich, and oppressed when too poor. Arbuthnot.

2. To handle roughly; to treat with violence, in general.

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks, That their designment halts. Shakspeare.

You should accost her with jests fire-new from the mint; you should have banged the youth into dumbness. Shakspeare.

BANG.† n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a thump; a stroke: a low word.

I am a bachelor. — That's to say, they are fools that marry; you'll bear me a bang for that. Shakspeare.

Noble general,
If by our means they inherit aught but bangs,
The mercy of the main-yard light upon us.
Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

With many a stiff thwack, many a bang,
Hard crabtree and old iron rang. Hudibras.

I heard several bangs or buffets, as I thought, given to the eagle that held the ring of my box in his beak. Gulliver.

BA'NGING.* adj. Large; great. Grose gives it as a southern expression: I have heard it also in the north. It corresponds exactly with another vulgarism, thumping; which see.

To BA'NGLE.† v. a. To waste by little and little; to squander carelessly: a word now used only in conversation.

Betwixt hope and fear — betwixt falling in, falling out, &c. we bangle away our best days, befool out our times.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 107.

If we bangle away the legacy of peace left us by Christ, it is a sign of our want of regard for him. Duty of Man.

To BA'NISH.† v. a. [banir, Fr. banio, low Lat. probably from ban. Teut. an outlawry, or proscription; Goth. and Icelandick, forbanna. Sax. ꝑopbæneð, a banished man.]

1. To condemn to leave his own country.

Oh, fare thee well!
Those evils thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland. Shakspeare.

2. To drive away.

Banish business, banish sorrow,
To the gods belongs to-morrow. Cowley.

It is for wicked men only to dread God, and to endeavour to banish the thoughts of him out of their minds. Tillotson.

Successless all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love.
Pope.

BA'NISHER. n. s. [from banish.] One that forces another from his own country.

In mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Shakspeare.

BA'NISHMENT. n. s. [banissement, Fr.]

1. The act of banishing another; as, he secured himself by the banishment of his enemies.

2. The state of being banished; exile.

Now go we in content
To liberty and not to banishment. Shakspeare.

Round the wide world in banishment we roam,
Forc'd from our pleasing fields and native home.
Dryden.

BA'NISTER.* A corruption of BALUSTER, which see.

BANK.† n. s. [banc, Saxon.]

1. The earth arising on each side of a water. We say, properly, the shore of the sea, and the banks of a river, brook, or small water.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his bank?
Shakspeare.

Richmond, in Devonshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants. Shakspeare.

A brook whose stream so great, so good,
Was lov'd, was honour'd as a flood:
Whose banks the Muses dwelt upon. Crashaw.

'Tis happy when our streams of knowledge flow,
To fill their banks, but not to overthrow.
Denham.

O early lost! what tears the river shed,
When the said pomp along his banks was led!
Pope.

2. Any heap piled up.

They came and besieged him in Abel of Bethmaachah, and they cast up a bank against the city, and it stood in the trench. 2 Sam. xx. 15.

We see the sun, when it is at the brightest, there may be perhaps a bank of clouds in the north or west, or remote regions, but near his body few or none. Charge of Lord Bacon, p. 4.

3. [from banc, Fr. a bench.] A seat or bench of rowers.

Plac'd on their banks, the lusty Trojans sweep
Neptune's smooth face, and cleave the yielding deep. Waller.

Mean time the king with gifts a vessel stores,
Supplies the banks with twenty chosen oars.
Dryden.

That banks of oars were not in the same plain, but raised above one another, is evident from descriptions of ancient ships. Arbuthnot.

4. A place where money is laid up to be called for occasionally.

Let it be no bank, or common stock, but every man be master of his own money. Not that I altogether mislike banks, but they will hardly be brooked. Bacon, Ess.

This mass of treasure you should now reduce;
But you your store have hoarded in some bank.
Denham.

There pardons and indulgences, and giving men a share in saints merits, out of the common bank and treasury of the church, which the pope has the sole custody of. South.

5. The company of persons concerned in managing a bank.

To BANK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with banks.

Amid the cliffs
And burning sands, that bank the shrubby vales.
Thomson.

2. To lay up money in a bank.

Whether it be rightly remarked by some, that, as banking brings no treasure into the kingdom like trade, private wealth must sink as the bank riseth?
Bp. Berkeley, Querist.

BANK-BILL. n. s. [from bank and bill.] A note for money laid up in a bank, at the sight of which the money is paid.

Let three hundred pounds be paid her out of my ready money, or bank-bills. Swift.

BANK-STOCK.* n. s. [from bank and stock.] Property laid up in the bank.

The sick man cried out with a feeble voice, Pray, Doctor, how went bank-stock to-day at 'Change. Tatler, No. 243.

BA'NKER.† n. s. [old Fr. bancquier.] One that trafficks in money; one that keeps or manages a bank.

Whole droves of lenders croud the banker's doors,
To call in money. Dryden.

By powerful charms of gold and silver led,
The Lombard bankers and the 'Change to waste.
Dryden.

BA'NKRUPT. adj. [banqueroute, Fr. banco-rotto, Ital.] In debt beyond the power of payment.

The king's grown bankrupt like a broken man.
Shakspeare.

Sir, if you spend word for word with me,
I shall make your wit bankrupt. Shakspeare.

It is said that the money changers of Italy had benches probably in the burse or exchange, and that when any became insolvent his banco was rotto, his bench was broke. It was once written bankerout. Bankerout is a verb.

Dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits.
Shakspeare.

BA'NKRUPT. n. s. A man in debt beyond the power of payment.

Perkin gathered together a power, neither in number nor in hardiness contemptible; but, in their fortunes, to be feared; being bankrupts, and many of them felons. Bacon.

It is with wicked men as with a bankrupt: when his creditors are loud and clamorous, and speak big, he giveth them many good words. Calamy.

In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause;
His thankless country leaves him to her laws.
Pope.

To BA'NKRUPT.† v. a. To break; to disable one from satisfying his creditors.

He, according to his noble nature,
Will not be known to want, though he do want,
And will be bankrupted so much the sooner.
Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

We cast off the care of all future thrift, because we are already bankrupted. Hammond.

BA'NKRUPTCY. n. s. [from bankrupt.]

1. The state of a man broken, or bankrupt.

2. The act of declaring one's self bankrupt; as, he raised the clamours of his creditors by a sudden bankruptcy.

BA'NNER.† n. s. [baner, Sued. banniere, Fr. banair, Welsh.]

1. A flag; a standard; a military ensign.

Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain.
Isaiah, xiii. 2.

From France there comes a power, who already
Have secret spies in some of our best ports,
And are at point to shew their open banner.
Shakspeare.

All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving. Milton.

He said no more;
But left his sister and his queen behind,
And wav'd his royal banner in the wind. Dryden.

Fir'd with such motives, you do well to join
With Cato's foes, and follow Cæsar's banners.
Addison.

2. A streamer borne at the end of a lance, or elsewhere.

BA'NNERED.* part. adj. [from banner.] Displaying banners.

The gates wide open stood,
That with extended wings a banner'd host,
Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through
With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array.
Milton, P. L. ii. 885.

The banner'd bastion massy proof.
Warton, Ode xvi.

BA'NNERET.† n. s. [from banner.]

1. A knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it a banner. They are next to barons in dignity; and were anciently called by summons to parliament. Blount.

A gentleman told Henry, that Sir Richard Croftes, made banneret at Stoke, was a wise man; the king answered, he doubted not that, but marvelled how a fool could know. Camden.

2. A little banner, or streamer.

The scarfs and the bannerets about thee did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. Shaksp. All's Well, ii. 3.

BA'NNEROL, more properly BANDEROL.† n. s. [from banderolle, Fr. Spenser writes it bannerall; and the old French is bannerolle.] A little flag or streamer.

King Oswald had a bannerol of gold and purple set over his tomb. Camden.

BA'NNIAN.† n. s.

1. A man's undress, or morning gown; such as is worn by the Bannians in the East Indies.

2. A native of India; now usually applied to a Gentoo servant employed in managing the commercial affairs of an Englishman.

The Bannyans (as crafty, the proverb goes, as the devil,) by a moderate outside, and excess in superstition, make many simple men lose themselves, when by a heedless admiration of their plain dealing, or rather hypocrisy, they intangle themselves by crediting their sugred words in way of trade or compliment; baits pleasingly swallowed, when one considers their moral temperance.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

Medals of Justinus and Justinianus, found in the custody of a Bannyan, in the remote parts of India. Sir T. Brown, Tracts, p. 210.

3. An Indian tree so called; the appellation of banian, i. e. sacred, having been given to the arched Indian fig-tree, as our old herbalists call it; from the various branches of which grow little sprigs downward, till they reach the ground, "take root," as Milton has observed, "and daughters grow

"About the mother tree, a pillar'd shade
"High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between." P. L. ix. 1105.

BANNI'TION.* n. s. [from bannitus, Lat.] The act of expulsion.

You will take order, when he comes out of the castle, to send him out of the university too by bannition.
Abp. Laud to the Vice-Chan. at Oxford, Rem. ii. 191.

Send me up the form of a bannition. Ibid. p. 193.

BA'NNOCK.† n. s. [Irish, bunna, a cake; Gael. bonnach.] A kind of oaten or pease-meal cake, mixed with water; and baked upon an iron plate over the fire; used in the northern counties, and in Scotland. In Lancashire, however, a jannock is the word for a loaf of oatmeal leavened.

BA'NQUET.† n. s. [banquet, Fr. banchetto, Ital. vanqueto, Span.] A feast; an entertainment of meat and drink.

If a fasting day come, he hath on that day a banquet to make. Hooker.

In his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Shakspeare.

You cannot have a perfect palace, except you have two sides; a side for the banquet, and a side for the household; the one for feasts and triumphs, and the other for dwelling. Bacon.

Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the merchants?
Job, xli. 6.

At that tasted fruit,
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course intended. Milton.

That dares prefer the toils of Hercules,
To dalliance, banquets, and ignoble ease. Dryden.

This word formerly meant an entertainment merely of sweetmeats, fruit, and cakes, like our modern desserts; and introduced at the end of dinner, Mr. Malone thinks. But the following citation from Bishop Hall, while it gives a curious picture of our ancient manners, places this attendant upon feasting as closing the epicurean labours of the day! The word was formerly written banket; and Barret notices the "banket after supper." Alv. 1580.

Oh! easy and pleasant way to glory! From our bed to our glass; from our glass to our board; from our dinner to our pipe; from our pipe to a visit; from a visit to a supper; from a supper to a play; from a play to a banquet; from a banquet to our bed! Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 327.

To BA'NQUET.† v. a. [old Fr. banquetter.] To treat any one with feasts.

Welcome his friends,
Visit his countrymen, and banquet them. Shaksp.

They were banqueted by the way, and the nearer they approached, the more encreased the nobility.
Sir J. Hayward.

To BA'NQUET.† v. n.

1. To feast; to fare daintily.

The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches make lean pates, and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits.
Shakspeare.

So long as his innocence is his repast, he feasts and banquets upon bread and water. South.

I purpos'd to unbend the evening hours,
And banquet private in the women's bow'rs. Prior.

2. To give a feast to others.

If you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout; then hold me dangerous.
Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs. i. 2.

BA'NQUETER.† n. s. [old Fr. banquetteur.]

1. A feaster; one that lives deliciously.

Great banketters doe seldom great exploits.
Cotgrave.

2. He that makes feasts.

BA'NQUET-HOUSE. } n. s. [from banquet
BA'NQUETING-HOUSE. } and house.] A house where banquets are kept.

In a banqueting-house, among certain pleasant trees, the table was set near to an excellent water-work. Sidney.

At the walk's end behold, how rais'd on high
A banquet-house salutes the southern sky. Dryden.

BA'NQUETING.* n. s. [from banquet.] The act of feasting.

For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries.
1 Pet. iv. 3.

How they, who wasted such infinite masses of treasure in such vain buildings, banquetings, and spectacles, could be said to be wise.
Hakewill's Apology, p. 446.

Shun all jovial entertainments, banquetings, and merry meetings, (as they are called,) if they may deserve that name, which seldom fail to bring so sad an account after them. South, Serm. vi. 378.

BANQUE'TTE. n. s. [Fr. in fortification.] A small bank at the foot of the parapet, for the soldiers to mount upon when they fire.

BA'NSHEE, or BE'NSHI.* n. s. A kind of Irish fairy, formerly believed to appear in the shape of a diminutive old woman, and to chant, in a mournful ditty, under the windows of the house, the approaching death of some one in the families of the great. The word was, not long since, common in Ireland. In Scotland the benshi, who also foretels deaths, is the "fairy's wife." Dr Jamieson derives the word from the Ir. Gael. ben, bean, a woman, and sighe, a fairy or hobgoblin.

BA'NSTICLE.† n. s. A small fish; called also a stickleback; pungitius. Perhaps from ban, Sax. a bone, and stick; the body of this fish being fenced with prickles, or little bones sticking in it.

To BA'NTER. v. a. [a barbarous word, without etymology, unless it be derived from badiner, Fr.] To play upon; to rally; to turn to ridicule; to ridicule.

The magistrate took it that he bantered him, and bade an officer take him into custody. L'Estrange.

It is no new thing for innocent simplicity to be the subject of bantering drolls. L'Estrange.

Could Alcinous' guests with-hold
From scorn or rage? Shall we, cries one, permit
His leud romances, and his bant'ring wit? Tate.

BA'NTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Ridicule; raillery.

This humour, let it look never so silly, as it passes many times for frolic and banter, is one of the most pernicious snares in human life.
L'Estrange.

Metaphysicks are so necessary to a distinct conception, solid judgement, and just reasoning on many subjects, that those who ridicule it, will be supposed to make their wit and banter a refuge and excuse for their own laziness. Watts.

BA'NTERER.† n. s. [from banter.] One that banters; a droll.

What opinion have these religious banterers of the divine power? or what have they to say for this mockery and contempt? L'Estrange.

Thoughtless atheists and illiterate drunkards call themselves freethinkers; and gamesters, banterers, biters, swearers, and twenty new-born insects more, are, in their several species, the modern men of wit. Tatler, No. 12.

BA'NTLING. n. s. [If it has any etymology, it is perhaps corrupted from the old word bairn, bairnling, a little child.] A little child: a low word.

If the object of their love
Chance by Lucina's aid to prove,
They seldom let the bantling roar,
In basket at a neighbour's door. Prior.

BA'PTISM. n. s. [baptismus, Lat. βαπτισμὸς, Gr.]

1. An external ablution of the body, with a certain form of words, which operates and denotes an internal ablution or washing of the soul from original sin. Ayliffe.

Baptism is given by water, and that prescript form of words which the church of Christ doth use. Hooker.

To his great baptism flock'd
With awe, the regions round; and with them came
From Nazareth the son of Joseph deem'd,
Unmarkt, unknown. Milton.

2. Baptism is often taken in Scripture for sufferings.

I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished! St. Luke, xii. 50.

BAPTI'SMAL. adj. [from baptism.] Of or pertaining to baptism.

When we undertake the baptismal vow, and enter on their new life, it would be apt to discourage us. Hammond.

BA'PTIST.† n. s. [baptiste, Fr. βαπτιστης, Gr.]

1. He that administers baptism.

In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea. Matt. iii. 1.

Him the Baptist soon
Descry'd, divinely warn'd, and witness bore
As to his worthier. —— Milton.

2. An abbreviation of ANABAPTIST, which see.

Thus, of the three judges on each bench, the first may be a Presbyterian; the second a free-will Baptist; the third a Churchman. Swift, on the Repeal of the Test.

BA'PTISTERY.* n. s. [baptisterium, Lat.] The place where the sacrament of baptism is administered.

The baptisteries, or places of water for baptism, in those elder times, were not, as now our fonts are, within the church, but without, and often in places very remote from it. Mede, Churches, &c. p. 42.

In several ancient Western churches, I have seen the baptistery by itself, a distance from the churches; as at Pisa and Spalato; but I never saw it in the Eastern. Sir G. Wheeler's Acc. of Churches, p. 35.

The great church, baptistery, and leaning tower, are well worth seeing Addison.

BAPTI'STICAL.* adj. [from baptist.] Relating to baptism.

This baptistical profession, which he ignorantly laughed at, is attested by fathers, by councils, by liturgies. Bp. Bramhall's Schism Guarded, p. 205.

To BAPTI'ZE. v. a. [baptizer, Fr. from βαπτίζω, Gr.] To christen; to administer the sacrament of baptism to one.

He to them shall leave in charge,
To teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe,
Baptizing in the profluent stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin, to life
Pure, and in mind prepar'd, if so befal,
For death, like that which the Redeemer dy'd. Milton.

Let us reflect that we are Christians; that we are called by the name of the Son of God, and baptized into an irreconcileable enmity with sin, the world, and the devil. Rogers.

BAPTI'ZER. n. s. [from To baptize.] One that christens; one that administers baptism.

BAR.† n. s. [barre, Fr.]

1. A piece of wood, iron, or other matter, laid across a passage to hinder entrance.

And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other. Exod.

2. A bolt; a piece of iron or wood fastened to a door, and entering into the post or wall to hold the door close.

The fish-gate did the sons of Hassenaah build, who also laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof. Nehemiah.

3. Any obstacle which hinders or obstructs; obstruction.

I brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther. Job.

And had his heir surviv'd him in due course,
What limits, England, hadst thou found? what bar?
What world could have resisted? Daniel's Civil War.

Hard, thou know'st it, to exclude
Spiritual substance with corporeal bar. Milton.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself, what I had forc'd from fate? Dryden.

Fatal accidents have set
A most unhappy bar between your friendship. Rowe.

4. A gate; as, without the bars, i. e. gates, of the city. [old Fr. barri, low Lat. barrium, barra. In our northern dialect, bar is common for the gate of a town.]

5. A rock, or bank of sand, at the entrance of a harbour or river, which ships cannot sail over at low water.

6. Any thing used for prevention, or exclusion.

Lest examination should hinder and let your proceedings, behold, for a bar against that impediment, one opinion newly added. Hooker.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze to be
The founder of this law, and female bar. Shaksp.

7. The place where causes of law are tried, or where criminals are judged; so called from the bar placed to hinder crowds from incommoding the court.

The great duke
Came to the bar, where, to his accusations,
He pleaded still Not guilty. Shakspeare.

Some at the bar with subtlety defend,
Or on the bench the knotty laws untye. Dryden.

8. An inclosed place in a tavern or coffee-house, where the housekeeper sits and receives reckonings.

14. Bars in Musick, are strokes drawn perpendicularly across the lines of a piece of musick; used to regulate the beating or measure of musical time.

15. Bar, in African traffick, is used for a denomination of price; payment being formerly made to the Negroes almost wholly in iron bars.

BAR-SHOT. n. s. Two half bullets joined together by an iron bar; used in sea engagements for cutting down the masts and rigging.

To BAR.† v. a. [from the noun, Dr. Johnson says; but the Goth. bairgan, to keep, may be also offered; whence also the Sax. beorgan; of which verbs the past participle, Mr. Horne Tooke has observed, furnishes our bar.]

1. To fasten or shut any thing with a bolt, or bar.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
Though their injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you. Shakspeare.

When you bar the window-shutters of your lady's bed-chamber at nights, leave open the sashes to let in air. Swift.

It is in this sense used with up.

O, that is stronger made,
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

When law can do no right,
Let it be lawful, that law bar no wrong. Shaksp.

3. To prevent; to exclude; to make impracticable.

The houses of the country were all scattered, and yet not so far off as that it barred mutual succour. Sidney.

Doth it not seem a thing very probable, that God doth purposely add, Do after my judgements; as giving thereby to understand, that his meaning in the former sentence was but to bar similitude in such things as were repugnant to his ordinances, laws, and statutes? Hooker.

4. To detain, by excluding the claimants; with from.

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother: who shall bar them from me? Shakspeare.

5. To shut out: with from.

Our hope of Italy not only lost,
But shut from ev'ry shore, and barr'd from ev'ry coast. Dryden.

6. To exclude from use, right, or claim: with from before the thing.

God hath abridged it, by barring us from some things of themselves indifferent. Hooker.

Give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!
God knows I will not. Shakspeare.

His civil acts do bind and bar them all;
And as from Adam all corruption take,
So, if the father's crime be capital,
In all the blood, law doth corruption make. Sir J. Davies.

It was thought sufficient not only to exclude them from that benefit, but to bar them from their money. Clarendon.

If he is qualified, why is he barred the profit, when he only performs the conditions?
Collier on Pride.

7. To prohibit.
For though the law of arms doth bar
The use of venom'd shot in war. Hudibras.

Well, we shall see your bearing. —
— Nay, but I bar to-night; you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakspeare.

9. [In law.] To hinder the process of a suit.
But buff and belt men never know these cares;
No time, nor trick of law, their action bars:
Their cause they to an easier issue put. Dryden.
From such delays as conduce to the finding out of truth, a criminal cause ought not to be barred. Ayliffe.
If a bishop be a party to a suit, and excommunicates his adversary, such excommunication shall not disable or bar his adversary. Ayliffe.

10. To bar a vein.
This is an operation performed upon the veins of the legs of a horse, and other parts, with intent to stop the malignant humours. It is done by opening the skin above it, disengaging it, and tying it both above and below, and striking between the two ligatures.

BARB. n. s. [barba, a beard, Lat.]

1. Any thing that grows in the place of a beard.
The barbel, so called by reason of the barb or wattles at his mouth, under his chaps.
Walton's Angler.

2. The points that stand backward in an arrow, or fishing-hook, to hinder them from being extracted.
Nor less the Spartan fear'd, before he found
The shining barb appear above the wound.
Pope, Iliad.

3. The armour for horses.
Their horses were naked, without any barbs; for albeit many brought barbs, few regarded to put them on. Hayward.

BARB.† n. s. [contracted from Barbary.] A Barbary horse.
Horses brought from Barbary, are commonly of a slender light size, and very lean, usually chosen for stallions. Barbs, it is said, may die, but never grow old; the vigour and mettle of barbs never cease but with their life.
Farrier's Dict.
They have a peculiar cast of barbs, able to maintain [their] renown, which the Moors carefully preserve, never employing them in low and base offices, but keep them only for the saddle and military service. L. Addison's West Barbary, p. 97.

To BARB.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shave; to dress out the beard; to pare close to the surface.
Shave the head, and tie the beard, and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so barbed before his death. Shakspeare.
The stooping scythe-man, that doth barb the field,
Thou mak'st wink-sure; in night all creatures sleep. Marston, Malcontent.

2. To furnish horses with armour. See BARBED.
A warriour train
That like a deluge pour'd upon the plain;
On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May.
Dryden, Fables.

3. To jag arrows with hooks. See BARBED.
The twanging bows
Send showers of shafts, that on their barbed points
Alternate ruin bear. Philips.

BA'RBACAN.† n. s. [barbacane, Fr. barbacana, Span. Ital. barbacane, Sax. banbacan, banbýcan. It is also written improperly, in English, barbican. The word is originally Arabick; and Manning says it was first adopted in Europe by the Italians, then by the Normans, and from them conveyed to us.]

1. A fortification placed before the walls of a town.
The fortification of this kind, belonging to the city of London, has left its memorial in the name, still retained, of Barbican in Smithfield.

2. A fortress at the end of a bridge.
Within the barbican a porter sate,
Day and night duly keeping watch and ward;
Nor wight, nor word mote pass out of the gate,
But in good order, and with due regard.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 25.

3. An opening in the wall through which the guns are levelled; a case-mate or hole in the parapet to shoot out at.
Cotgrave.

BARBA'DOES Cherry. [malphigia, Lat.]
In the West Indies, it rises to be fifteen or sixteen feet high, where it produces great quantities of a pleasant tart fruit; propagated in gardens there, but in Europe it is a curiosity. Miller.

BARBA'DOES Tar. A bituminous substance, differing little from the petroleum floating on several springs in England and Scotland.
Woodward's Method of Fossils.

BARBA'RIAN.† n. s. [barbarus, Lat. It seems to have signified at first only foreign or a foreigner; but, in time, implied some degree of wildness or cruelty. See BARBARICK.]

1. A person uncivilized; untaught; a savage.
Proud Greece, all nations else barbarians held,
Boasting, her learning all the world excell'd.
Denham.
There were not different gods among the Greeks and barbarians. Stillingfleet.
But with descending show'rs of brimstone fir'd,
The wild barbarian in the storm expir'd. Addison.

2. A foreigner.
I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd. Shaks. Coriolanus.

3. A brutal monster; a person without pity: a term of reproach.
Thou fell barbarian!
What had he done! what could provoke thy madness
To assassinate so great, so brave a man! A. Philips.

BARBA'RIAN. adj. Belonging to barbarians; savage.
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Barbarian blindness. Pope.

BARBA'RICK.† adj. [barbaricus, Lat. in a different sense; it means in Latin wrought, fretted, Dr. Johnson says. But the etymology of barbaricus has been so illustrated as to shew its affinity to our meaning of foreign, and of savage; of which latter sense Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. "Bruce has shown, that Barbarick, Barbarine, and Barberin, are names derived from Berber or Barbar, the native name of the coast of the Troglodítick, Icthyophagi, and Shepherds. It goes down the whole western coast of the Red Sea. The Egyptians hated and feared them. It was, therefore, in Egypt a term both of dread and contumely; in which sense it passed to the Greeks, and from them to the Romans." Dr. Vincent's Periplus of the Egyptian Sea, P. 1. p. 103.] Foreign; far-fetched.
The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Showers on her kings barbarick pearl and gold.
Milton, P. L.
Astrology speaks great things, and is fain to make use of appellations from Greek and barbarick systems. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.
The eastern front was glorious to behold,
With diamond flaming, and barbarick gold. Pope.

2. Uncivilized; savage.
Better I find ye esteem it to imitate the old and elegant humanity of Greece, than the barbarick pride of a Hunnish and Norwegian stateliness.
Milton, Areopagitica.
The pure Roman language was corrupted by barbarick, or Gothick, invaders.
Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BA'RBARISM. n. s. [barbarismus, Lat.]

1. A form of speech contrary to the purity and exactness of any language.
The language is as near approaching to it, as our modern barbarism will allow; which is all that can be expected from any now extant.
Dryden, Juvenal, Dedication.

2. Ignorance of arts; want of learning.
I have for barbarism spoke more
Than for that angel knowledge you can say.
Shakspeare.
The genius of Raphael having succeeded to the times of barbarism and ignorance, the knowledge of painting is now arrived to perfection.
Dryden, Dufresnoy, Preface.

3. Brutality; savageness of manners; incivility.
Moderation ought to be had in tempering and managing the Irish, to bring them from their delight of licentious barbarism, unto the love of goodness and civility. Spenser, Ireland.
Divers great monarchies have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin.
Davies, on Ireland.

4. Cruelty; barbarity; unpitying hardness of heart; not in use.
They must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
Shaks. Rich. II.

BARBA'RITY. n. s. [from barbarous.]

1. Savageness; incivility.

2. Cruelty; inhumanity.
And they did treat him with all the rudeness, reproach and barbarity imaginable. Clarendon.

3. Barbarism; impurity of speech.
Next Petrarch followed, and in him we see,
What rhyme, improv'd in all its height, can be
At best a pleasing sound, and sweet barbarity.
Dryden.
Latin expresses that in one word, which either the barbarity or narrowness of modern tongues cannot supply in more. Dryden.
Affected refinements, which ended by degrees in many barbarities, before the Goths had invaded Italy. Swift.

To BA'RBARIZE.* v. a. [from barbarism.] To bring back to barbarism; to render savage.

The Cross must now against the Cross be sped,
(Blush, all ye heavens, at this!) and they, who are
Under the King of Peace all marshalled,
Be barbarized by a mutual war.
Beaumont's Psyche, xv. 49.

Detested forms, that on the mind impress'd,
Corrupt, confound, and barbarize an age.
Thomson, Lib. v. 681.

The hideous changes which have barbarized France. Burke, on the French Rev.

To BA'RBARIZE.* v. n. To commit a barbarism, an impurity of speech.

Besides the ill habit which they got of barbarizing, against the Latin and Greek idiom, with their untutored anglicisms. Milton, of Education.

BA'RBAROUS.† adj. [barbare, Fr. βάρβαρος, Gr.]

1. Stranger to civility; savage; uncivilized.

What need I say more to you? What ear is so barbarous, but hath heard of Amphialus. Sidney.

Her single person to their barbarous truth.
Spenser, F. Q.

Thou art a Roman be not barbarous. Shaks.

He left governour, — Philip, for his country a Phrygian, and for manners more barbarous than he that set him there. 2 Macc. v. 22.

A barbarous country must be broken by war, before it be capable of government; and when subdued, if it be not well planted, it will eftsoons return to barbarism. Davies, on Ireland.

2. Ignorant; unacquainted with arts.

They who restored painting in Germany, not having those reliques of antiquity, retained that barbarous manner. Dryden.

3. Cruel; inhuman.

By their barbarous usage, he died within a few days, to the grief of all that knew him. Clarendon.

4. Foreign.

To match this monarch, with strong Arcite came
Emetrius, king of Inde, a mighty name,
On a bay courser, goodly to behold,
The trappings of his horse emboss'd with barbarous gold. Dryden, Fables.

BA'RBAROUSLY.† adv. [from barbarous.]

1. Ignorantly; without knowledge or arts.

2. In a manner contrary to the rules of speech.

How barbarously we yet speak and write, your lordship knows, and I am sufficiently sensible in my own English. Dryden, Ded. of Tr. and Cres.

We barbarously call them blest,
While swelling coffers break their owner's rest.
Stepney.

3. Cruelly; inhumanly.

But yet you barbarously murder'd him. Dryden.

She wishes it may prosper; but her mother used one of her nieces very barbarously. Spectator.

BA'RBAROUSNESS. n. s. [from barbarous.]

1. Incivility of manners.

Excellencies of musick and poetry are grown to be little more, but the one fiddling, and the other rhiming; and are indeed very worthy of the ignorance of the friar, and the barbarousness of the Goths. Temple.

2. Impurity of language.

It is much degenerated, as touching the pureness of speech; being overgrown with barbarousness Brerewood.

3. Cruelty.

The barbarousness of the trial, and the persuasives of the clergy, prevailed to antiquate it.
Hale, Common Law.

BA'RBARY.* n. s. A Barbary horse; a BARB; which see.

They are ill built,
Pin-buttock'd, like your dainty barbaries,
And weak i' the pasterns.
Beaum. and Fl. Wildgoose Chace.

BARBA'TED.* part. adj. [Lat. barbatus.] Jagged with points; bearded.

I cannot lay so much stress on a plate and description, given by Plot, of a dart uncommonly barbated. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 63.

To BA'RBECUE. v. a. A term used in the West Indies for dressing a hog whole; which, being split to the backbone, is laid flat upon a large gridiron, raised about two feet above a charcoal fire, with which it is surrounded.

Oldfield, with more than harpy throat endu'd,
Cries, Send me, gods, a whole hog barbecu'd.
Pope.

BA'RBECUE. n. s. A hog dressed whole, in the West Indian manner.

BA'RBED.† participial adj. [from To barb, or perhaps a corruption of bard, which see.]

1. Furnished with armour.

His glittering armour he will command to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

If thy sword can win him,
Or force his legions, with thy barbed horse,
But to forsake their ground.
Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.

2. Bearded; jagged with hooks or points.

Canst thou fill his [the leviathan's] skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish spears.
Job, xli. 7.

No drizzling shower,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
Milton, P. L. vi. 546.

BA'RBEL.† n. s. [barbus, Lat. mullus barbatus, Cic. barbel, Fr.]

1. A kind of fish found in rivers, large and strong, but coarse.

The barbel is so called, by reason of the barb or wattels at his mouth, or under his chaps.
Walton's Angler.

Farrier's Dict.

BA'RBER.† n. s. [Fr. barber, Ital. barbiere, Welsh, barbwr, from the Lat. barba.] A man who shaves the beard.

His chamber being stived with friends or suitors, he gave his legs, arms, and breasts to his servants to dress; his head and face to his barber; his eyes to his letters, and his ears to petitioners.
Wotton.

Thy boist'rous looks,
No worthy match for valour to assail,
But by the barber's razor best subdu'd. Milton.

What system, Dick, has right averr'd
The cause, why woman has no beard?
In points like these we must agree;
Our barber knows as much as we. Prior.

To BA'RBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress out.

Our courteous Anthony,
Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast.
Shakspeare.

BA'RBER-CHIRURGEON.† n. s. A man who joins the practice of surgery to the barber's trade; such as were all surgeons formerly, but now it is used only for a low practiser of surgery.

He put himself into barber-chirurgeons' hands, who, by unfit applications, rarefied the tumour.
Wiseman's Surgery.

I could stamp
Their foreheads with those deep and publick brands,
That the whole company of barber-surgeons
Should not take off, with all their art and plaisters.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, to the Reader.

BA'RBER-CHIRURGERY, or SURGERY.* n. s. The trade of a barber-surgeon.

Now he comes to the position, which I set down whole; and, like an able textman, slits it into four, that he may the better come at with his barber-surgery. Milton, Colasterion.

BA'RBER-MONGER. n. s. A word of reproach in Shakspeare, which seems to signify a fop; a man decked out by his barber.

Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you; you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Barberry is a plant that bears a fruit very useful in housewifery; that which beareth its fruit without stones is counted best. Mortimer.

BARD.† n. s. [bardd, Welsh, bardh, Celt. barde, old Fr. bardus, Lat.] A poet.

There is amongst the Irish a kind of people called bards, which are to them instead of poets; whose profession is to set forth the praises or dispraises of men in their poems or rhime; the which are had in high regard and estimation among them.
Spenser, on Ireland.

At this time in Ireland the bard, by common acceptation, is counted a rayling rimer, and distinguished from the poet.
Sir J. Ware, on Spenser's Ireland.

And many bards that to the trembling chord
Can tune their timely voices cunningly.
Spenser, F. Q.

The bard who first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song,
Which Homer might without a blush rehearse.
Dryden.

BA'RDICK.* adj. [from bard.] Relating to the bards or poets.

So late as the eleventh century, the practice continued among the Welsh bards, of receiving instructions in the bardick profession from Ireland. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

BA'RDISH.* adj. [from bard.] What is written or asserted by the bards.

I found so intolerable antichronisms, incredible reports, and bardish impostures, as well from ignorance, as assumed liberty of invention, in some of our ancients.
Selden, Note prefixed to Drayton's Polyolbion.

BARD.* n. s. [Ital. barde, old Fr. barde.] The trapping of a horse. See BARDED.

BARK.† n. s. [barck, Dan. berck, Dutch, from the Teut. bergen, to cover.]

1. The rind or covering of a tree.

Trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munited by their bark against the injuries of the air.
Bacon, Natural History.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians for the tree have found the bark. Dryd.

2. The medicine called, by way of distinction, the Peruvian bark. It has been said, that several trees of the Cinchona kind, happening to be felled into a lake when an epidemick fever, that was very fatal, prevailed at Loxa in Peru, the woodmen accidentally drinking the water were cured; and thus the virtues of this drug were discovered.

3. A small ship. [from barca, low Lat. barki, Su.-Goth.]

The Duke of Parma must have flown, if he would have come into England; for he could neither get bark nor mariner to put to sea.
Bacon, on the War with Spain.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine. Milton.

Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,
Trusts a frail bark with a tempestuous wind.
Granville.

To BARK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strip trees of their bark.

The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.

These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream. Addison.

2. To enclose; to cover, as the bark covers a tree; to incrust.

Anchorites, that barqu'd themselves up in hollow trees, and immured themselves in hollow walls. Donne's Devotions, p. 43.

The juice of cursed hebenon — doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine,
And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsom crust,
All my smooth body. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To BARK. v. n. [beopcan, Saxon.]

1. To make the noise which a dog makes when he threatens or pursues.

Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shaksp. Richard III.

Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' the town? Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

In vain the herdman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.

2. To clamour at; to pursue with reproaches.

Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold;
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame.
Spenser, F. Q.

You dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue,
Against my lord. Shakspeare.

BARK-BARED. adj. [from bark and bare.] Stripped of the bark.

Excorticated and bark-bared trees may be preserved, by nourishing up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place cutting the body of the tree sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will heal, and be covered with bark. Mortimer.

BA'RKER.† n. s. [from bark.]

1. One that barks or clamours.

The other Spanish barker, raging and foaming, was almost out of his wits,
Fox, Acts and Mon. Life of Abp. Cranmer.

What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. B. Jonson.

2. [From bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees. Kersey.

BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.

Ivy so enrings the barky fingers of the elm.
Shakspeare.

BA'RLEY.† n. s. [derived by Junius from בר, hordeum.] A grain of which malt is made.

It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are, 1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Miller.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as a proper food in inflammatory distempers.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BA'RLEYBRAKE.† n. s. A kind of rural play, Dr. Johnson says; but he says no more. At this game the trial of swiftness is the principal exhibition. From an appointed goal numbers start, whom one is to catch, after they have reached a given distance, before which he stirs not from his post. Those whom he catches, are obliged to assist him in catching the remainder, till the game closes with the person last captured, and recommences with him, who had been first captured, as the catcher. Dr. Jamieson says that, in Scotland, it is generally played in a corn-yard, whence the Scottish expression, barla-bracks, about the stacks; and that a stack is the goal from which they start.

By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BA'RLEY-BROTH. n. s. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.

Can sodden water,
A drench for surrein'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
Shakspeare.

BA'RLEY-CORN. n. s. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.

A long, long journey, choak'd with breaks and thorns,
Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns.
Tickell.

BA'RLEY-MOW. n. s. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.

Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

BA'RLEY-SUGAR.* n. s. [from barley and sugar; but Mr. Malone considers it a corruption of the Fr. sucre brulé, burnt sugar. Sugar boiled till it be brittle, formerly with a decoction of barley. See SUGAR.

BARM. n. s. [burm, Welsh; beopm, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work; and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink bear no barm,
Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Shakspeare.

Try the force of imagination, upon staying the working of beer when the barm is put into it.
Bacon.

BA'RMY. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm; yeasty.

Their jovial nights in frolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer,
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN.† n. s. [beapn, Sax. from bepe, barley, and epn, the place where it is deposited, Jun.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad.
Dryden.

I took notice of the make of barns here: having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison.

To BARN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To lay up in a barn. A word still used in Norfolk and Suffolk.

The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagu'd with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits;
And useless barns the harvest of his wits.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BARN-DOOR.* n. s. The door of a barn.

While the cock, with lively din,
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before.
Milton, L'Alleg. v. 51.

BA'RNACLE.† n. s. [probably of beapn, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A kind of shell fish that grow upon timber that lies in the sea.

Those weeds or branches like nets were intangled and drawn along by the barnacles, which in those long voyages usually breed upon the sides of ships, and exceedingly pester and retard their way in sailing. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 393.

2. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles: or might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

And from the most refin'd of saints,
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geese
In th' islands of the Orcades. Butler, Hudibras.

3. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when an incision is made.
Farrier's Dict.

BARO'METER. n. s. [from Gr. βάρος, weight, and μέτρον, measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli, the inventor of it at Florence, in 1643; it is a glass tube filled with mercury, hermetically sealed at one end; the other open and immerged in a bason of stagnant mercury; so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specifick gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROME'TRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments.
Derham, Physico-Theology.

BA'RON.† n. s. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warriour, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man; in which sense baron or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. This application of baron for husband is common also in old French, V. Cotgrave. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from Hebrew and Celtick words of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which seems least probable. Vir is the most probable; whence, in the dialect of Languedoc, bar, a man; baro, a woman. See Dict. Languedocien par M. L'Abbé des Sauvages. The change of v into b was common in elder times.]

1. A degree of nobjlity next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that anciently in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call court barons. And it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come, but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writ being those, that to the title of lord have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. These barons which were first by writ may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.
2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice, belonging to the exchequer.
3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament.
Cowel.

They that bear
The cloth of state above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Cowel.
5. A baron of beef is when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone.
Dict.

BA'RONAGE. n. s. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.

His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215.
Hale.

2. The dignity of a baron.
3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BA'RONESS. n. s. [baronessa, Ital. baronissa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET.† n. s. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary; it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowel. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense. Dr. Johnson should have added, that it was the designation of a knight bannaret in our old chroniclers. "Capti sunt et in custodia detenti barones et baronetti 22." Walsingham sub ann. 1321. V. Du Cange. See also Cragii Jus Feudale, Gloss. "Baronettus, BANNERITUS nominatur parvus baro."

King Edward III. being greatly bearded and crossed by the lords of the clergy, — was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best ability and trust, entitling them therein barons to serve and sit as barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy and their friends; the which barons, they say, were not afterwards lords, but only baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name.

Spenser on Ireland.

BARO'NIAL.* adj. [from baronia, Lat.] Relating to the person or place, a baron or barony.

The savage pomp and the capricious heroism of the baronial manners were replete with incident, adventure, and enterprise.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 462.

If he had exempted these lands from the policy to which he subjected other baronial possessions, it would have exceedingly diminished the strength of his kingdom.

Lyttelton, Hist. Hen. II. Introd.

Delivering captives injuriously detained in the baronial castles.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. Diss. 1.

BA'RONY.† n. s. [baronnie, Fr. beopny, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowel.

Every parish should be forced to keep a pettie schoolemaster, adjoyning unto the parish church, to be the more in view, which should bring up their children in the first elements of letters; and that, in every county or barony, they should keepe another able schoolemaster, which should instruct them in grammar and the principles of sciences.

Spenser on Ireland.

If my young lord, your son, have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. 2.

BA'ROSCOPE, n. s. [βάρος and σκοπέω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbuthnot.

BA'RRACAN. n. s. [bouracan, or barracan, Fr. But see Du Cange in V. BARRACANUS.] A strong thick kind of camelot. Kersey.

BA'RRACK,† n. s. [barraca, Span.]

1. Little cabins made by the Spanish fishermen on the sea shore; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.
2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

He [bishop Hall] lived to see his cathedral converted into a barrack, and his palace into an alehouse. T. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iv. 2.

BA'RRACK-MASTER.* n. s. He who has the superintendence of soldiers' lodgings.

The subject of the girl's letter was, that a young lady of good fortune was courted by an Irishman, who pretended to be barrack-master-general of Ireland. Swift, Lett. ccccxx.

BA'RRATOR.† n. s. [from barat, old Fr. from which is still retained barateur, a cheat. Originally perhaps from the Icel. and Goth. baratta, whence the Italian baratta used by Dante, a fight, a battle.] A wrangler, and encourager of law suits.

I am such a person, whom ye know have bene a common barrator and theese by a long space of yeares. Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 133. b.

Will it not reflect as much on thy character, Nic, to turn barrator in thy old days, a stirrer up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours.

Arbuthnot, History of J. Bull.

BA'RRATRY. n. s. [from barrater.] The practice or crime of a barrator; foul practice in law.

'Tis arrant barratry, that bears
Point blank an action 'gainst our laws. Hudibras.

BA'RREL.† n. s. [baril, Welsh, bareil, old Fr.]

1. A round wooden vessel to be stopped close.

It hath been observed by one of the ancients, that an empty barrel knocked upon with the finger, giveth a diapason to the sound of the like barrel full. Bacon.

Trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach. Dryden.

2. A particular measure in liquids. A barrel of wine is thirty-one gallons and a half; of ale, thirty-two gallons; of beer, thirty-six gallons; and of beer vinegar, thirty-four gallons.
3. [In dry measure.] A barrel of Essex butter contains one hundred and six pounds; of Suffolk butter, two hundred and fifty-six. A barrel of herrings should contain thirty-two gallons wine measure, holding usually a thousand herrings.

Several colleges, instead of limiting their rents to a certain sum, prevailed with their tenants to pay the price of so many barrels of corn, as the market went. Swift.

4. Any thing hollow; as, the barrel of a gun; that part which holds the shot.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, set it upright with the breech upon the ground, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel ever so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby.

5. A cylinder; frequently that cylinder about which any thing is wound.

Your string and bow must be accommodated to your drill; if too weak, it will not carry about the barrel. Moxon.

6. Barrel of the ear, is a cavity behind the tympanum, covered with a fine membrane. Dict.

To BA'RREL.† v. a. [from the noun.] To put any thing in a barrel for preservation.

I would have their beef beforehand barrelled, which may be used as is needed. Spenser on Ireland.

Barrel up earth, and sow some seed in it, and put it in the bottom of a pond. Bacon.

That perverse man, that barrelled himself in a tub. Donne's Devotions, p. 43.

BA'RREL-BELLIED. adj. [from barrel and belly.] Having a large belly.

Dauntless at empty noises; lofty neck'd,
Sharp headed, barrel-belly'd, broadly back'd.
Dryden.

BA'RREN.† adj. [bape, Sax. naked; properly applied to trees or ground unfruitful, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is the past participle of the verb bar, and therefore converts barren into barred, i. e. stopped, shut, from which there can be no fruit or issue. I pass from this assertion to the old Fr. baraigne, which is precisely correspondent to our own word, meaning sterile, unfruitful; written also brahaigne, brehagne, and brehenne. V. Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. in V. baraigne, and Cotgrave in V. brehaigne. Wicliffe writes the word bareyn.]

1. Without the quality of producing its kind; not prolifick; applied to animals.

They hail'd him father to a line of kings,
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
No son of mine succeeding. Shakspeare.

There shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. Deuteronomy, vii. 14.

2. Unfruitful; not fertile; sterile.

The situation of this city is pleasant, but the water is naught, and the ground barren.

2 Kings, ii. 19.

Telemachus is far from exalting the nature of his country; he confesses it to be barren. Pope.

3. Not copious; scanty.

Some schemes will appear barren of hints and matter, but prove to be fruitful. Swift.

4. Unmeaning; uninventive; dull.

There be of them that will make themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too. Shakspeare.

BA'RRENLY†. adv. [from barren.] Unfruitfully. Huloet, and Sherwood.

BA'RRENNESS. n. s. [from barren.]

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach. Milton.

No more be mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope. Milton.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self-same hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness. Bacon.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; though the accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention. Dryden.

4. Want of matter; scantiness.

The importunity of our adversaries hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness, of so poor a cause could have seemed either to require or to admit. Hooker.

5. [In theology.] Aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The greatest saints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion.

By. Taylor.

BA'RRENSPI'RITED.*. part. adj. [from barren and spirit.] Of a poor temper or mean spirit.

A barren-spirited fellow. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæsar.

BA'RREN WORT. n. s. [epimedium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BA'RFUL. adj. [from bar and full.] Full of obstructions.

A barful strife!
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Shaksp.

BARRICA'DE. n. s. [barricade, Fr.]

1. A fortification made in haste, of trees, earth, waggons, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.

Any stop; bar; obstruction.

There must be such a barricade, as would greatly annoy, or absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere. Derham.

To BARRICA'DE. v. a. [barricader, Fr.]

1. To stop up a passage.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street,
Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team. Gay.

2. To hinder by stoppage.

A new vulcano continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up, and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities. Woodward.

BARRICA'DO. n. s. [barricada, Span.] A fortification; a bar; any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access was by a neck of land, between the sea on one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barricado. Bacon.

To BARRICA'DO. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to bar; to stop up.

Fast we found, fast shut
The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong! Milton.

He had not time to barricado the doors; so that the enemy entered. Clarendon.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricadoed from any intellectual approach. Harvey.

BA'RRIER.† n. s. [barriere, Fr.] It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first.

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Safe in the love of heav'n an ocean flows
Around our realm, a barrier from the foes. Pope.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is guarantee of the Dutch, having possession of the barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace. Swift.

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most impassable barrier against improvement. Watts.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place; the rails or lists, within which justs and tournaments were performed. Hence a wrestler, in our old dictionaries, is called a player at barriers.

For justs, and tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entries. Bacon.

Prisoners to the pillar bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or arm'd anew. Dryden.

5. A boundary; a limit.

But wave whate'er to Cadmus may belong,
And fix, O muse, the barrier of thy song,
At Œdipus. Pope, Statius.

How instinct varies in the groveling swine,
Compar'd, half reas'ning elephant! with thine:
'Twixt that and reason, what a nice barrier!
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near. Pope.

BA'RRING-OUT.* n. s. [from bar.] Exclusion of a person from a place, a boyish sport at Christmas.

Not school-boys, at a barring-out,
Rais'd ever such incessant rout. Swift, Journal of a Modern fine Lady.

BA'RRISTER.† n. s. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead causes, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts. Outer barristers are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barristers; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the council of the king, queen, and princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar. A counsellor at law. Blount, and Chambers.

Whom time ———
Hath made a lawyer ——— he throws,
Like nets, or limetwigs, wheresoe'er he goes,
His title' of barrister on every wench,
And wooes in language of the Pleas and Bench. Donne's Satires, Poems, p. 123.

My lord, if he be not thwarted, will talk more than twenty barristers. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. iv. 20.

BA'RROW.† n. s. [beɒeꝑe, Sax. supposed by Skinner to come from bear, Dr. Johnson says. But it is from the old Fr. barrot, barreau; and that from the low Lat. barrotum.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand, as a hand-barrow; a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men, a wheel-barrow; that which one man pushes forward by raising it upon one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and thrown into the Thames? Shakspeare.

No barrow's wheel
Shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace. Gay.

BA'RROW.† n. s. [beꝛȝ, Sax.] A hog; whence barrow grease, or hog's lard.

I say "gentle," though this barrow grunt at the word. Milton, Colasterion.

BA'RROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from beaꝛꝑe, which the Saxons used in the same sense. Gibson.

BA'RROW† is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried, Dr. Johnson says. But Borlase, in his Hist. of Cornwall, says they are called burrows, and more properly, being derived from bẏꝛiȝ, to hide or bury. Barrow, in our northern dialect, is used for the side of a rocky hill, or a large heap of stones; this may be from beoꝛȝ, an heap, a mount. However, the sepulchral barrow is not written according to Borlase's Cornish orthography.

Near Woodyate's-lane the Roman road penetrates the center of a barrow, one of a numerous groupe. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 66.

To BA'RTER. v. n. [barrater, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat, craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter,
By giving or by taking quarter. Hudibras.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour. Collier.

To BA'RTER. v. a.

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.

For him was I exchang'd and ransom'd:
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me. Shakspeare.

Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
To those who, at the market rate,
Can barter honour for estate. Prior.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in exchange. Decay of Piety.

He also bartered away plumbs that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

BA'RTER. n. s. [from the verb.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and, in exchange or barter, send other things, with which they may abound. Bacon.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words, is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which, the laudable traffic of old clothes is much the fairest barter. Felton.

BA'RTERER.† n. s. [from barter.] One that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

What this disparaging barterer—in all the affectation of self-important opulence calls a garret, was one of the best and pleasantest rooms in a very commodious house. Wakefield, Memoirs, p. 257.

BA'RTERY. n. s. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities.

It is a received opinion, that, in most ancient ages, there was only bartery or exchange of commodities amongst most nations. Camden, Rem.

BARTHO'LOMEW-TIDE.* n. s. The term near St. Bartholomew's day.

Like flies at Bartholemew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

BA'RTRAM. n. s. A plant; the same with pellitory.

BA'RTON.† n. s. [Sax. beꝛe-ƫun, an area.] Blount describes this word as meaning the demesne lands of a manor; the manor-house itself; and sometimes the outhouses. Most of our old lexicographers explain it as an enclosed place, or inner yard, wherein poultry is kept, or husbandry used. V. Huloet, Minsheu, and Cotgrave. Blount's is the povincialism of the west of England; the latter is still used in other places.

BA'RYTES.* n. s. [from the Greek βαρὺς, heavy.] An earth, in its pure state very heavy, but never found unmixed with other substances. In some respects it is like lime. It is also poisonous; and it converts blue vegetable colours into green.

BASA'LT.* n. s. [from basaltes.] Artificial or black porcelain, a composition having nearly the same properties with the natural basalt; invented by Messrs. Wedgwood and Bentley, and applied to various purposes in their manufactures. See BASALTES. Chambers.

BASA'LTES. n. s. [Either from basal, iron; or from βασαλιζω, to examine diligently; according to Chambers. But where are basal and βασαλιζω to be found? βασανιζω, in the sense given, is certainly Greek; and βάσανος, is the lapis Lydius of the ancients.] A kind of stone, of the hardness and colour of iron, which is found in perpendicular blocks. Some of the ancients called it also lapis Lydius.

This is the most northern basaltes I am acquainted with. Pennant.

BASA'LTICK.* adj. Of basaltes.

We had in view a fine series of genuine basaltick columns. Pennant.

BASE.† adj. [bas, Fr. basso, Ital. baxo, Span. bassus, low Latin; Gr. βάσις.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless: of things.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumb are no very good plumbs. Bacon.

Pyreicus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a scullery; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; disingenuous; illiberal; ungenerous; low; without dignity of sentiment: of persons.

Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot come unto any unnoble heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversaries thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Atterbury.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank; without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and baser people? Spenser on Ireland.

If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
You reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakspeare.

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue and be denied such common grace. Shaks.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own sight. 2 Sam. vi. 22.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

He whose mind
Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
Though poor in fortune, of celestial race,
And he commits the crime who calls him base. Dryden.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock, and by consequence of no honourable birth; illegitimate.

Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact
As honest madam's issue. Shakspeare.

This young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Remains.

5. Applied to metals: without value. It is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or baser metal. Watts.

6. Applied to sounds: deep; grave. It is more frequently written bass, though the comparative bases seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield. Bacon.

7. Low; in position or place.

Hir nose bas, [base] hir brows high,
Hir eyes small and deep sett.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

[The] gulfe of deepe Avernus hole;
By that same hole an entraunce, dark and base,
With smoake and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descends to hell. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 31.

BASE-BORN.† adj. [from base and born.]

1. Born out of wedlock.

But see thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,
Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

Neither doth holy imply no bastard; for some holy men have been base-born.
Featley's Dippers Dipt, (1645,) p. 51.

2. Simply, of low parentage.

A base-born shepherd.
Sir R. Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 105.

3. Vile; spurious: applied to things.

The world descends into such base-born evils,
That forty angels can make fourscore devils.
Tourneur's Revenger's Tragedy.

It is justly expected, that they should bring forth a base-born issue of divinity.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BASE-COURT. n. s. [bas cour, Fr.] Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house; the back-yard; the farm-yard.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
To speak with you. Shakspeare.

BASE-MINDED. adj. Mean-spirited; worthless.

It signifieth, as it seemeth, no more than abject, base-minded, false hearted, coward, or nidget.
Camden, Rem.

BASE-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. [from base and mind.] A meanness of spirit.

A timorous base-mindedness and abjectness.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BASE-VIOL. n. s. [usually written bass-viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance; at the second, he became the head of a base-viol. Addison.

BASE.† n. s. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing: commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea. Shakspeare.

A man should study other things, not to covet, not to fear, not to repent him; to make his base such, as no tempest shall shake him.
B. Jonson, Discov.

Firm Dorick pillars found your solid base,
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace.
Dryden.

Columns of polish'd marble firmly set
On golden bases are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great place, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the ancients placed a ram at the base of his images. Broome.

3. The broad part of any body; as, the bottom of a cone.

4. A kind of military vestment, like an apron; used only in the plural number.

Phalastos was all in white, having his bases and caparison embroidered. Sidney.

She made him to be dight
In woman's weedes, that is to manhood shame,
And put before his lap an apron white,
Instead of curiets and bases fit for fight.
Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 20.

Nor shall it e'er be said that wight,
With gauntlet blue and bases white,
And round blunt truncheon by his side,
So great a man at arms defied. Butler, Hudibras.

5. The place from which racers or tilters run; the bottom of the field; the carcer, the starting post.

He said; to their appointed base they went;
With beating heart th' expecting sign receive,
And starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryd.

6. The string that gives a base sound; the part assigned to the bass voice or instrument, in a musical performance.

The trembling streams which wont in channels cleare,
To rumble gently downe with murmur soft,
And were by them right tunefull taught to beare
A base's part among their consorts oft.
Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

At thy well sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryd.

7. An old rustick play, written by Skinner, bays; and in some counties called prison bars; in which some are pursuers, and others are prisoners, one party being opposed to another in the trial of swiftness. It is yet in use.

At hood-wink, barley-brake, at tick, or prison-base. Drayton, Polyolb. S. xxx.

They after both, and boldly bad him base,
And each did strive the other to outgoe.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 5.

Beauties do run at base, and kindly take
Each other prisoners for sweet beauty's sake.
Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. N 3.

He with two striplings (lads more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter)
Made good the passage. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

8. An old word for a small cannon.

Our men acknowledge but fifty-three great brass pieces, which were mounted, four brass cannon, six brass demi-cannon, sixteen cannon-pedroes, of brass, three of iron, ten brass bases.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 110.

To BASE.† v. a. [baisser, Fr. See To ABASE.] To embase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals; figuratively, to degrade.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base: as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height. Bacon.

Hast thou e'er heard of subject under sun,
That plac'd and bas'd his sovereigns so oft
By interchange, now low, and then aloft?
Mir. for Mag. p. 373.

BA'SELESS.* adj. [from base and less.] Without foundation.

The baseless fabrick of this vision. Shaks. Temp.

BA'SELY. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers. Shakspeare.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,
With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain. Dryden.

2. In bastardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Knolles.

BA'SEMENT.* n. s. [In architecture.] A continued base, extended a considerable length; as around a house, a room, or other piece of building. Fr. soubasement. Chambers.

BA'SENESS. n. s. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth expel. Spenser.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust;
Nothing but love could make you so unjust.
Dryden.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

2. Vileness of metal.

We alledged the fraudulent obtaining his patent, the baseness of his metal, and the prodigious sum to be coined. Swift.

3. Bastardy; illegitimacy of birth.

Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? Shaks.

4. Deepness of sound.

The just and measur'd proportion of the air percussed toward the baseness or trebleness of tones, is one of the greatest secrets in the contemplation of sounds. Bacon.

BA'SENET.* n. s. [old Fr. bacinet, old Eng. basnyt.] An helmet or headpiece.

And, that of him she mote assured stand,
He sent to her his basenet as a faithfull band.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 31.

BA'SESTRING.* n. s. [from base and string.] The lowest note.

I have sounded the very base-string of mortality.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To BASH.† v. n. [probably from base, Dr. Johnson says. But it is to be traced, perhaps, to the Sax. beꝛceaban, from ꝛcead, a shade; ꝛceaban, to overwhelm, to sink, to confound. See also To ABASH.] To be ashamed; to be confounded with shame.

They bashe not to defile the wives of other men.
Bale, on the Revel. sign. C. iii. b.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Guyon's looks, but scornful eye-glance at him shot. Spenser, F. Q.

BA'SHAW. n. s. [sometimes written bassa.] A title of honour and command among the Turks; the viceroy of a province; the general of an army.

The Turks made an expedition into Persia; and because of the straits of the mountains, the bashaw consulted which way they should get in.
Bacon.

BA'SHFUL.† adj. [This word, with all those of the same race, are of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Skinner imagines them derived from base, or mean; Minsheu from verbaesen, Dut. to strike with astonishment; Junius from βάσις, which he finds in Hesychius to signify shame. The conjecture of Minsheu seems most probable, Dr. Johnson adds. But see To BASH.]

1. Modest; shamefaced.

I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister shew'd
Bashful sincerity, and comely love. Shakspeare.

2. Sheepish; viciously modest.

He looked with an almost bashful kind of modesty, as if he feared the eyes of man. Sidney.

Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me plain and holy innocence.
Shakspeare.

Our author, anxious for his fame to-night,
And bashful in his first attempt to write,
Lies cautiously obscure. Addison.

3. Exciting shame.

A woman yet must blush when bashful is the case,
Though truth bid tell the tale and story as it fell.
Mir. for Mag. p. 59.

BA'SHFULLY.† adv. [from bashful.] Timorously; modestly. Sherwood.

BA'SHFULNESS. n. s. [from bashful.]

1. Modesty, as shewn in outward appearance.

Philoclea a little mused how to cut the thread even, with eyes, cheeks, and lips, whereof each sang their part, to make up the harmony of bashfulness. Sidney.

Such looks, such bashfulness might well adorn
The cheeks of youths that are more nobly born.
Dryden.

2. Vicious or rustick shame.

For fear had bequeathed his room to his kinsman bashfulness, to teach him good manners.
Sidney.

There are others, who have not altogether so much of this foolish bashfulness, and who ask every one's opinion. Dryden.

BA'SIL.† n. s. [ocymum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

Sweet basil, rare for smell.
Drayton, Polyol. S. 15.

BA'SIL. n. s. The angle to which the edge of a joiner's tool is ground away. See To BA'SIL.

BA'SIL.† n. s. The skin of a sheep tanned. This is I believe more properly written basen, Dr. Johnson says. It is so; being the Fr. bazane. See BAWSIN.

To BA'SIL. v. a. To grind the edge of a tool to an angle.

These chissels are not ground to such a basil as the joiners' chissels on one of the sides, but are basiled away on both the flat sides; so that the edge lies between both the sides in the middle of the tool. Moxon.

BASI'LICA. n. s. [Gr. βασιλική.] The middle vein of the arm, so called, by way of pre-eminence. It is likewise attributed to many medicines for the same reason. Quincy.

BASI'LICAL.† } adj. [from basilica. See
BASI'LICK. } BASILICA.] Belonging to the basilick vein.

On him you first shew'd your poetick strain,
And prais'd his opening the basilick vein.
The Medal of John Bayes, 1682.

These aneurisms, following always upon bleeding the basilick vein, must be aneurisms of the humeral artery. Sharp.

It was formerly written basilican; and Howell, soon after the murder of King Charles the First, thus quibbles on the word.

I will attend with patience how England will thrive, now that she is let blood in the basilican vein. Howell, Let. iii. 24.

BASI'LICK. n. s. [basilique, Fr. βασιλικη.] A large hall, having two ranges of pillars, and two isles or wings with galleries over them. These basilicks were first made for the palaces of princes, and afterwards converted into courts of justice, and lastly into churches; whence a basilick is generally taken for a magnificent church, as the basilick of St. Peter at Rome.

BASI'LICON. n. s. [βασιλικὸν.] An ointment, called also tetrapharmacon.
Quincy.

I made incision into the cavity, and put a pledget of basilicon over it. Wiseman.

BA'SILISK. n. s. [basiliscus, Lat. from Gr. βασιλισκος, of βασιλευς, a king.]

1. A kind of serpent called also a cockatrice, which is said to drive away all others by his hissing, and to kill by looking.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk;
I've look'd on thousands who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakspeare.

The basilisk was a serpent not above three palms long, and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head and some white marks or coronary spots upon the crown. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2 A species of cannon or ordnance.

We practice to make swifter motions than any you have; and to make them stronger and more violent than yours are; exceeding your greatest cannons and basilisks. Bacon.

BA'SIN. n. s. [basin, Fr. bacile, bacino, Ital.] It is often written bason, but not according to etymology.]

1. A small vessel to hold water for washing, or other uses.

Let one attend him with a silver basin,
Full of rosewater, and bestrewed with flowers.
Shakspeare.

We have little wells for infusions, where the waters take the virtue quicker and better, than in vessels and basins. Bacon.

We behold a piece of silver in a basin, when water is put upon it, which we could not discover before, as under the verge thereof.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A small pond.

On one side of the walk you see this hollow basin, with its several little plantations lying conveniently under the eye of the beholder. Spectat.

3. A part of the sea inclosed in rocks, with a narrow entrance.

The jutting land two ample bays divides;
The spacious basins arching rocks inclose,
A sure defence from every storm that blows.
Pope.

4. Any hollow place capacious of liquids.

If this rotation does the seas affect,
The rapid motion rather would eject
The stores, the low, capacious caves contain,
And from its ample basin cast the main.
Blackmore.

5. A dock for repairing and building ships.

6. In anatomy, a round cavity situated between the anterior ventricles of the brain.

7. A concave piece of metal, by which glass-grinders form their convex glasses.

8. A round shell or case of iron placed over a furnace in which hatters mould the matter of a hat into form.

9. Basins of a Balance; the same with the scales; one to hold the weight, the other the thing to be weighed.

BA'SINED.* adj. [from basin.] Inclosed in a small hollow place like as a basin.

Thy basin'd rivers, and imprison'd seas.
Young, Night Thoughts, 9.

BA'SIS. n. s. [basis, Lat.]

1. The foundation of any thing, as of a column or a building.

It must follow, that paradise, being raised to this height, must have the compass of the whole earth for a basis and foundation. Ralegh.

Ascend my chariot, guide the rapid wheels
That shake heav'n's basis. Milton.

In altar wise a stately pile they rear;
The basis broad below, and top advanc'd in air.
Dryden.

2. The lowest of the three principal parts of a column, which are the basis, shaft, and capital.

Observing an English inscription upon the basis, we read it over several times. Addison.

3. That on which any thing is raised.

Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud
To be the basis of that pompous load,
Than which a nobler weight no mountain bears.
Denham.

4. The pedestal.

How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompey's basis lies along
No worthier than the dust? Shakspeare.

5. The groundwork, or first principle of any thing

Build me thy fortune upon the basis of valour.
Shakspeare.

The friendships of the world are oft
Confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure;
Ours has severest virtue for its basis. Addison.

To BASK.† v. a. [backeren, Dut. Skinner. Rather from the Su.-Goth. basa, to bask.] To warm by laying out in the heat: used almost always of animals.

Then lies him down the lubbar fiend,
And, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength. Milton.

He was basking himself in the gleam of the sun.
L'Estrange.

'Tis all thy business, business how to shun,
To bask thy naked body in the sun. Dryden.

To BASK. v. n. To lie in the warmth.

About him, and above, and round the wood,
The birds that haunt the borders of his flood;
That bath'd within, or bask'd upon his side,
To tuneful songs their narrow throats apply'd.
Dryden.

Unlock'd, in covers let her freely run,
To range thy courts, and bask before the sun.
Tickell.

Some in the fields of purest æther play,
And bask and whiten in the blaze of day. Pope.

BA'SKET.† n. s. [basged, Welsh; bascauda, Lat. Barbara de Pictis venit bascauda Britannis. Martial. Probably from bass; of which, vessels were often made. See BASS.] A vessel made of twigs, rushes, or splinters, or some other slender bodies interwoven.

Here is a basket; he may creep in, and throw foul linen upon him, as if going to bucking.
Shakspeare.

Thus while I sung, my sorrows I deceiv'd,
And bending osiers into baskets weav'd. Dryden.

Poor Peg was forc'd to go hawking and peddling; now and then carrying a basket of fish to the market. Arbuthnot.

BA'SKET-HILT. n. s. [from basket and hilt.] A hilt of a weapon so made as to contain the whole hand, and defend it from being wounded.

His puissant sword unto his side,
Near his undaunted heart was ty'd:
With basket-hilt, that would hold broth,
And serve for fight and dinner both. Hudibras.

Their beef they often in their murrions stew'd,
And in their basket-hilts their beverage brew'd.
King.

BA'SKET-HILTED.* adj. A weapon having a basket hilt.

Quin — declared it was not safe to sit down to a turtle-feast in one of the city-halls, without a basket-hilted knife and fork.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, 2. 253. n.

BA'SKET-WOMAN. n. s. [from basket and woman.] A woman that plies at markets with a basket, ready to carry home any thing that is bought.

BA'SQUISH.* adj. [from the Fr. Basque, a Biscayan.] Relating to the language of the natives of Biscay.

In what purity and incommixture the language of that people stood, which were casually discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, no longer ago than in the time of Duke D'Alva, we have not met with a good account any farther than that their words were Basquish or Cantabrian.
Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 136.

Laying hold on his lance, he said in bad Spanish, and worse Basquish, Get thee away, knight, in an ill hour. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. B. i. i. 8.

BASS.† n. s. [supposed by Junius to be derived, like basket, from some British word signifying a rush; but perhaps more properly written bass, from the French bosse, Dr. Johnson says. Dr. Jamieson has been informed, that bass properly signifies bast, (Teut. bast, bark,) or the bark of lime-tree, of which packing mats are made. But I differ from this account, inasmuch as our mats for packing furniture are certainly made of rushes; and our gardeners also call the soft sedge or rush, with which they bind plants, bass; which is the meaning of the word in the citation from Mortimer, though erroneously assigned by Dr. Johnson to a church mat.] Matting; also a mat used in churches.

Having woollen yarn, bass mat, or such like to bind them withal. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BASS.* n. s. In Cumberland, a river-fish of the perch kind, in Hampshire, a sea-perch.

Excellent pike, and perch, here [at Keswick] called bass. Gray, Letter to Dr. Warton.

To BASS. v. n. To sound in a deep tone.

The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounc'd
The name of Prosper: it did bass my trespass.
Shakspeare.

BASS. adj. [See BASE.] In musick, grave; deep.

BASS-RELIEF.† n. s. [from bas and relief, raised work, Fr.] Sculpture, the figures of which do not stand out from the ground in their full proportion. Felibien distinguishes three kinds of bass-relief: in the first, the front figures appear almost with the full relief; in the second, they stand out no more than one half; and, in the third, much less, as in coins.

Great imbossed silver tables tell you, in bass-relief, his victories at sea. Gray, Letter to West.

The bas-relieves at the back of the grand altar, representing passages in the life and actions of our Saviour, are wonderful samples of sculpture.
Memoirs of R. Cumberland, ii. 154.

BASS-VIOL. See BASE-VIOL.

On the sweep of the arch lies one of the Muses, playing on a bass-viol. Dryden.

BA'SSA.† n. s. See BASHAW.

By the flight of Cicala and the bassa of Trepizond, the Persians kept the field.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 287.

BA'SSET.† n. s. [basset, Fr.] A game at cards, invented at Venice.

Gamesters would no more blaspheme; and lady Dabcheek's basset bank would be broke.
Dennis.

Another is for setting up an assembly for basset, where none shall be admitted to punt that have not taken the oaths. Addison, Freehold. No. 8.

One O'Neal, a Roman Catholick lady, in St. James's street, had a ball and a basset on that day. Atterbury, to Bp. Trelawney, Lett. 122.

BA'SSO RELIEVO.† [Ital.] See BASS-RELIEF.

The splendid iceing of an immense historick plumb-cake, was embossed with a delicious basso-relievo of the destruction of Troy.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 492.

BASSO'N, BASSO'ON. n. s. [basson, Fr.] A musical instrument of the wind kind, blown with a reed, and furnished with eleven holes, which are stopped like other large flutes; its diameter at bottom is nine inches, and it serves for the bass in concerts of hautboys, &c.
Trevoux.

BA'SSOCK. n. s. The same with bass.

BA'STARD.† n. s. [bastardd, Welsh, of low birth; bastarde, Fr.]

1. Bastard, according to the civil and canon law, is a person born of a woman out of wedlock, or not married; so that, according to order of law, his father is not known. Ayliffe.

Him to the Lydian king Lycimnia bare,
And sent her boasted bastard to the war. Dryden.

2. Any thing spurious or false.

Words
But rooted in your tongue; bastards and syllables,
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shaks.

3. A kind of sweet wine. Coles, in his Dictionary, calls it raisin wine, 1677.

Score a pint of bastard. —
Then your brown bastard is your only drink.
Shakspeare.

I was drunk with bastard,
Whose nature is to form things like itself,
Heady and monstrous.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer tamed.

4. [In naval language.] The large sail of a galley, which will make way with a slack wind.

BA'STARD-DITTANY.* n. s. See DITTANY.

BA'STARD. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Begotten out of wedlock; illegitimate.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, insensible, a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakspeare.

2. Spurious; not genuine; supposititious; false; adulterate. In this sense, any thing which bears some relation or resemblance to another, is called spurious or bastard.

You may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter. That were a kind of bastard hope indeed. Shakspeare.

Men who, under the disguise of publick good, pursue their own designs of power, and such bastard honours as attend them. Temple.

BA'STARD Cedar Tree. [called guazuma in the West Indies.]

To BA'STARD. v. n. [from the noun.] To convict of being a bastard; to stigmatize with bastardy.

She lived to see her brother beheaded, and her two sons deposed from the crown, bastarded in their blood, and cruelly murdered. Bacon.

BA'STARDISM.* n. s. [old Fr. bastardise.] The state or condition of a bastard.
Cotgrave.

To BA'STARDIZE.† v. a. [from bastardise. The old Fr. has also the verb abastardir.]

1. To convict of being a bastard.

The Lord never suffereth the ground articles and points of true religion to be abolished in his church, though they be in divers sorts, both within and without, disguised and bastardized.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 142.

The Apostle bastardizeth those that suffer not.
Feltham's Resolves, ii. 57.

2. To beget a bastard.

I should have been what I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Shakspeare.

BA'STARDLY.* adj. [from bastard.] Spurious; illegitimate.

A furtive simulation, and a bastardly kind of adoption. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 96.

So became he [Lot] the father of an accursed bastardly brood. Gataker, Spiritual Watch, p. 54.

BA'STARDLY. adv. [from bastard.] In the manner of a bastard; spuriously.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease and into cockle strays;
Let the mind's thoughts but be transplanted so
Into the body, and bastardly they grow. Donne.

BA'STARDY. n. s. [from bastard.] An unlawful state of birth, which disables the bastard, both according to the laws of God and man, from succeeding to an inheritance. Ayliffe.

Once she slandered me with bastardy;
But whether I be true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head. Shaks.

In respect of the evil consequents, the wife's adultery is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family. Taylor.

No more of bastardy in heirs of crowns. Pope.

To BASTE.† v. a. participle pass. basted, or basten. [bastonner, Fr. Bazata, in the Armorick dialect, signifies to strike with a stick; from which perhaps baston a stick, and all its derivatives, or collaterals, may be deduced, Dr. Johnson says. But the derivation of baste is northern. Iceland, beysta, and bausta, to strike: Sued. basa, to beat. See Widegren, Su. Dict.]

1. To beat with a stick.

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain;
Because the pangs his bones endure,
Contribute nothing to the cure. Hudibras.

2. To drip butter, or any thing else, upon meat as it turns upon the spit; to moisten it; used also figuratively.

Sir, I think the meat wants what I have, basting. Shakspeare.

The fat of roasted mutton falling on the birds, will serve to baste them, and so save time and butter. Swift.

You desire now to be basted with words well steeped in vinegar and salt; but I will be more charitable unto you, and leave bad speeches to black mouths.

Hayward's Answer to Dolman, K. iij.

3. To sew slightly; [baster, Fr. to stitch.]

The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly basted on neither. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

BA'STER.* n. s. [from the verb.] A blow with a stick or other weapon. Not in use, I believe.

Jack took up the poker, and gave me such a baster upon my head, that it was two months before I perfectly recovered.

Dr. Wagstaffe's Miscell. Works, 1726, p. 48.

BA'STILE.* n. s. [Fr. bastille, low Lat. bastia. A very old English substantive also, and it is curious that Dr. Johnson should have omitted it. "Bastyll of a castle," Prompt. Parv. 1514. Cotgrave interprets bastille, "a fortresse or castle furnished with towers and ditches;" and adds that "in Paris, la Bastille is as our Tower, the chief prison of the kingdome."] The fortification of a castle; the castle itself.

Thus fortune fares her children to confound,
Which on her wheel their bastiles bravely beeld.
Mir. for Mag. p. 167.

Near which there stands
A bastile built to imprison hands.
Hudibras, ii. 1150.

BA'STIMENT, or BASTIME'NTO.* n. s. [old Fr. bastiment, a building.] A rampart.

Then the bastimentos never
Had our foul dishonour seen,
Nor the sea the sad receiver
Of this gallant train had been.
Glover, Hosier's Ghost, st. 7.

BASTINA'DE. } BASTINA'DO. } n. s. [bastonnade, Fr.]

1. The act of beating with a cudgel; the blow given with a cudgel.

But this courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane; so with rageful eyes she bade him defend himself. Sidney.

And all those harsh and rugged sounds
Of bastinados, cuts and wounds. Hudibras.

2. It is sometimes taken for a Turkish punishment of beating an offender on the soles of his feet.

To BASTINA'DE.† } To BASTINA'DO. } v. a. [from the noun; bastonner, Fr.] To beat; to treat with the bastinado.

Here be words, Horace, able to bastinado a man's ears. B. Jonson, Poetaster, A. v. S. 3.

Nick seized the longer end of the cudgel, and with it began to bastinado old Lewis, who had slunk into a corner, waiting the event of a squabble. Arbuthnot.

BA'STING.* n. s. [from baste.] The act of beating with a stick.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

I am not apt upon a wound.
Or trivial basting, to despond.
Hudibras, iii. 596.

BA'STION. n. s. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with sods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark. Harris.

Toward: but how? ay there's the question;
Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion. Prior.

BAT.† n. s. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club, Dr. Johnson says; but the citation from Spenser agrees with the provincial usage of the word in Sussex, where a walking-stick is called a bat. The bat is also now a common word for what was once the stick in driving back the ball at the game of cricket.

The while he spake, lo, Judas, oon of the twelve, came, and with him a greet company with swerdis and battis. Wickliffe, S. Matt. xxvi. 47.

A handsome bat he held
On which he leaned, as one far in eld.
Spenser, F. Q.

They were fried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats. Hakewill.

BAT.† n. s. [vespertillio, the etymology unknown, according to Dr. Johnson. Under the substantive back, I have shewn that the bat was so called by our ancestors. Dr. Jamieson informs us, that back and backie-bird is its name in Scotland. Its old denomination of rear-mouse might occasion this name perhaps; though Dr. Jamieson omits not the Su.-Goth. backa, and Dan. bakke. But of the change into bat I have yet to seek the reason.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine. Calmet.

When owls do cry,
On a bat's back do I fly. Shakspeare.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more
Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;
Bats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their desire to learn. Davies.

Some animals are placed in the middle betwixt two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts. Locke.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep.
Gay.

BA'TFOWLER.* [from bat and fowl.] One who delights in bat-fowling.

The birds of passage would in a dark night, immediately make for a light-house, and destroy themselves by flying with violence against it, as is well known to bat-fowlers.

Barrington's Essays, Ess. 4.

BA'TFOWLING. n. s. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of birdcatching in the night time, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds fly into the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should so, and then go a bat-fowling. Shakspeare.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre than by day; as sacking of cities, bat-fowling. Peacham.

BA'TABLE.† adj. [Fr. batable.] Disputable.

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Cowel.

BATCH. n. s. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.

The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any quantity of any thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities.

Except he were of the same meal and batch.
B. Jonson.

BA'TCHELOR. See BACHELOR.

BATE.† n. s. [perhaps contracted from debate, Dr. Johnson says; but it is the Sax. bate, contention.] Strife; contention; as, a make bate; which is the only example noticed by Dr. Johnson.

I thought to rule, but to obey to none;
And therefore fell I with my king at bate.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 347.

He breeds no bate. Shaks. K. Hen. IV. P. II.

BATE-BREEDING.* part. adj. [from bate and breed.] Breeding strife.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

To BATE. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.

Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness,
Say this? Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

Nor envious at the sight will I forbear
My plenteous bowl, nor bate my plenteous cheer.
Dryden.

2. To sink the price.

When the landholder's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ or not pay him. Locke.

3. To lessen a demand.

Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. To cut off; to take away.

Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say.
Dryden, Sp. Friar.

To BATE. v. n.

1. To grow less.

Bardolph, am not I fallen away vilely since this last election? Do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. To remit: with of before the thing.

Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine.
Dryden.

To BATE, *as a hawk. See To BAIT. But bate, from its derivation, is the right orthography.

To BATE, to stop at any place for refreshment. See To BAIT.

BATE seems to have been once the preterite of bite, as Shakspeare uses biting faulchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.

Yet there the steel staid not, but inly bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate.
Spenser.

BA'TEFUL. adj. [from bate and full.] Contentious.

He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sheep in food to thwart;
Which soon as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part.
Sidney.

BA'TELESS.* adj. [from bate and less.] Not to be abated or subdued.

Haply that name of Chaste unhap'ly set
This bateless edge on his keen appetite.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BA'TEMENT. n. s. [from abatement.] Diminution; a term only used among artificers.

To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BA'TFUL.* adj. See To BATTEL. This word is of frequent occurrence in Drayton's Polyolbion, and means fruitful. Obsolete.

The batful pastures fenc'd, and most with quick-set mound. Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 3.
The batful meads on Severn's either side.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 14.

BATH. n. s. [baŏ, Sax.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservatories, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison, Spect.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames!
Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Sleep, the birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. A sand heat is sometime called balneum siccum, or cinereum. [See BALNEUM.] Quincy.

We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure for things dry.
Calmet.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.
Isaiah, v. 10.

To BATHE. v. a. [baðian, Sax.]

1. To wash, as in a bath.

Others, on silver lakes and rivers, bathed
Their downy breast. Milton, P. L.

Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquours.

Bathe them and keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, and lenitive boluses.
Wiseman, Surgery.

I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence.
Dryden.

3. To wash any thing.

Phœnician Dido stood
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood.
Dryden.

Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cinthia's wrath.
Dryden.

To BATHE. v. n. To be in the water, or in any resemblance of a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Shaksp.

The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide.
Waller.

But bathe, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope, Odyss.

BA'THING.* n. s. [from bathe.] The act of bathing.

Their bathings and anointings before their feasts.
Hakewill's Apology, p. 390.

*BA'THOS. n. s. [Gr.] The art of sinking in poetry; the profound. Ironically spoken, in contradistinction to the sublime.

The taste of the bathos is implanted by nature itself in the soul of man; till, perverted by custom or example, he is taught, or rather compelled, to relish the sublime.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib. περι βαθ. § 2.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING. prep. [from bate, or abate. This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.] Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rowe.

If we consider children, we have little reason to think, that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst.
Locke.

BA'TLET.† n. s. [from bat, Dr. Johnson says. It is, perhaps, the abbreviation of the Span. battadore. See BATTLE-DOOR. In Lancashire the batlet is called a battril.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked.
Shakspeare.

BA'TLINS.* n. s. pl. Loppings of trees for firing, or hedging, or hurdle-making. Used in Norfolk and Suffolk. Grose, and Moor's Suff. Words.

BATO'ON.† n. s. [baston, or baton, Fr. formerly spelt baston, and now most commonly baton.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with bastons in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon, New Atlantis.

That does not make a man the worse,
Although his shoulders with batoon
Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.

2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour. Of this Dr. Johnson gives no example; but it is both an old English word, and has very recently been also happily exemplified.

Get me a baton; 'tis twenty times more court-like, and less trouble.—And yet you wear a sword.
Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

I send this dispatch by my Aide-de-Camp, Captain Freemantle, whom I beg leave to recommend to your Lordship's protection: he will have the honour of laying at the feet of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent the colours of the 4th battalion of the 100th regiment, and Marshal Jourdan's baton, of a marshal of France, taken by the 87th regiment.
Lord Wellington, Gaz. Extr. July 3. 1813.

3. [In heraldry.] It is generally used, in the coat of arms, to denote illegitimate descent.

BA'TTABLE.* adj. See To BATTEL. Capable of cultivation.

Masinissa made many inward parts of Barbary and Numidia, before his time incult and horrid, fruitful and battable.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. to the Reader.

BA'TTAILANT.* n. s. [from the old Fr. batailleir, whence bataillers, combatants. Lacombe and Roquefort.] A combatant. Obsolete.

He thought—that those battailants, that fought so eagerly in the room, had slain him.
Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, B. 1. P. 3. ch. 3.

BA'TTAILOUS. adj. [from battaille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with a military appearance.

He started up, and did himself prepare
In sun-bright arms and battailous array. Fairfax.

The French came foremost battailous and bold. Fairfax.

A fiery region stretch'd
In battailous aspect, and nearer view
Bristled with upright beams innumerable
Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd. Milton.

BATTA'LIA.† n. s. [battaglia, Ital. old Fr. bataille, division, corps de troupes.]

1. The order of battle.

The heavens 'gainst Sisera fought, the stars
Mov'd in battalia to those wars. Sandys, Divine Songs, p. 8.

Both armies being drawn out in battalia, that of the king's, trusting to their numbers, began the charge with great fury, but without any order. Swift, Reign of King Henry I.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarendon.

2. The main body of an army in array.

Why, our battalia trebles that account. Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

In three battalias does the king dispose
His strength, which all in ready order stand
And to each other's rescue near at hand. May's Reign of K. Edw. III.

BATTA'LION. n. s. [battaillon, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called Thersites and Pandarus. Tatler.

The pierc'd battalions disunited fall
In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all. Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.

Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
—Why, our battalion trebles that account. Shakspeare.

To BA'TTEL, or BA'TTIL.* v. a. [It may be from the Sax. bacan, to bait. But Mr. Steevens says, that bat is an ancient English word for increase. Perhaps it is from the Goth. ga-batnan, to advantage. Hence batful, which see.] To render fertile.

Whose batt'ling pastures fatten all my flocks. Greene's Fr. Bacon.

Ashes are a marvellous improvement to battle [battel] barren land, by reason of the fixed salt which they contain. Ray's Proverbs.

To BA'TTEL.* v. n.

1. To grow fat, or get flesh, as Sherwood defines this old verb.

The best advizement was, of bad, to let her
Sleep out her fill without encomberment;
For sleep, they said, would make her battill better. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 38.

2. To stand indebted in the college-books, at Oxford, for what is expended at the buttery in the necessaries of eating and drinking. At Cambridge, size is used in a similar sense. Hence in the former university there is a student named a batteler or battler; in the latter, a sizer. See the substantive BATTEL.

BA'TTEL, or BA'TTLE.* adj. [from the verb.] Fruitful; fertile.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over battle grounds, the fertile disposition whereof is good; yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth forth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable; whereby that, which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth. Hooker, v. 3.

BA'TTEL.* n. s. [from Sax. tælan or tellan, to count or reckon; having the prefix be.] The account of the expences of a student in any college in Oxford.

Bring my kinsman's battels with you, and you shall have money to discharge them. Letters, (Cherry to Hearne,) i. 119.

BA'TTELLER, or BA'TTLER.* n. s. [from battel.] A student at Oxford.

Though in the meanest condition of those that were wholly maintained [in the University of Oxford] by their parents, a battler, or semi-commoner, he was admitted to the conversation and friendship of the gentleman-commoners. Life of Bp. Kennett, p. 4.

To BA'TTEN.† v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology, Dr. Johnson says. But see To BATTEL. And here the Goth ga-batnan, to profit, is more obvious.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plenteously.

We drove afield
Battening our flock with the fresh dews of night. Milton.

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with battening ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

To BA'TTEN. v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits. Shakspeare.

Burnish'd and battening on their food, to show,
The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryd.

As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Battening in ease, and slumbering life away. Garth.

Tway mice, full blithe and amicable,
Batten beside erle Robert's table. Prior.

While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or battening hogs roll in the sinking mire. Gay, Pastorals.

BA'TTEN. n. s. A word used only by workmen.

A batten is a scantling of wood, two, three or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Moxon.

To BA'TTER.† v. a. [battre, to beat, Fr. from the Lat. batuere, Barret's Alvearie in V.]

1. To beat; to beat down; to shatter; frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort. Ezek. xxi. 22.

These haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shakspeare.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

Be then, the naval stores, the nation's care,
New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Battering the pavement with their coursers feet. Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good house-keeping. Swift, Directions to the Cook.

3. Applied to persons; to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran strumpets here,
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

As the same dame, experienc'd in her trade,
By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BA'TTER. v. n. A word used only by workmen.

The side of a wall, or any timber, that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter. Moxon.

BA'TTER. n. s. [from To batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquour; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence has try'd
Turkey poults fresh from th' egg in batter fry'd. King.

BA'TTERER.† n. s. [from batter.] The person or any thing that batters.

This is a violent batterer of our souls, and causeth melancholy and dotage. Burton, Anat. of Mel. 4to. ed. p. 120.

Nor are these masters such batterers, or demolishers, of stately and elegant buildings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 185.

BA'TTERING-RAM.* n. s. An ancient military engine. See To BATTER, v. a. and RAM.

BA'TTERY. n. s. [from batter, or batterie, Fr.]

1. The act of battering.

Strong wars they make, and cruel battery bend,
'Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrow. Spen. F. Q.

Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action; a line of cannon.

Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—
—I think at the north gate. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth. South.

See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,
Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driven:
A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,
O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake. Blackmore.

3. The frame or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. [In law.] A violent striking of any man. In an action against a striker, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery? Shakspeare.

Sir, quoth the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
You have as good and fair a battery,
As heart can wish, and need not shame
The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras.

BA'TTISH.† adj. [from bat.] Resembling a bat.

To be out late in a battish humour. Gentleman Instructed.

She clasp'd his limbs, by impious labour tir'd,
With battish limbs. Vernon, Ovid. Met. B. 8.

BA'TTLE. n. s. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight; an encounter between opposite armies. We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army that divided was
Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;
And means to give you battle presently. Shaksp.

The battle done, and they within our power,
She'll never see his pardon. Shakspeare.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Eccles. ix. 11.

So they joined battle, and the heathen being discomfited fled into the plain. 1 Maccabees, iv. 14.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles; whereof the vanguard only, with wings, came to fight. Bacon.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed with the battle a good distance behind, and after came the arrier. Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

To BA'TTLE.† v. n. [battailler, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

They have also a famouse new worke, called Joh. Eckius' postyll, which battelleth for the holye father's primacye hard.
Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, fol. 57.

'Tis ours by craft and by surprize to gain:
'Tis yours to meet in arms and battle in the plain.
Prior.

We received accounts of ladies battling it on both sides. Addison.

I own, he hates an action base,
His virtues batt'ling with his place. Swift.

BA'TTLE-ARRAY. n. s. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.] Array or order of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes, seemed drawn up in battle-array one against another. Addison.

BA'TTLE-AXE. n. s. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.

Certain tinners, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen clouts. Carew.

BA'TTLEDOOR.† n. s. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or striking, Dr. Johnson says. But it may be from the Span. batador, a washing beetle, with which laundresses beat their linen.]

1. An instrument with a handle and a flat board, used in play to strike a ball, or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battle-doors, and the like, which are to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them. Locke.

2. A child's horn-book; the first book of children: somewhat resembling a battle-door in shape.

BA'TTLEMENT. n. s. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from whence a building is defended against assailants; perhaps only corrupted from bâtiment, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or insterstices, to look through, to annoy an enemy.

And fixed his head upon our battlements.
Shaksp. Macbeth.

Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall from thence. Deut. xxii. 8.

Through this we pass
Up to the highest battlement, from whence
The Trojans threw their darts. Denham.

Their standard planted on the battlement,
Despair and death among the soldiers sent. Dryd.

No, I shan't envy him whoe'er he be,
That stands upon the battlements of state;
I'd rather be secure than great. Norris.

The weighty mallet deals resounding blows,
Till the proud battlements her tow'rs inclose. Gay.

BA'TTLEMENTED.* part. adj. [from battlement.] Secured by battlements.

So broad [the wall of Babylon] that six chariots could well drive together at the top, and so battlemented that they could not fall.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 228.

BA'TTLING.* n. s. [from battle.] Conflict; encounter; battle.

The livid Fury spread —
She blaz'd in omens, swell'd the groaning winds
With wild surmises, battlings, sounds of war.
Thomson, Liberty, P. 4.

BATTO'LOGIST.* n. s. [from battology, Fr. battalogue, "auteur ennuyeux et insipide," Lacombe.] One who repeats the same thing in speaking or writing.

Should a truly dull battologist, that is of Ausonius's character, quam pauca, quam diu loquuntur Attici? that an hour by the glass speaketh nothing; should such a one, I say, and a deserving eminent preacher, change sermons; people would not only come thicker, but return satisfied.
Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 209.

To BATTO'LOGIZE.* v. a. [from battology.] To repeat needlessly the same thing.

After the eastern mode, they wagged their bodies, bowing their heads, and battologizing the names Allough whoddaw and Mahumet very often.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 191.

After they have battologized Lla y-lala, or Hilula, i. e. praises, they iterate another [prayer].
Ibid, p. 324.

BATTO'LOGY.* n. s. [Fr. battologie, from the Gr. Βατ῎λογέω, which means "to do as Battus did, and which is described by Suidas in these words, Βατ῎λογία ἡ Πολυλογία, battology is multiplying of words, &c. ἀπὸ Βάττε, κ. τ. λ. taken from one Battus, who made long hymns, consisting of many lines, full of tautologies." Hammond on S. Matt. vi. 7.] This is an old English substantive, which Bullokar defines the "often repeating one and the same thing."

That heathenish battology of multiplying words.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BA'TTY. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep.
Shakspeare.

BA'VAROY.† n. s. [probably from a Bavarian fashion of dress, Bavarois, Fr.] A kind of cloak or surtout.

Let the loop'd bavaroy the fop embrace,
Or his deep cloke be spatter'd o'er with lace. Gay.

BAUBE'E.† n. s. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a half-penny. This coin, bearing the head of James the Sixth, king of Scotland, when young, has been supposed by some to have been therefore called baubee, as exhibiting the figure of a baby. But Dr. Jamieson says, this is a great mistake; the name, as well as the coin, being known before that prince's reign. Mr. Pinkerton derives it from the Fr. bas-billon. "The billon coin worth six pennies Scottish, and called bas-piece, from the first questionable shape in which it appeared, being of what the French called bas-billon, or the worst kind of billon, was now [in the reign of James VI.] struck in copper, and termed by the Scottish pronunciation, bawbee." Essay on Medals, vol. 2. p. 109.

Though in the drawers of my japan bureau,
To lady Gripeall I the Cæsars show,
'Tis equal to her ladyship or me
A copper Otho, or a Scotch baubee.
Bramston's Man of Taste.

BA'UBLE. See BAWBLE.

BA'VIN.† n. s. [of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Some have referred to it the Fr. fevin, (a word which I find nowhere,) from feu, fire. Bavin or faggot is rendered by the Fr. foüace, and foüées are the smallest sort of bavins. V. Cotgrave. Bavin, Dr. Johnson has elsewhere observed, means brushwood, which, fired, burns fiercely, but is soon out. In Florio's Ital. Dict. (1591) it is clearly a little faggot: "There is no fire: — make a little blaze with a bavin." In the Kentish Dialect, bavin is a brush, a faggot.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He rambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shaksp. Henry IV.

For moulded to the life in clouts,
Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,
He's mounted on a hazel bavin,
A cropp'd malignant baker gave him. Hudibras.

The truncheons make billet, bavin and coals.
Mortimer.

To BA'ULK. See BALK.

BA'WBLE.† n. s. [Baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubella sua dedit Othoni, Hoveden. Probably from beau. Fr. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymology. The word may also be traced to the old Fr. baôubélo, babiole, a plaything. Ital. babbolo. Bauble is now mostly used, and rightly, according to the derivation. It was formerly written bable, so late indeed as by Bp. Bramhall.] A gew-gaw; a trifling piece of finery; a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt, Dr. Johnson says. This, I may add, was doubtless occasioned by the word being, in ancient times, commonly coupled with a licensed jester, a fool; the bauble being a little truncheon, with a head carved on it, which such an one usually carried in his hand, as the mock ensign of his office; in which sense the sour protector of England, Oliver Cromwell, absurdly called the speaker's mace, as Blackstone also has observed, a "fool's bawble," when he forcibly turned out the rump-parliament, and bade the soldiers take away this object of his absurd acrimony.

The kynges foole
Sate by the fire upon a stoole,
As he that with his bable plaide.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 7.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.
Shaksp. Othello.

It is a paltry cap,
A custard coffin, a bawble, a silken pie. Shaksp.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and bawbles.
Government of the Tongue.

This shall be writ to fright the fry away,
Who draw their little bawbles, when they play.
Dryden.

Here is a contradiction deserves a bell and a bable.
Bp. Bramhall, Schism guarded, (1658.) p. 373.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;
'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with bawbles and seals.
Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,
Presents you now a bawble of a play,
In gingling rhyme. Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
Inherits every virtue round,
As emblems of the sovereign power;
Like other bawbles of the Tower. Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bawble.] Trifling; contemptible; a word not now in use.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprizable;
With which such scathful grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

BA'WCOCK. n. s. [perhaps from beau, or baude, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck? Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

BAWD.† n. s. [baude, old Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But here the Welsh baw, dirt, bawai, dirty, whence bawddyn, a base or dirty fellow, is derived, must not be omitted. Chaucer and our elder writers use bawdy and bawd in the sense of filthy, nasty. Hence the application to the infamous character which our word denotes. See To BAWD, and BAWDY.] A procurer, or procuress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

He [Pandarus] is named Troilus' bawd;
Of that name he is sure,
Whiles the world shall dure.
Skelton's Poems, p. 235.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.
Shakspeare.

This commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid.
Shakspeare.

Our author calls colouring lena sororis, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, she paints her, she procures for the design; and makes lovers for her. Dryden.

To BAWD.* v. a. [from bawd.] To foul; to dirty.

Her shoone smered with tallow
Gresed upon dyrt,
That baudeth her skyrt. Skelton's Poems, p. 126.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court.
Spectator, No. 266.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.
Swift.

BA'WDBORN.* part. adj. [from bawd and born.] Descended of a bawd.

Bawd is he, doubtless; and of antiquity too; bawd-born. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'WDILY. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WDINESS.† n. s. [from bawd; and defined by our old lexicographers, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, "greasiness, or filthiness, of apparel or body." V. Barret's Alv. and Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words.] We now use it only in the sense of obsceneness or lewdness.

BA'WDRICK. n. s. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

Fresh garlands too, the virgins temples crown'd;
The youth's gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdricks bound. Chapman's Iliad.

BA'WDRY.† n. s. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd; Dr. Johnson says; but it was formerly written and pronounced with three syllables.]

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together.
Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world.
L'Estrange.

2. Obscenity; unchaste language.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry,
Teaching experimental bawdery.
Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 9.

Pr'ythee say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I have no salt: no bawdry he doth mean:
For witty, in his language, is obscene.
Ben Jonson.

It is most certain, that barefaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BAWDY.† adj. [from bawd.]

1. Filthy; dirty; agreeably to its derivation. See BAWD.

His overest sloppe it is not worth a mite
As in effect to him, so mote I go;
It is all baudy, and to-tore also.
Why is thy lord so sluttish, I thee preye,
And is of power better cloth to beye?
Chaucer, Chan. Yeoman's Prol.

And in a tawny tabard, of twelve winter age,
All torn and baudye. Vision of Piers Plowman.

2. Obscene; unchaste: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear't. Shakspeare, Othello.

Only they,
That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;
For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

BA'WDY-HOUSE. n. s. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the pope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin? Dennis.

To BAWL.† v. n. [balo, Lat. according to Dr. Johnson. It has probably been adopted by us from the old Fr. baula, to cry for help. Similar also is the Icelandick baela, baula, and the Germ. bellen, to roar.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
And still revolt, when truth would set them free.
Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,
And bawl the bishops out of door. Hudibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,
And shakes the statues on their pedestals. Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw;
The senate's mad decrees he never saw;
Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law. Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace
And bawling infamy, in language base,
Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place. Dryden, Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue
The list'ning nymphs, and ravish'd heroes hung;
But citts and fops the heav'n-born musick blame,
And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame.
Smith.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and a woman chiding it. L'Estrange.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery. Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise.
Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me, when I saw labours which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers,
Swift.

BA'WLER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who bawls. Kersey.

It had been much better for such an imprudent and ridiculous bawler, as this, to have been condemned to have cried oysters and brooms!
Echard, Grounds, &c. of the Contempt of the Clergy, 10th ed. p. 69.

To BAWM, or BAWN.* v. a. To adorn; to dress. Used in Westmoreland and Cheshire. I know not the etymology.

BAWN.* n. s. In Ireland, a bawn is said to be a place near the house, inclosed with mud or stone-walls, to keep the cattle from being stolen in the night. See the note on Swift's poem "whether Hamilton's bawn should be turned into a barrack or a malt-house." But originally, it seems to be an inclosure of a different kind; a fortification.

These round hills and square bawnes, which you see so strongly trenched and throwne up, were (they say) at first ordained for the same purpose, that people might assemble themselves therein, and therefore aunciently they were called folkmotes, that is, a place of people, to meete, or talke of any thing that concerned any difference betweene parties and towneships. Spenser on Ireland.

BA'WREL. n. s. A kind of hawk.

BA'WSIN.† n. s. In old English, a badger. In the passage of Drayton, which I cite for the illustration of this word, the late Bishop Percy preferred the interpretation of bazane, Fr., meaning sheep's leather, dressed and coloured red. But there can be no occasion to alter the meaning of badger's skin; which certainly was in use for apparel, as appears in our translation of the Bible. Ezek. xvi. 10. "I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badger's-skin."] A badger. Dict.

His mittens were of bauzen skinne.
Drayton's Dowsabell, (1593.) st. 10.

Why scorn you me?
Because I am a herdsman, and feed swine!—

I am a lord of other geer! this fine
Smooth bawson's cub, the young grice of a gray.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

2. Applied to a large or fat person by Coles; to an imperious, noisy fellow, (as still in use) by the ingenious editor B of the Craven Dialect, 1824.

AY.† adj. [badius, Lat. baye, bai, rouge-brun, old Fr. baio, Ital.] A bay horse is what is inclining to a chesnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people. All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes. There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chesnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chesnut.
Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakspeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shaksp.

His colour'd grey,
For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryden.

BAY.† n. s. [baye, Dutch, according to Dr. Johnson; but it is rather from the Sax. bygan, to bend; a bay being incurvated, as it were, like a bow.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay. Shakspeare.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea. Bacon.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay
I view the world's tempestuous sea. Roscommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep.
Dryden.

Some of you have bay. Dryden.

2. A pen or pond-head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. s. [abboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abbois, Boileau: Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from abboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship for fifteen hours, sate like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships.
Bacon, War with Spain.

Fair liberty, pursu'd and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd and stood at bay.
Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;
Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears.
Dryden.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;
And, with a storm of darts, to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who held at bay, from far
On his Vulcanian orb, sustain'd the war. Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at bay. Swift.

BAY.† n. s. [Germ. bau.]

1. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors, from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

2. In building also, used to signify any kind of opening in walls; as a door, window, or even chimney. Chambers.

BAY Tree.† [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree.
Psalm xxxvii. 35.

Like thunder 'gainst the bay,
Whose lightning may enclose but never stay
Upon his charmed branches.
Fletcher, Faith. Shepherdess.

BAY.† n. s.

1. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

I — play'd to please myself, on rustick reed,
Nor sought for bay, the learned shepherd's meed.
Browne, Brit. Past. i. 1.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays.
Pope.

2. Figuratively, learning itself.

Strife arose betwixt them, whether they
Her beauty should extol, or she admire their bay.
Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 15.

To BAY. v. n. [abboyer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay.
Spenser, F. Q.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid;
She rent the heaven with loud laments, imploring aid. Dryden, Fab.

2. To encompass about; to shut in. [from bay, an inclosed place.]

We are at the stake.
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakspeare.

To BAY.† v. a. To follow with barking; to bark at.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta. Shakspeare.

If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch
Baying him at the heels. Shakspeare.

He hath set forth the book again, with all the authorities at large in the margent, in the author's own words, and hath answered all those that bayed at it. Bp. Bedell, Letters, &c. p. 387.

BAY Salt.† [Bay salt, according to Butler in his Eng. Grammar of 1633, derives its name from Bayonne in France.] Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. By letting the sea water into square pits or basons, its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days.
Chambers.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window.† A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room; or from its resemblance to a bay or opening into the land, which is generally of a circular form. Such windows are, in our old dictionaries, translated into the Latin cavæ fenestræ.

It hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes.
Shakspeare.

BAY Yarn. A denomination sometimes used promiscuously with woollen yarn.
Chambers.

BA'YARD.† n. s. [from the old Fr. bayart, bayarde; "whence we term a bay horse, a bayard." Cotgrave.

1. A bay horse in general; and in particular a noted blind horse in the old romances, whence perhaps the proverbial expression, "as bold as blind bayard."

Who so bold as blind bayard?
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 382.

Never was there any bayard more bold in his leap, than this suggester hath been lavish in his asseveration. Bp. Morton, Discharge, p. 76.

This he presumes to do, being a bayard, who never had the soul to know what conversing means, but as his provender and the familiarity of the kitchen schooled his conceptions. Milton, Colaster.

2. A man that gapes or gazes earnestly at a thing; a fly-cather; an unmannerly beholder. [Fr. bayard, Cotgrave.]

How now, what mates, what bayards have we here? B. Jonson, Alchemist.

BAY'ARDLY.* adj. [from bayard.] Blind, stupid.

A blind credulity, a bayardly confidence, or an imperious insolence.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 143.

True and manly religion is no cold and comfortless thing; it is not a luke-warm notionality; not a formal and bayardly round of duties; but is lively, vigorous, and sparkling.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 3.

BA'YED.* adj. Having bays. See BAY in architecture.

The yearly birth
The large-bay'd barn doth fill.
Drayton, Polyolb. Song 3.

BA'YONET.† n. s. [bayonette, Fr. Voltaire says that this instrument came from Bayonne, and he ascribes the invention of it to the "demon de la guerre,"

Henriade, c. 8.] A short sword or dagger fixed at the end of a musket, by which the foot hold off the horse. This was not its former use or fashion; for Cotgrave describes it as "a kind of small flat pocket dagger, furnished with knives; or a great knife to hang at the girdle, like a dagger."

One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles a dagger or bayonet. Woodward.

To BA'YONET.* v. a. [from the noun.] To drive forward as with the point of the bayonet.

You send troops to sabre and bayonet us into submission. Burke.

BAYZE. See BAIZE.

BAZA'R.* n. s. [Persian buzzar, the market; now written bazar, in the commercial language of the East Indies.] A constant market; a kind of covered market-place.

This noble city [Cashan] is in compass not less than York or Norwich, about four thousand families being accounted in her. The houses are fairly built—the buzzar is spacious and uniform, furnished with silks, damasks, and carpets of silk.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (ed. 1677.) p. 223.

BDE'LLIUM. n. s. [βδελλιον: ברלח.] An aromatick gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine, and a perfume. Bdellium is mentioned both by the ancient naturalists and in Scripture; but it is doubtful whether any of these be the same with the modern kind. Chambers.

This bdellium is a tree of the bigness of an olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also bdellium. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdellium. Ralegh.

To BE. v. n. [This word is so remarkably irregular, that it is necessary to set down many of its terminations.

Present. I am, thou art, he is, we are, &c.
eom, eapt, ıʃ, apon, Sax.
Preter. I was, thou wast or wert, he was, we were, &c.
pæʃ, pæpe, paʃ, pæpon, Sax.
The conjunctive mood.
I be, thou beest, he be, we be, &c.
beo, bıpt, beo, beon, Sax.]

1. To have some certain state, condition, quality, or accident; as, the man is wise.

Seventy senators died
By their prescriptions, Cicero being one. Shaks.
He hath to-night been in unusual pleasure. Shakspeare.
Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art,
Resign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shaks.
Be but about
To say she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will add thereto,
'Tis pity she is not honest, honourable. Shaks.
Let them shew the former things what they be, that we may consider them. Isaiah, xli. 22.
Therefore be sure,
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure. Milton.

It is not easy to discern what such men would be at. Stillingfleet.

To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has the clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.

2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakspeare.

3. To exist; to have existence.

The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die. Shakspeare.
Here cease, ye pow'rs, and let your vengeance end,
Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryd.
All th' impossibilities which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be. Rowe.
To be contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire. Pope.

4. To have something by appointment or rule.

If all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.

5. Let BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.

Let be, said he, my prey. Dryden.

BE.* Used, in our language, for the preposition by, and also for the participle been.

BE.* Much used in composition; as, bespeak, befall, become; which is agreeable to the Saxon manner, be, as well as ꝑop, a, and ꝺo, being often prefixed to Saxon words, especially verbs and participles of the past time.

BE-ALL.* n. s. [from be and all.] All that is to be done.

If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here.
Shakspeare, Macb. i. 7.

BEACH.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. Serenius gives the Goth. backar, signifying the same as beach.] The shore; particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice. Shakspeare, K. L.
Deep to the rocks of hell, the gather'd beach
They fastened, and the mole immense wrought on,
Over the foaming deep. Milton, P. L.
They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed. Woodward.

BE'ACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakspeare.

BE'ACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.

The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shakspeare.

BE'ACON. n. s. [beacen, Sax. from becn, a signal, and becnian, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields,
Send forth their flames. Spenser, F. Q.
Modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise. Shakspeare.
The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon,
No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sand-banks.

To BE'ACON.* v. a. [from the noun.] To light up.

We have looked so long upon the blaze that Zuinglius and Calvin have beaconed up to us, that we are stark blind. Milton, Areopagitica.

BE'ACONAGE.* n. s. Money paid for the maintaining of beacons. Minsheu.

A suit for beaconage of a beacon standing on a rock in the sea may be brought in the court of admiralty. Blackstone.

BE'ACONED.* adj. [from beacon.] Having a beacon.

O'er the broad downs, a novel race,
Frisk the lambs with faltering pace,
And with eager bleatings fill
The foss that skirts the beacon'd hill.
T. Warton, Ode x.

BEAD.† n. s. [bebe, prayer, Saxon, from the Goth. bida.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer, Dr. Johnson says: but the old expression, which also continued long in use, was to bid their beads. And the primary meaning of bead, i. e. prayer, is noted in our oldest dictionaries, without any reference to the balls of glass.

Beware therefore, and bid thy bede,
And do nothyng in holy churche,
But that thou might by reason worche.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 5.

Saying over a number of beads not understanded or minded on. Injunctions to the Clergy, (1541.)
That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads.
Spenser, F. Q.
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With every bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knavery.
Shakspeare.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow.
Shakspeare.

Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Boyle.

BEAD Tree. [azedarach.] A plant.

BE'ADLE.† n. s. [bydel, bædel, Sax. a messenger; badel, old Fr. bedel, Sp. bedela, Basque; bedelle, Dutch. Often written bedel.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court, or publick body. In the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge they are academical officers, and are distinguished as equire and yeomen beadles.

If the university would bring in some bachelors of art to be yeomen-bedels, which are well grounded, and towardly to serve that press as composers; —they, which thrived well and did good service, might after be preferred to be esquire-bedels; and so that press would ever train up able men for itself. Abp. Laud. Hist. of his Chan. at Ox. p. 132.

He procured an addition of 20*l.* per annum to each of the inferiour beadles; he restored the practice of the vice chancellor's court; and added several other improvements in the academical economy. Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 89.

2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:
Why dost thou lash that whore? Shakspeare.

They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Spect.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

BE'ADLESHIP.* n. s. [from beadle.] The office of a beadle.

There was convocation for the election of his successor in the beadleship.
A. Wood, Ath. Ox. Fast. ii. 272.

BE'ADROLL.† n. s. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers; a list, simply.

The king for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies.
Bacon, Henry VII.

So, in the high descent of that South-Saxon king,
We, in the bead-roll here of our religious, bring
Wise Ethelwald. Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 11.

[He] left me out of the bead-roll of some rimming paper-blotters that he called poets.
Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 168.

Through what fairy land, would the man deduce this perpetual beadroll of uncontradicted episcopacy? Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BE'ADSMAN. n. s. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another

An holy hospital,
In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heaven's King.
Spenser, F. Q.

In thy danger
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine. Shakspeare.

BE'ADSWOMAN.* n. s. [from bead and woman.] A woman who prays for, or thanks, another.

'Twas such a bounty
And honour due to your beadswoman,
I know not how to owe it, but to thank you.
B. Jonson, Sad Shep. ii. 6.

BE'AGLE. n. s. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen. Dryden, Fables.

To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.

BEAK.† n. s. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh; beg, Bret. beik, beck, Dutch.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.

His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton, P. R.

The magpie, lighting on the stock,
Stood chatt'ring with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient gallies, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the fore-part of a ship.

With boiling pitch another, near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shakes them from the rising beak in drops.
Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the fore-part of the hoof.
Farrier's Dict.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BE'AKED.† adj. [Fr. becqué. A term also in heraldry.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

And question'd every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory.
Milton.

BE'AKER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson derives this word from beak; and defines it, "a cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak." Both his etymology and definition are incorrect. Our word is the Germ. becher, a cup; Ital. bicchiere; low Lat. baccharium, fancifully derived from Bacchus. V. Du Cange. Bicker, in the Northumb. dialect, is a quart vessel, about two inches and a half deep, made with small staves or hoops.] A vessel for drink; a flagon.

And into pikes and musqueteers,
Stampt beakers, cups and porringers.
Butler, Hudibras.

With dulcet beverage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around.
Pope, Odyssey.

BEAL.† n. s. [bolga, Goth. bolla, Ital.] A whelk or pimple.

To BEAL.† v. a. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does. Sherwood.

BEAM.† n. s. [bagme, Su.-Goth. beam, Sax. a tree. "Baam, item bahm, priscis Germanis notabat arborem: Gothi dicebant bahme. Vid. Jun. p. 77." Lo-esch. Lit. Celt. p. 82.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the teazel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.

He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryden.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find.
Dryden, Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Shakspeare.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam.
Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer.
Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam.
1 Sam. xvii. 7.

7. BEAM of an Anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

8. BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

9. [runnebeam, Sax. a ray of the sun.] The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye. Thus in the old Prompt. Parv. we have "candell-beme."

Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of sight. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam.
Dryden.

As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour.
Pope.

To BEAM.† v. n. [Sax. beamian.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires. Pope.

To BEAM.* v. a. To shoot forth; to emit.

This being admitted, that God beams this light into man's understanding. South, Serm. vol. i. S. 8.

BEAM Tree. A species of wild service.

BE'AMLESS.* adj. [from beam and less.] Yielding no ray of light.

No sun to cheer us, but a bloody globe,
That rolls above, a bald and beamless fire.
Dryden and Lee, Œdipus.

The ghastly form,
The lip pale-quivering, and the beamless eye.
Thomson, Summer, v. 1045.

BE'AMY.† adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.
Who is there that cannot trace Thee now in thy beamy walk through the midst of thy sanctuary, amidst those golden candlesticks, which have long suffered a dimness amongst us through the violence of those that had seized them?
Milton, Animadv. on the Remonstr. Defence.
Each of whose eyes, like a bright beamy shield,
Conquers, without blows, the contentious.
Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maid.
Ope, aged Atlas, open then thy lap,
And from thy beamy bosom strike a light.
B. Jonson, Masques.
All-seeing sun!
Hide, hide in shameful night, thy beamy head.
Smith.

2. Having the weight or massiness of a beam.
His double-biting axe, and beamy spear;
Each asking a gigantick force to rear. Dry. Fables.

3. Having horns or antlers.
Rouse from their desert dens the bristled rage
Of boars, and beamy stags in toils engage.
Dryden, Virgil.

BEAN.† n. s. [Sax. bean.]
The species are, 1. The common garden bean. 2. The horse bean. There are several varieties of the garden beans, differing either in colour or size. The principal sorts which are cultivated in England, are the Mazagan, the small Lisbon, the Spanish, the Tokay, the Sandwich, and Windsor beans. The Mazagan bean is brought from a settlement of the Portuguese on the coast of Africa, of the same name; and is by far the best sort to plant for an early crop. Miller.
His allowance of oats and beans for his horse was greater than his journey required. Swift.

BEAN Caper. [fabago.] A plant.

BEAN Tressel. An herb.

BE'ANFED.* part. adj. [from bean and feed.] Fed with beans.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a silly foal.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. D.

To BEAR.† v. a. pret. I bore, or bare; part. pass. bore, or born, or borne.] It is sounded as bare, as the are in care and dare. Dr. Johnson notices the Sax. beopan, bepan, and the Goth. bairan. But the word has been traced to the Celt. bar, and in two of its most important significations. "Bar, a longo, antiquissimo usu duo notat; primo tollere aut elevare. Gothi dicebant more suo bairan, ferre, portare; quod Anglo-Saxones dicebant baran, [beran:] Islandi hodie aiunt bera, bari, &c. Hinc est Germanicum bahre, instrumentum portandi. Conspirat Græcum φέρειν, et Latinum ferre. Secundo notat fructificare, gignere, imo et parere: sic Saxones usurpabant vocabulum bairan. Vid. Somn. ad Gloss. Lips. In eodem libello, p. 10. occurrit Francica vox barida, fructum ferens: onbärend Othfrido est non pariens; unbarig Villeramo est sterilis. Hinc est Germ. gebähren, cum cognatis. Conspirat Latinum vocabulum parere." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 85.]

1. This is a word used with such latitude that it is not easily explained.
We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses. Watts.

2. To carry as a burden.
They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him, and set him in his place. Isaiah, xlvi. 7.
And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens. 1 Kings, v. 15.
As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings.
Deuteronomy, xxxii. 11.
We see some, who, we think, have borne less of the burden, rewarded above ourselves.
Decay of Piety.

3. To convey or carry.
My message to the ghost of Priam bear;
Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there.
Dryden, Æneid.
A guest like him, a Trojan guest before,
In shew of friendship, sought the Spartan shore,
And ravish'd Helen from her husband bore. Garth.

4. To carry as a mark of authority.
I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear.
Shakspeare.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.
He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the universe in its full system. Hale.
His pious brother, sure the best
Who ever bore that name. Dryden.
The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears,
She sees, and sudden every limb she smears;
Then each of savage beasts the figure bears. Garth.
His supreme spirit of mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite. Cheyne.
So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

6. To carry as in show.
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under't. Shakspeare.

7. To carry as in trust.
He was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein. John.

8. To support; to keep from falling: frequently with up.
Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for barbarism to enter. Hooker.
And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up. Judges.
A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them. Addison.
Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. Addison.

9. To keep afloat; to keep from sinking; sometimes with up.
The waters encreased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. Genesis.

10. To support with proportionate strength.
Animals that use a great deal of labour and exercise, have their solid parts more elastick and strong; they can bear, and ought to have stronger food. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

11. To carry in the mind, as love, hate.
How did the open multitude reveal

29. To impel; to urge; to push: with some particle noting the direction of the impulse; as, down, on, back, forward.

The residue were so disordered as they could not conveniently fight or fly, and not only justled and bore down one another, but, in their confused tumbling back, brake a part of the avant guard,
Sir J. Hayward.

Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him. Shakspeare.

Their broken oars, and floating planks, withstand
Their passage, while they labour to the land;
And ebbing tides bear back upon th' uncertain sand.
Dryden.

Now with a noiseless gentle course,
It keeps within the middle bed;
Anon it lifts aloft the head,
And bears down all before it with impetuous force.
Dryden.

Truth is borne down, attestations neglected, the testimony of sober persons despised. Swift.

The hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would soon bear down all considerations, and be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.

30. To conduct; to manage.

My hope is
So to bear through, and out, the consulship,
As spite shall ne'er wound you, though it may me.
B. Jonson.

31. To press.

Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus.
Shakspeare.

Though he bear me hard,
I yet must do him right. B. Jonson.

These men bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her windings.
Addison.

Sir J. Hayward.

Quoth Sidrophel I do not doubt
To find friends that will bear me out. Hudibras.

Company only can bear a man out in an ill thing.
South.

I doubted whether that occasion could bear me out in the confidence of giving your ladyship any farther trouble. Temple.

To BEAR. v. n.

1. To suffer pain.

Stranger, cease thy care;
Wise is the soul; but man is born to bear:
Jove weighs affairs of earth in dubious scales,
And the good suffers while the bad prevails. Pope.

They bore as heroes, but they felt as man. Pope.

2. To be patient.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;
Perish this impious, this detested son! Dryden.

3. To be fruitful or prolifick.

A fruit tree hath been blown up almost by the roots, and set up again, and the next year bear exceedingly. Bacon.

Betwixt two seasons comes th' auspicious air,
This age to blossom, and the next to bear.
Dryden.

Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And, strangers to the sun, yet ripen here.
Glanville.

4. To take effect; to succeed.

Having pawned a full suit of cloaths, for a sum of money, which, my operator assured me, was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear. Guardian.

5. To act in any character.

Instruct me
How I may formally in person bear,
Like a true friar. Shakspeare.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point: with a particle to determine the meaning, as up, away, onward.

The oily drops swimming on the spirit of wine, moved restlessly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body, and then falling off, and continuing to shift places. Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away. Dryden.

Whose navy like a stiff-stretched cord did shew,
Till he bore in, and bent them into flight. Dryden.

On this the hero fix'd an oak in sight,
The mark to guide the mariners aright:
To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,
Then round the rock they steer and seek the former shores. Dryden.

In a convex mirrour, we view the figures of all other things, which bear out with more life or strength than nature itself. Dryden.

7. To act as an impellent, opponent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd by a mighty rock,
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpless ship was splitted in the midst. Shaks.

Upon the tops of mountains, the air which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed.
Boyle.

The sides bearing one against the other, they could not lie so close at the bottoms. Burnet.

As a lion bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sideling to seize. Dryden.

Because the operations to be performed by the teeth, require a considerable strength in the instruments which move the lower jaw, nature hath provided this with strong muscles, to make it bear forcibly against the upper jaw. Ray.

The weight of the body doth bear most upon the knee joints, it raising itself up, and most upon the muscles of the thighs, in coming down.
Wilkins.

The waves of the sea bear violently and rapidly upon some shores the waters being pent up by the land. Broome.

10. To bear up. To stand firm without falling; not to sink; not to faint or fail.

So long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Shakspeare.

Persons in distress may speak of themselves with dignity; it shews a greatness of soul, that they bear up against the storms of fortune. Broome.

The consciousness of integrity, the sense of a life spent in doing good, will enable a man to bear up under any change of circumstances. Atterbury.

When our commanders and soldiers were raw and unexperienced, we lost battles and towns; yet we bore up then, as the French do now; nor was there any thing decisive in their successes. Swift.

11. To bear with. To endure an unpleasing thing.

They are content to bear with my absence and folly. Sidney.

Though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie deadly, that tell you, you have good faces. Shaks.

Look you lay home to him;
Tell him his pranks have been broad to bear with.
Shakspeare.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Milton.

BEAR.† n. s. [beꝑa, Saxon, baer, Germ.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me. ——
— Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shaks.
Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay tow'rd the raging sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. Shakspeare.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole-star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,
The bear oppos'd to bright Orion shone. Creech.

3. A word, still in use, to denote a certain description of stock-jobbers.

He who sells that, of which he is not possessed, is proverbially said to sell the skin before he has caught the bear. It was the practice of stock-jobbers, in the year 1720, to enter into a contract for transferring South Sea stock at a future time for a certain price; but he who contracted to sell, had frequently no stock to transfer; nor did he who bought, intend to receive any in consequence of his bargain: the seller was therefore called a bear, in allusion to the proverb; and the buyer a bull, perhaps only as a similar distinction. The contract was merely a wager, to be determined by the rise or fall of stock; if it rose, the seller paid the difference to the buyer, proportioned to the sum determined by the same computation to the seller. Dr. Warton on Pope.

BEAR-BAITING.* n. s. [from bear and bait.] The sport of baiting bears with dogs. See To BAIT.

He haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.
Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

Let's have a bear-baiting; ye shall see me play
The rarest for a single dog.
Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.

He [lord Downe] entertained the king [James I.] with the fashionable and courtly diversions of hawking and bear-baiting.
Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 438.

They spent their time (1215) in tournaments and bear-baitings, and other diversions suited to the fierce rusticity of their manners.
Burke, Abridge. Eng. Hist. iii. 8.

1. The hair that grows on the lips and chin.

Ere on thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.
Prior.

2. Beard is used for the face; as, to do any thing to a man's beard, is to do it in defiance, or to his face.

Rail'd at their covenant, and jeer'd
Their rev'rend persons to my beard. Hudibras.

3. Beard is used to mark age or virility; as, he has a long beard, means he is old.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of his grey beard. Shakspeare.
Some thin remains of chastity appear'd,
Ev'n under Jove, but Jove without a beard.
Dryden.

Would it not be insufferable for a professor to have his authority, of forty years standing, confirmed by general tradition, and a reverend beard overturned by an upstart novelist? Locke.

4. Sharp prickles growing upon the ears of corn.

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn
Hath rotted ere its youth attained a beard. Shaksp.

L'Estrange.

5. A barb on an arrow.

6. The beard or chuck of a horse, is that part which bears the curb of the bridle.
Farrier's Dict.

To BEARD.† v. a. [from beard.]

1. To take or pluck by the beard, in contempt or anger.

No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will beard him. Shakspeare.

2. To oppose to the face; to set at open defiance: adopted, according to Mr. Steevens, from romance; in the old language of which it signified, to cut off the beard.

He, whensoever he should swerve from duty, may be able to beard him. Spenser.
I have been bearded by boys. More.
The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

Think every bearded fellow that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakspeare.
Old prophecies foretell our fall at hand,
When bearded men in floating castles land.
Dryden.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field
Of Ceres ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind
Sways them. Milton.
The fierce virago
Flew o'er the field, nor hurt the bearded grain.
Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou shouldst have pull'd the secret from my breast,
Torn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryd.

BE'ARDLESS.† adj. [Sax. beaꝛbleaꝛ.]

1. Without a beard.

There are some coins of Cunobelin, king of Essex and Middlesex, with a beardless image, inscribed Cunobelin. Camden.

2. Youthful.

And, as young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout.
Dryden.

BE'ARER.† n. s. [from To bear.]

1. A carrier of any thing, who conveys any thing from one place or person to another.

He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving time allowed. Shakspeare.
Forgive the bearer of unhappy news;
Your alter'd father openly pursues
Your ruin. Dryden.
No gentleman sends a servant with a message, without endeavouring to put it into terms brought down to the capacity of the bearer. Swift.

2. One employed in carrying burthens.

And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens. 2 Chronicles.

3. One who wears any thing.

O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakspeare.

4. One who carries the body to the grave.

Nay, quoth he, on his swooning bed outstretch'd,
If I mayn't carry, sure I'll ne'er be fetch'd,
But vow, though the cross doctors all stood hearers,
For one carrier put down, to make six bearers.
Milton, Epit. on Hobson the Carrier, ii.

The King's body being by the bearers set down near the place of burial.
Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I.

5. A tree that yields its produce.

To BEAT.† v. a. pret. beat; part pass. beat, or beaten. [battre, Fr. beacan, Sax. bata, antiq. S. Goth.]

1. To strike; to knock; to lay blows upon.

So fight I, not as one that beateth the air.
1 Corinthians.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair;
He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair. Dryd.

2. To punish with stripes or blows.

They've chose a consul that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are often beat for barking. Shaksp.

Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.
Shakspeare.

There is but one fault for which children should be beaten; and that is obstinacy or rebellion. Locke.

3. To strike an instrument of musick.

Bid them come forth and hear,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry, sleep to death. Shakspeare.

4. To break; to bruise; to spread; to comminute by blows.

The people gathered manna, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it. Numb.

They did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it. Exodus.

They save the laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axletree of the main wheel of their corn mills longer than ordinary, and placing of pins in them, to raise large hammers like those used for paper and fulling mills, with which they beat most of their hemp. Mortimer.

Nestor furnished the gold, and he beat it into leaves, so that he had occasion to use his anville and hammer. Broome.

5. To strike bushes or ground, or make a motion to rouse game.

It is strange how long some men will lie in wait to speak, and how many other matters they will beat over to come near it. Bacon.

When from the cave thou risest with the day
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey.
Prior.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope.

6. To thresh; to drive the corn out of the husk.

She gleaned in the field, and beat out that she had gleaned. Ruth, ii. 17.

7. To mix things by long and frequent agitation.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it into white curds.
Boy

8. To batter with engines of war.

And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the city. Judges, viii. 17.

9. To dash as water, or brush as wind.

Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild; beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail. Milton.

With tempests beat, and to the winds a scorn.
Roscommon.

While winds and storms his lofty forehead beat,
The common fate of all that's high or great.
Denham.

As when a lion in the midnight hours,
Beat by rude blasts, and wet with wintry show'rs,
Descends terrifick from the mountain's brow.
Pope.

10. To tread a path.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.

11. To make a path by marking it with tracks.

He that will know the truth of things, must leave the common and beaten track. Locke.

12. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.

If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? The greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakspeare.

You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Shakspeare.

Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee, so often hast thou beat me.
Shakspeare.

I have discern'd the foe securely lie,
Too proud to fear a beaten enemy. Dryden.

The common people of Lucca are firmly persuaded, that one Lucquese can beat five Florentines. Addison.

Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, joining his ships to those of the Syracusans, beat the Carthaginians at sea. Arbuthnot.

13. To harass; to over-labour.

It is no point of wisdom for a man to beat his brains, and spend his spirits about things impossible. Hakewill.

And as in prisons mean rogues beat
Hemp, for the service of the great;
So Whacum beat his dirty brains
T' advance his master's fame and gains. Hudibras.

Why any one should waste his time, and beat his head about the Latin grammar, who does not intend to be a critick. Locke.

14. To lay, or press, as standing corn by hard weather.

Her own shall bless her;
Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow. Shakspeare.

15. To depress; to crush by repeated opposition: usually with the particle down.

Albeit a pardon was proclaimed, touching any speech tending to treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with that severity, or with this lenity be abated. Hayward.

Our warriours propagating the French language, at the same time they are beating down their power. Addison.

Such an unlook'd for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. Addison.

16. To drive by violence; with a particle.

Twice have I sally'd, and was twice beat back.
Dryden.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and, as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton, P. L. xi. 446.

He that proceeds upon other principles in his inquiry, does at least post himself in a party, which he will not quit, till he be beaten out. Locke.

He cannot beat it out of his head, but that it was a cardinal who picked his pocket. Addison.

As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound.
Milton, P. R. iv. 17.

The younger part of mankind might be beat off from the belief of the most important points even of natural religion, by the impudent jests of a profane wit. Watts.

17. To move with fluttering agitation.

Thrice have I beat the wing, and rid with night
About the world. Dryden.

18. To beat down. To endeavour by treaty to lessen the price demanded.

Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy.
Dryden.

She persuaded him to trust the renegado with the mouey he had brought over for their ransom; as not questioning but he would beat down the terms of it. Addison.

19. To beat down. To sink or lessen the value.

Usury beats down the price of land; for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandizing or purchasing; and usury way-lays both.
Bacon.

20. To beat up. To attack suddenly; to alarm.

They lay in that quiet posture, without making the least impression upon the enemy, by beating up his quarters, which might easily have been done. Clarendon.

Will fancies he should never have been the man he is, had not he knocked down constables, and beat up a lewd woman's quarters, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

21. To beat the hoof. To walk; to go on foot.

22. To beat into. To repeat often. This is now rather a vulgarism, but was not so formerly. "To beat into men's minds with often repetition: inculcare animis." Barret.

To BEAT.† v. n.

1. To move in a pulsatory manner.

I would gladly understand the formation of a soul, and see it beat the first conscious pulse.
Collier.

2. To dash as a flood or storm.

Publick envy seemeth to beat chiefly upon ministers. Bacon.

Your brow, which does no fear of thunder know,
Sees rowling tempests vainly beat below. Dryden.

One sees many hollow spaces worn in the bottoms of the rocks, as they are more or less able to resist the impressions of the water that beats against them. Addison.

3. To knock at a door.

The men of the city beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house. Judges, xix. 22.

4. To move with frequent repetitions of the same act or stroke.

No pulse shall keep
His natural progress but surcease to beat. Shaksp.

My temperate pulse does regularly beat;
Feel, and be satisfy'd. Dryden.

A man's heart beats, and the blood circulates, which it is not in his power, by any thought or volition, to stop. Locke.

5. To throb; to be in agitation, as a sore swelling.

A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind. Shakspeare.

6. To fluctuate; to be in agitation.

The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakspeare.

7. To try different ways; to search: with about.

I am always beating about in my thoughts for something that may turn to the benefit of my dear countrymen. Addison.

To find an honest man I beat about,
And love him, court him, praise him in or out.
Pope.

8. To act upon with violence.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die.
Jonah, iv. 8.

9. To speak frequently; to repeat; to enforce by repetition: with upon.

We are drawn on into a larger speech, by reason of their so great earnestness, who beat more and more upon these last alleged words. Hooker.

How frequently and fervently doth the scripture beat upon this cause? Hakewill.

10. To beat up; as, to beat up for soldiers. The word up seems redundant, but enforces the sense, the technical term being to raise soldiers.

11. To strive against the wind: a naval term.

We found it was an English ship called the President, which came from the East Indies, and had been beating (i. e. striving against the wind) above six weeks in the channel.
Randolph's State of the Islands, &c. 1687. p. 99.

BEAT. part. passive. [from the verb.]

Like a rich vessel beat by storms to shore,
'Twere madness should I venture out once more.
Dryden.

BEAT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Stroke.

2. Manner of striking.

Albeit the base and treble strings of a viol be turned to an unison; yet the former will still make a bigger sound than the latter, as making a broader beat upon the air. Grew.

He with a careless beat,
Struck out the mute creation at a heat. Dryden.

3. Manner of being struck; as, the beat of the pulse, or a drum.

4. [In hunting or fowling.] The round taken, when people beat up for game.

BE'ATEN.† particip. adj. [Sax. beaten.] Tracked.

What makes you, sir, so late abroad,
Without a guide, and this no beaten road? Dryd.

BE'ATER.† n. s. [Sax. beatepe, Fr. bateur.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together.
Moxon.

2. A person much given to blows.

The best schoolmaster of our time, was the greatest beater. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

3. [In hunting or fowling.] He that beats for game.

All the heroical glory he aspires to, is to be reputed a most potent and victorious stealer of deer, and beater up of parks. Butler's Characters.

To BEATH.* v. a. [Sax. beðian, baðian, to steep, dip, or bathe. In Suffolk and Norfolk, beathing or bathing wood by the fire, means straitening unseasoned wood by heat; and this is much the same as Spenser's meaning in the example.] To bathe or warm in fire, so as to harden.

And in his hand a tall young oake he bore,
Whose knottie snags were sharpen'd all afore,
And beath'd in fire for steele to be in sted.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 7.

BEATI'FICAL. } adj. [beatificus, low Lat.
BEATI'FICK. } from beatus, happy.] That has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful. It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring more
The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught, divine or holy else, enjoy'd
In vision beatifick. Milton, P. L.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatifick vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories that stream from the fountain of uncreated light. South.

BEATI'FICALLY. adv. [from beatifical.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

Beatifically to behold the face of God in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hakewill.

BEATIFICA'TION. n. s. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgement made by the Pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be reverenced as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

To BEA'TIFY.† v. a. [beatifico, Lat. beatifier, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying of all others. Brown.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person by a publick acknowledgement that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoe-maker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Addison.

BE'ATING.† n. s. [from beat, and Fr. batement.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again.
B. Jonson.

Do you come hither with your bottled valour,
Your windy froth, to limit out my beatings?
Beaum. and Fl. King and No King.

BEA'TITUDE.† n. s. [beatitudo, Lat. beatitude, Fr.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair?
Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind
To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?
And fly they all, at once combin'd
To shame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

*BEAU-MONDE. n. s. [Fr.] The gay world; the fashionable part of the world.

She courted the beau-monde to night,
L'assemblée her supreme delight. Prior.

His whole dress and appearance exactly resembled that of our modern beau-monde.
Student, i. 301.

BEA'VER.† n. s. [bievre, Fr. beper, beoper, Sax. fiber, Lat.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A hat of the best kind; so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the lower part of the face, as distinguished from the visor. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw,
From flaming mouth, bright sparkles fiery red.
Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shaks.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears.
Pope.

BEAU'ISH.† adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

He was led into it by a natural, beauish, trifling fancy of his own. Stephens's Abridg. of Hackett's Life of Williams, Pref. 1715.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young and beauteous.
Shakspeare.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. s. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses.
Donne, Poems, p. 84.

BEAU'TIFIER.* n. s. [from beautify.] That which beautifies or embellishes.

Semiramis, the founder of Babylon, according to Justin and Strabo; but the enlarger only and beautifier of it, according to Herodotus.
Costard, Astron. of the Ancients, P. ii. p. 102.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Ralegh.

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds.
Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice aptly lac'd,
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS.† n. s. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

The innate loveliness and beautifulness of virtue.
Hallywell, Saving of Souls, p. 115.

To BEAU'TIFY.† v. a. [obsolete, Fr. beautifier.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth; their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shaks.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Ralegh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth and beautify her face.
Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAU'TIFYING.* n. s. [from beautify.] The method or act of rendering beautiful.

All that either soberly please themselves, or civilly appear less unpleasing to others, by the help of any artificial beautifyings.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 67.

BEAU'TILESS.* adj. [from beauty and less.] Without beauty.

The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiless, reprobate in the mass.
Hammond, Sermons.

BEAU'TY. n. s. [beauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty that did haunt me in my sleep. —
If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakspeare.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight.
Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians. Arbuthnot.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd and slightly overpass'd.
Milton.

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?
Dryden.

To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish: not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word.
Shakspeare.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew.

BEAU'TY-WANING.* adj. [from beauty and wane.] Declining in beauty.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

To BEBLE'ED.* v. a. [from be and bleed; one of our oldest verbs.] To make bloody; to stain with blood.

The open war, with woundës all bebledde.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 2004.

The feast ———
All was tourned into bloud:
The dishe forthwith, the cuppe and all,
Bebled they weren over all.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

To BEBLO'OD, or BEBLO'ODY.* v. a. [from be and blood; and Teut. bebloeden.] The latter is noticed by Sherwood under bloudie; and is defined, "to imbrue with blood; to make bloody."

You will not admit, I trow, that he was so be-blooded with the blood of your sacrament god.
Sheldon, Mir. of Antich. p. 90.

To BEBLO'T.* v. a. [from be and blot; Germ. bebluten.] To stain. Obsolete.

Touching thy letter, thou art wise enough,
I wot thou n'ilte it deigncliche endite,
As make it with these argumentis tough,
Ne scriven like, or craftily it write,
Beblotte it with thy tearis eke a lite.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. ii. 1027.

BEBLU'BBERED.* part. adj. [from be and blubber.] Swoln with weeping.

A very beautiful lady did call him from a certain window, her eyes all beblubbered with tears.
Sheldon, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. iii. 13.

BECAFI'CO. n. s. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Pineda.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest;
Till becaficos sold so dev'lish dear,
To one that was, or would have been a peer.
Pope.

To BECA'LM.† v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood.
Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.]

Like a ship at hull and becalmed.
Hammond's Sermons, p. 655.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whispering airs, and the lark's matin song,
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams. Addison.

Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast;
Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east. Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to with-hold from motion.

BECA'LMING.* n. s. [from becalm.] A calm at sea.

Other unlucky accidents oft-times happen in these seas, as when (especially in becalmings) men swim in the bearing ocean.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 6.

Thou art a merchant; what tellest thou me of crosse winds, of Michaelmas flaws, of ill weathers, of tedious becalmings, of piraticall hazards.
Seasonable, Serm. p. 30.

BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE.† conjunct. [from by and cause. Formerly written bicause and by cause. It formerly also expressed the motive or end; but is not now so used, viz. "It is the case of some to contrive false periods, because they may seem men of despatch." Bacon. We now use that for this old sense. See Lowth's Gram.

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled, because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins; only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men, are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion.
Arbuthnot.

To BECHA'NCE. v. a. [from be and chance.] To befal; to happen to; a word proper, but now in little use.

My sons, God knows what has bechanced them.
Shakspeare.

All happiness bechance to thee at Milan. Shaks.

To BECHA'RM.* v. a. [from be and charm.] To captivate; to subdue by pleasure.

I am awak'd, and with clear eyes behold
The lethargy wherein my reason long
Hath been becharm'd.
Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

BE'CHICKS.† n. s. [Gr. βήχικα, of βῆξ, a cough, Fr. bechique.] Medicines proper for relieving coughs. Cotgrave.

To BECK.† v. n. [beacn, Sax. bec, Fr. head, Dr. Johnson says. But see To BECKON.] To make a sign with the head.

It becometh the king to perform the least word he hath spoken, yea, if he should only beck with his head. Homily of Prayer, P. 3.

To BECK. v. a. To call or guide, as by a motion of the head.

Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beck me to come on.
Shakspeare, K. John.

Oh, this false soul of Egypt, this gay charm,
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

BECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milt. L'Al.

2. A nod of command.

Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well-obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

BECK.* n. s. [Sax. becc, a little river; Dutch bece; Dan. beck; Germ. bach. "Bak (Celt.) prisco usu fontem et rivum notavit, unde est nostrum bach. Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.
Acts, xix. 33.

When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach. Addison.

Sudden you mount! you beckon from the skies,
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise.
Pope.

To BE'CKON. v. a. To make a sign to.

With her two crooked hands she signs did make,
And beckon'd him. Spenser, F. Q.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakspeare.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear.
Dryden.

BE'CKON.* n. s. The same as beck. [from the verb.] A sign with the head; a sign without words.

Painted in my beclouded stormy face.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Storms of tears
Becloud his eyes, which soon forc'd smiling clears.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eccl. 5. st. 15.

To BECO'ME.† v. n. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]

1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.
Gen. ii. 7.

And unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. 1 Cor. ix. 20.

A smaller pear, grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great. Bacon.

My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd,
But still rejoic'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee? Milton.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deed,
Of future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.

2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the subsequent or final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with what, either indefinite or interrogative.

What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent? Ralegh.

Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become
Of me, and all mankind? Milton.

The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering what became of all the blood which issued out of the heart. Graunt.

What will become of me then? for when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryden.

What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wise. Rogers.

3. In the following passage, the phrase, where is he become? is used for what is become of him? as Dr. Johnson says. But it is of much older authority than Shakspeare, from whom he cites his example.

Againe the day, he him withdrough
So privily, that she ne wiste
Where he become: but as hym liste,
Out of the temple he goth his way.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

Where is the antique glory now become,
That whylome wont in wemen to appeare?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 1.

I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valiant father is become. Shaks.

4. To go.

You shall have sometimes fair houses so full of glass, that one cannot tell where to become to be out of the sun. Bacon.

To BECO'ME. v. a. [from be or by, and cpemen, Sax.] To please.

1. Applied to persons, to appear in a manner suitable to something.

If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakspeare.

Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I became it not, yet it would be Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to befit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her sire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence. Spens. F. Q.

I would I had some flowers of spring that might become your time of day; and your's, and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing. Shakspeare.

Yet be sad, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you.
Shakspeare.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgement, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaks.

Wicherly was of my opinion, or rather, I of his: for it becomes me so to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden.

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillingfleet.

BECO'MING. particip. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the particle of; but generally without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what, in faces.
Suckling.

Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryden.

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;
I've well deserv'd, nor will he now refuse. Dryd.

Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is constrained in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness. Locke.

BECO'MING. n. s. [from become.] Ornament. A word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,
Since my becomings kill me, when they not
Eye well to you. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BECO'MINGLY.† adv. [from becoming.] After a becoming or proper manner.

So truly and becomingly religious.
More, Conj. Cabb. Dedication.

That she may be not only commendable for the innocent purity of her heart, but unblamable for the elegancy and decency of her hand; which useth thee, as all things, not only lawfully, but expediently, piously, and prudently, conscientiously, and becomingly.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 74.

BECO'MINGNESS.† n. s. [from becoming. See To BECOME.] Decency; elegant congruity; propriety.

There is a natural bravery, excellency, and becomingness, in some actions, and there is a baseness and filthiness in others, whether we will or not. Hallywell's Discourses, p. 127.

Nor is the majesty of the divine government greater in its extent, than the becomingness hereof is in its manner and form. Grew.

Let us live with the utmost regard to that beauty and becomingness of virtue, which will make the conduct of a good Christian lovely in the eyes of all that behold it. Delany, Christmas Sermon.

To BECRI'PPLE.* v. a. [from cripple.] To make lame.

Those whom you bedwarf and becripple by your poisonous medicines.
More, Myst. of Godl. 1660. p. 277.

To BECU'RL.* v. a. [from be and curl.] A ludicrous word.

Is the beau compelled against his will to practise winning airs before the glass, or employ for whole hours all the thought withinside his noddle to bepowder and becurl the outside.
Search's Freewill, Foreknowledge, and Fate, p. 98.

BED.† n. s. [beð, Sax. badi, Goth. bedde, Dutch.]

1. Something made to sleep on.

Lying not erect, but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is in the posture of the body, is the more wholesome. Bacon.

Rigour now is gone to bed,
And Advice with scrupulous head. Milton.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining oziers fenc'd, and moss their beds.
Dryden.

2. Lodging; the convenience of a place to sleep in.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me, raiment, bed, and food.
Shakspeare.

3. Marriage.

George, the eldest son of this second bed, was, after the death of his father, by the singular care and affection of his mother, well brought up.
Clarendon.

4. Bank of earth raised in a garden, Dr. Johnson says; but here bed, it should be added, is the participle of the Sax. beddian, to spread.

Herbs will be tenderer and fairer, if you take them out of beds, when they are newly come up, and remove them into pots, with better earth.
Bacon.

5. The channel of a river, or any hollow.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad, and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is supposed to be the bed of the Tiber. We may be sure, when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, that they would take care to bestow such of their riches that way, as could best bear the water. Addison.

6. The place where any thing is generated, or reposited.

See hoary Albula's infected tide
O'er the warm bed of smoaking sulphur glide.
Addison.

7. A layer; a stratum; a body spread over another.

I see no reason, but the surface of the land should be as regular as that of the water, in the first production of it; and the strata, or beds within, lie as even. Burnet.

8. To bring to BED. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the particle of; as, she was brought to bed of a daughter.

Ten months after Florimel happen'd to wed,
And was brought in a laudable manner to bed.
Prior.

9. To make the BED. To put the bed in order after it has been used.

To BEDA'BBLE. v. a. [from dabble.] To wet; to besprinkle. It is generally applied to persons, in a sense including inconvenience.

Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briars,
I can no further crawl, no further go. Shaks.

To BEDA'FF.* v. a. [One of our oldest verbs, from daff, a fool; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is the Sax. dapre. The Icelandick dauf or daufi is certainly a stupid person; to which our word may be referred. Chaucer ranks a cockney and a daff together. "When this jape is told another day, I shall be holden a daffe or a cokenay," Reve's Tale. The word daff is yet used as a verb, meaning to daunt, in the north of England; and a daft fellow is a blockish or daunted fellow. It is to be observed that Urry, in the example of this old verb which I cite from Chaucer, reads adassid; but Mr. Tyrwhitt, from the best manuscripts, bedaffed.] To make a fool of.

Be not bedaffed for your innocence.
Clerk's Tale, ad fin.

To BEDA'GGLE.† v. a. [from daggle.] To bemire; to soil cloaths, by letting them reach the dirt in walking. Minsheu.

Headley, Parody of Gray's Elegy.

BE'DLAM.† n. s. [corrupted from Bethlehem, the name of a religious house in London, converted afterwards into an hospital for the mad and lunatick.]

1. A madhouse; a place appointed for the cure of lunacy; madness itself.

They should have provided—an hundrd bedlams to entertain pious, zealous, and outrageous puritans, who have lost their wits and senses. Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege, ch. 6.

Fiery wits love to see all in confusion and combustion, and think nothing eloquent or handsome but what is minted in the bedlam of their rages. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, 1653, p. 258.

2. A madman; a lunatick, an inhabitant of bedlam.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing. Shakspeare.

Bude stoutly withstood the foresaid Beda, proving him forthwith to be but a bedlam. World of Wonders, 1608, p. 243.

BE'DLAM.† adj. [from the noun.] Belonging to a madhouse; fit for a madhouse. Dr. Johnson might have added that this adjective, in the sense of mad, is applied to things as well as persons; and is of older authority than that of Shakspeare; for Huloet and Barret, in their dictionaries, give "a bedlam body;" which is rendered furiosus.

The country gives me proof and precedent
Of bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks. Shakspeare.

They accounted them bedlam fools, who did not believe that the drunkenness of the German people was the true foundation and establishment of so many famous republics as were now seen among them. Trans. of Boccallini, 1626, p. 51.

This which follows is plain bedlam stuff; this is the demoniack legion indeed. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Life to the immortal; death to the perishing part of thee; blessing to the rational, divine; cursing to the bedlam, brutish part of thee. Hammond's Sermons, p. 511.

BE'DLAMITE.† n. s. [from bedlam.] An inhabitant of bedlam; a madman.

The nurse enters like a frantick bedlamite. B. Jonson, New Inn, Argument.

If wild ambition in thy bosom reign,
Alas! thou boast'st thy sober sense in vain;
In these poor bedlamites thyself survey,
Thyself less innocently mad than they. Fitzgerald.

Had the Egyptian prince intended the ruin of this city of wicked bedlamites, he could not have taken a more effectual method to do it, than by such an ensnaring largess. Burke's Vind. of Natural Society.

BE'DMAKER. n. s. [from bed and make.] A person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the chambers.

I was deeply in love with my bedmaker, upon which I was rusticated for ever. Spectator.

BE'DMATE. n. s. [from bed and mate.] A bedfellow; one that partakes of the same bed.

Poor Patty Blount, no more be seen
Bedraggled in my walks so green. Swift.

To BEDRE'NCH. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.

Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land. Shakspeare.

BE'DRID† adj. [Sax. bedpiða, clinicus; Teut. bedder, Germ. bed-reise.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakspeare.

Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish? Shakspeare.

Now, as a myriad
Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, sea-gulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, now bedrid ships. Donne, Poems, p. 145.

Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was. Clarendon.

Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.

BE'DROOM.* n. s. [from bed and room.] A bed-chamber.

BE'DRITE. n. s. [from bed and rite.] The privilege of the marriage bed.

Whose vows are, that no bedrite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted. Shakspeare.

To BEDRO'P.† v. a. [from be and drop.] To besprinkle; to mark with spots or drops; to speckle.

In clothis black bedropp'd all with tears. Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropt with blood of Gorgon. Milton.

Our plenteous streams a various race supply;
The silver eel in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropt with gold. Pope.

BE'DSIDE.* n. s. [from bed and side.] The side of the bed.

Last night he plaid his horrid game agen,
Came to my bed-side at the full of midnight,
And in his hand that fatall fearefull cup. Middleton's Witch, ii. 2.

When I was thus dressed, I was carried to a bed-side. Tatler, No. 15.

BE'DSTAFF. [bed and staff.] A wooden pin stuck anciently on sides of the bedstead to hold the cloaths from slipping on either side.

Hostess, accommodate us with a bedstaff. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

BE'DSTEAD. n. s. [from bed and stead.] The frame on which the bed is placed.

Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke;
Stools, tables, chairs, and bedsteads broke. Swift.

BE'DSTRAW. n. s. [from bed and straw.] The straw laid under a bed to make it soft.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber or bedstraw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

BEDSWE'RVER. n. s. [from bed and swerve.] One that is false to the bed; one that ranges or swerves from one bed to another.

She's a bedswerver, even as bad as those
That vulgars give the boldest titles to. Shakspeare.

BE'DTIME.† n. s. [from bed and time; formerly bedtide, from the Sax. bedtiþ.] The hour of rest; sleeping time.

What masks, what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper and bedtime? Shaksp.

After evening repasts, till bedtime, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion. Milton on Education.

The scouring drunkard, if he does not fight
Before his bedtime, takes no rest that night. Dryd.

To BEDU'CK.* v. a. [from be and duck.] To put under water.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiersly lept,
And deepe himself beducked in the same. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 42.

To BEDU'NG.† v. a. [from be and dung.] To cover, or manure with dung.

Leaving all but his [Goliah's] head to bedung that earth, which had lately shaken at his terrour. Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. ii. 2.

If they will fall a quaking and groaning intolerably, and appear in the streets, as some have done, soundly be-dunged with calumny and filth; such may make some people believe any Romish tenets as revelations from God. Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of England, p. 485.

To BEDU'SK.* v. a. [from be and dusk.] To smutch; to make brown, swart, or blackish. Not now in use. Cotgrave, in V. Basaner.

BE'DWARD. adv. [from bed and ward.] Toward bed.

In heart
As merry, as when our nuptial-day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward. Shakspeare.

To BEDWA'RF.† v. a. [from be and dwarf.] To make little; to hinder in growth; to stunt.

'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us. Donne.

Those whom you bedwarf and becripple by your poisonous medicines. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 277.

BE'DWORK. n. s. [from bed and work.] Work done in bed; work performed without toil of the hands.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness call them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight;
Why this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this bedwork, mappery, closet war. Shakspeare.

To BEDY'E.* v. a. [of be and dye.] To stain; to colour.

Fayre goddesse, lay that furious fitt asyde,
Till I of warres and bloody Mars doe sing,
And Briton fields with Sarazin blood bedyde. Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 7.

BEE. n. s. [beo, Saxon.]

1. The animal that makes honey, remarkable for its industry and art.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that, by a ruling nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakspeare.

From the Moorish camp,
There has been heard a distant humming noise,
Like bees disturb'd, and arming in their hives.
Dryden.

A company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other viands. Locke.

2. An industrious and careful person. This signification is only used in familiar language.

BEE-EATER. n. s. [from bee and eat.] A bird that feeds upon bees.

BEE-FLOWER. n. s. [from bee and flower.] A species of foolstones. Miller.

BEE-GARDEN. n. s. [from bee and garden.] A place to set hives of bees in.

A convenient and necessary place ought to be made choice of, for your apiary, or bee-garden. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEE-HIVE.† n. s. [from bee and hive.] The case, or box, in which bees are kept.

Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob beehives. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. 2.

I find, in the school of nature, no better emblem of this commendable resignation of ourselves to publick service, than the beehive.
Whitlock, Manners of the Eng. p. 375.

Or rob the beehive of its golden hoard.
Tickell, to a Lady before Marriage.

BEE-MASTER. n. s. [from bee and master.] One that keeps bees.

They that are bee-masters, and have not care enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer's Husb.

BEECH. n. s. [bece, or boc, Saxon; fagus.]

There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stony and barren; as also, upon the declivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to plants, but is believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer. Miller.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood.
Dryden.

Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.
Thomson.

BE'ECHEN. adj. [becen, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belonging to the beech.

With diligence he'll serve us when we dine,
And in plain beechen vessels fill our wine.
Congreve, Juv. Sat. xi.

BEEF.† n. s. [bœuf, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?
Shakspeare.

The fat of roasted beef falling on birds, will baste them. Swift.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, considered as fit for food. In this sense it has the plural beeves; the singular is seldom found, Dr. Johnson says. The passage in Shakspeare, however, in which he has given beeves, has beefs. This word, beef, was the common language, as Mr. Malone also has observed, for an ox or cow in the time of queen Elizabeth; since which time it has been disused in England, but was then carried to Scotland, and is still retained there.

These are the beasts which ye shall eat; the beef, the sheep, and the goat.
Deut. xiv. 4. (Tr. of 1578.)

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice, i. 3.

Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine,
Two crook-haunch'd beeves. Chapman's Odyssey.

There was not any captain, but had credit for more victuals than we spent there; and yet they had of me fifty beeves among them.
Sir Walter Ralegh's Apology.

On hides of beeves, before the palace gate,
Sad spoils of luxury! the suitors sate. Pope.

BEEF†. adj. [from the substantive, Dr. Johnson says; but it is only the substantive used adjectively, as Mr. Mason has observed; which is common enough in our language.] Consisting of the flesh of black cattle.

If you are employed in marketing, do not accept of a treat of a beef stake, and a pot of ale, from the butcher. Swift.

BEEF-EATER.† n. s. [from beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus: Beef-eater may come from beaufetier, one who attends at the sideboard, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beef-eaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals. This derivation is corroborated by the circumstance of the beef-eaters having a hasp suspended to their belts for the reception of keys.] A yeoman of the guard.

BEEF-WITTED. adj. [from beef and wit.] Dull; stupid; heavy-headed.

Thou mongrel, beef-witted lord!
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BEELD.* n. s. [Sax. behlıðan, (Gen. xxix. 3.) to secure with a covering. But see the Icel. boele, a dwelling, in Dr. Jamieson's Dict. V. BIELD. Beeld, or bield, is common in the north of England for shelter.] Protection; refuge.

I will or bear, or be myself, thy shield;
And, to defend thy life, will lose my own:
This breast, this bosom soft, shall be thy beeld
'Gainst storms of arrows. Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 49.

BE'EMOL.† n. s. This word I have found only in the example, and know nothing of the etymology, unless it be a corruption of bymodule, from by and modulus, a note; that is, a note out of the regular order. Dr. Johnson. But see Du Cange in V. BEMOLLIS. "Una è clavibus, uti vocant, musicæ; vulgò bemol."

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two beemols, or half notes; so as, if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BEEN.† [beon, Saxon.]

1. The participle preterite of To BE.

Enough that virtue fill'd the space between,
Prov'd by the ends of being to have been. Pope.

2. The present tense plural of To BE. Obsolete.

Such earthly metals soon consumed beene.
Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 33.

BEER.† n. s. [bir, Welsh, bier, Germ. beap, Sax. bar, Goth. barley.] Liquor made of malt and hops. It is distinguished from ale, either by being older or smaller.

Put them all together, they will scarce
Serve to beg single beer in.
Beaum. & Fl. Captain, ii. 1.

Try clarifying with almonds in new beer.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Tho' stale, not ripe; tho' thin, yet never clear;
So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, tho' not full.
Pope.

BE'ERBARREL.* n. s. A barrel which holds beer.

Why, of that loam, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?
Shakspeare, Hamlet.,

BE'ERHOUSE.* n. s. [from beer and house.] The old term for what is now alehouse.

What woman (even among the droonken Almaines) is suffred to follow her husband into the alehouse or beerhouse?
Gascoigne's Delicate Diet for Drunkards (1576).

BE'ESTINGS. See BIESTINGS.

BEET. n. s. [beta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The species are; 1. The common white beet. 2. The common green beet. 3. The common red beet. 4. The turnep-rooted red beet. 5. The great red beet. 6. The yellow beet. 7. The Swiss or Chard beet. Miller.

BE'ETLE. n. s. [bỳtel, Saxon.]

1. An insect distinguished by having hard cases or sheaths, under which he folds his wings.

They are as shards, and he their beetle. Shaksp.

The poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies. Shakspeare.

Others come sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest, but as blind as beetles in foreseeing this great and common danger. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

A grot there was with hoary moss o'ergrown,
The clasping ivies up the ruins creep,
And there the bat and drowsy beetle sleep. Garth.

The butterflies and beetles are such numerous tribes, that I believe, in our own native country alone, the species of each kind may amount to one hundred and fifty, or more. Ray.

2. A heavy mallet, or wooden hammer, with which wedges are driven, and pavements rammed.

If I do, fillip me with a three man beetle. Shak.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some well-grown tree; yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot, one moment, secure itself from being eaten by worms, or defiled by birds, or cut in pieces by axes. Stillingfleet.

To BE'ETLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To jut out; to hang over.

What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea? Shakspeare.

Or where the hawk,
High in the beetling cliff his airy builds. Thomson.

BE'ETLEBROW.* n. s. [from beetle and brow.] A prominent brow.

He had a beetle-brow,
A down-look, middle stature, with black hair.
Sir R. Fanshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 175.

They make a wit of their insipid friend;
His blobber-lips and beetle-brows commend.
Dryden, Juv. Sat. iii.

BE'ETLEBROWED.† adj. [from beetle and brow.] Having prominent brows. Dr. Johnson cites an example from Swift; but the expression is of great antiquity, as it occurs in the Visions of Pierce Plowman; and I think Dryden, in his adoption of beetlebrows, just cited, had not forgotten the passage.

He was bittle-browed and baberlypped also.
Vis. of P. Plowman.

A beetle-browed sullen face makes a palace as smoaky as an Irish hut. Howell's Letters, ii. 25.

Enquire for the beetle-browed critick, &c. Swift.

BE'ETLEHEADED.† adj. [from beetle and head.] Loggerheaded; wooden headed; having a head stupid like the head of a wooden beetle. Huloet uses the phrase "a beetleheaded fellow," long before Shakspeare.

A whoreson, beetle-headed, flap-ear'd knave.
Shakspeare.

BE'ETLESTOCK.† n. s. [from beetle and stock.] The handle of a beetle.

To crouch, to please, to be a beetle-stock
Of thy great master's will.
Spenser, M. Hubberd's Tale.

BE'ETRAVE. } A plant.
BE'ETRADISH. }

BE'EVES. n. s. [The plural of beef.] Black cattle; oxen.

One way, a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton, P. L.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous, first, in bisculous or cloven-hoofed, as camels; and beeves, whereof there is above a million annually slain in England. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn.
Pope, Dunciad.

To BEFA'LL.† v. a. [Sax. bepeallan, particip. bepeallen. It befell, it hath befallen.]

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know
The worst that may befall me in this case. Shaksp.

Other doubt possesses me, lest harm
Befall thee, sever'd from me. Milton.

This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of those unparalleled calamities, which befell his countrymen.
Addison, on the Chr. Religion.

This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people love new faces.
Addison, Freeholder.

2. To happen to, as good or neutral.

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man?
Bacon, Apophthegms.

No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world. Tillotson.

3. It is used sometimes with to before the person to whom any thing happens: this is rare.

Some great mischief hath befallen
To that meek man. Milton, P. L.

To BEFA'LL.† v. n.

1. To happen; to come to pass.

But since the affairs of men are still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
Shakspeare.

I have reveal'd
This discord which befell, and was in heaven
Among the angelick powers. Milton, P. L.

2. To BEFA'LL of; to become of; to be the state or condition of: a phrase little used.

Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.
Shakspeare.

To BEFI'T. v. a. [from be and fit.] To suit; to be suitable to; to become.

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark. Shaks.

Out of my sight, thou serpent! — that name best
Befits thee, with him leagu'd; thyself as false.
Milton, P. L.

I will bring you where she sits,
Clad in splendour, as befits
Her deity. Milton, P. L.

Thou, what befits the new lord mayor,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

To BEFO'AM.* v. a. [from foam.] To cover with foam.

At last the dropping wings, befoam'd all o'er
With flaggy heaviness their master bore.
Eusden, Ov. Met. iv.

To BEFO'OL.† v. a. [from be and fool.] To infatuate; to fool; to deprive of understanding; to lead into errour.

Go then, and befool yourselves, for confusedly opposing common sense and reason.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 185.

To be so pitifully baffled and befooled.
Hammond, Serm. p. 567.

Men befool themselves infinitely, when, by venting a few sighs, they will needs persuade themselves that they have repented. South.

Jeroboam thought policy the best piety, though in nothing more befooled; the nature of sin being not only to defile, but to infatuate. South.

BEFO'RE, prep. [beopan, Sax.]

1. Farther onward in place.

Their common practice was to look no further before them than the next line; whence it will follow that they can drive to no certain point.
Dryden.

2. In the front of; not behind.

Who shall go
Before them in a cloud, and pillar of fire:
By day a cloud, by night a pillar of fire,
To guide them in their journey, and remove
Behind them, while the obdurate king pursues.
Milton.

3. In the presence of; noting authority or conquest.

Great queen of gathering clouds,
See we fall before thee!
Prostrate we adore thee. Dryden.

The Alps and Pyrenean sink before him.

Their place of rest, and Providence their guide.
Milton.

Give us this evening; thou hast morn and night,
And all the year before thee for delight. Dryden.

He hath put us in the hands of our own counsel. Life and death, prosperity and destruction are before us. Tillotson.

8. By the impulse of something behind.

Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind.
Shakspeare.

Hurried by fate, he cries, and borne before
A furious wind, we leave the faithful shore.
Dryden.

9. Preceding in time.

Particular advantages it has before all the books which have appeared before it in this kind.
Dryden.

10. In preference to.

We should but presume to determine which should be the fittest till we see he hath chosen some one, which one we may then boldly say to be the fittest, because he hath taken it before the rest. Hooker.

We think poverty to be infinitely desirable before the torments of covetousness. Bp. Taylor.

11. Prior to; nearer to any thing: as, the eldest son is before the younger in succession.

12. Superiour to: as he is before his competitors both in right and power.

1. To generate; to procreate; to become the father of, as children.

But first come, ye fair hours, which were begot
In Jove's sweet paradise, of day and night,
Which do the seasons of the year allot. Spenser, Epithal.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain phantasy. Shakspeare.

Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate? Isaiah, xlix. 21.

'Twas he the noble Claudian race begat. Dryden.

Love is begot by fancy, bred
By ignorance, by expectation fed. Glanville.

2. To produce, as effects.

If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget you happiness, be happy then:
For it is done. Shakspeare.

My whole intention was to beget, in the minds of men, magnificent sentiments of God and his works. Cheyne.

3. To produce, as accidents.

Is it a time for story, when each minute
Begets a thousand dangers? Denham.

4. It is sometimes used with on, or upon, before the mother.

Begot upon
His mother Martha by his father John. Spectator.

BEGE'TTER. n. s. [from beget.] He that procreates, or begets; the father.

For what their prowess gain'd, the law declares
Is to themselves alone, and to their heirs:
No share of that goes back to the begetter,
But if the son fights well, and plunders better — Dryden.

Men continue the race of mankind, commonly without the intention, and often against the consent and will of the begetter. Locke.

BE'GGABLE.* adj. [from beg.] That may be obtained by begging.

He finds it his best way to be always craving, because he lights many times upon things that are disposed of, or not beggable. Butler's Characters.

BE'GGAR.† n. s. [from beg. It is more properly written begger; but the common orthography is retained, because the derivatives all preserve the a, Dr. Johnson says. They certainly now do; but formerly the principal derivative, beggary, was written beggery. Milton, Hammond, and other excellent writers so spelt it.]

1. One who lives upon alms; one who has nothing but what is given him.

He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes. Sam.

We see the whole equipage of a beggar so drawn by Homer, as even to retain a nobleness and dignity. Broome.

2. One who supplicates for any thing; a petitioner; for which beggar is a harsh and contemptuous term.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

3. One who assumes what he does not prove.

These shameful beggars of principles, who give this precarious account of the original of things, assume to themselves to be men of reason. Tillotson.

To BE'GGAR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reduce to beggary; to impoverish.

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd your's for ever. Shakspeare.

They shall spoil the clothiers wool, and beggar the present spinners. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

The miser
With heav'n, for twopence, cheaply wipes his score,
Lifts up his eyes, and hastes to beggar more. Gay.

2. To deprive.

Necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our persons to arraign
In ear and ear. Shakspeare.

3. To exhaust.

For her person,
It beggar'd all description; she did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold of tissue,
O'er-picturing Venus. Shakspeare.

4. To drive by impoverishing, with out.

A wicked administration may propose to beggar them out of their sturdiness. Bolingbroke, Diss. on Parties, L. 19.

BE'GGAR-MAID.* n. s. A maid who is a beggar.

Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,
When King Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid. Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

BE'GGAR-MAN.* n. s. A man who is a beggar.

Glo. Is it a beggar-man?
Old M. Madman and beggar too. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

BE'GGAR-WOMAN.* n. s. She who is a beggar: a vagrant.

The elder of them, being put to nurse,
Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

BE'GGARLINESS.† n. s. [from beggarly.] The state of being beggarly; meanness; poverty. Barret and Sherwood.

They went about to hinder the journey, by railing on the beggarliness of it, and discrediting of it. Lord Wimbledon to the Duke of Buck. Cabala, 1654, p. 136.

BE'GGARLY. adj. [from beggar.] Mean; poor; indigent; in the condition of a beggar: used both of persons and things.

I ever will, though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement, love him dearly. Shaks.

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shaks.

Who, that beheld such a bankrupt beggarly fellow as Cromwell entering the parliament house, with a thread-bare torn cloak, and greasy hat, could have suspected, that he should, by the murder of one king, and the banishment of another, ascend the throne? South.

The next town has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison on Italy.

Corusodes, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship. Swift.

BE'GGARLY. adv. [from beggar.] Meanly; despicably; indigently.

Touching God himself, hath he revealed, that it is his delight to dwell beggarly? and that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saving only in poor cottages? Hooker.

BE'GGARY. n. s. [from beggar.] Indigence; poverty in the utmost degree.

On he brought me into so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich beggary. Sidney.

While I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say there is no sin, but to be rich:
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggary. Shakspeare.

We must become not only poor for the present, but reduced, by further mortgages, to a state of beggary for endless years to come. Swift.

BEGI'LT.* part. adj. [from be and gild.] Gilded.

Six maids attending on her, attired with buckram bridelaces begilt, white sleeves, and stammel petticoats, drest after the cleanliest country guise. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To BEGI'N. v. n. I began, or begun; I have begun. [beginnan, Sax. from be, or by to, and ȝanȝan, ȝaan, or ȝan, to go.]

1. To enter upon something new: applied to persons.

Begin every day to repent; not that thou shouldst at all defer it; but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is so in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before. Bp. Taylor.

2. To commence any action or state; to do the first act, or first part of an act; to make the first step from not doing to doing.

They began at the ancient men which were before the house. Ezekiel, ix. 6.

By peace we will begin. Shakspeare.

I'll sing of heroes and of kings;
Begin my muse. Cowley.

Of these no more you hear him speak;
He now begins upon the Greek:
These rang'd and show'd, shall in their turns,
Remain obscure as in their urns. Prior.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand
Was liberal to the powers of high command. Dryden.

Rapt into future times the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man,
From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chace began;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgement must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter, iv. 17.

The song begun from Jove. Dryden.

All began,
All ends in love of God, and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

To Begi'n. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.

They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with. Government of the Tongue.

Begi'n.* n. s. Used by Spenser for beginning. Obsolete.

Let no whit thee dismay
The hard beginne that meets thee in the dore. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 21.

Begi'nner. n. s. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Spenser, F. Q.

Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker.

I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

Begi'nning. n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Genesis, i. 1.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome.

Begi'nningless.* adj. [from beginning.] That which hath no beginning.

Melchisedeck, in a typical or mystical way, was beginningless, and endless in his existence. Barrow, Serm. ii. 307.

To suppose one continued being of beginningless and endless duration, neither self-existent and necessary in itself, nor having its existence founded in any self-existent cause,—is directly absurd and contradictory. Clarke on the Attributes, p. 13.

To Begi'rd.† v. a. I begirt, or begirded. [I have begirt. Sax. beȝyrdan, Goth. bigaurdans, S. Luke xvii. 8.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird the Almighty throne,
Beseeching, or besieging. Milton, P. L. ii. 213.

Or should she confident,
As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
To enamour. Milton, P. L. v. 868.

At home surrounded by a servile croud,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.

It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the counsel humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To Begi'rt.† v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer, Dr. Johnson says; but he is mistaken; begirt being no corruption in excellent writers, as my examples from Mede and Milton prove.] To begird.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him. B. Jonson.

Both significations suit well to an army; and the latter, that which beleaguers and begirts a city or fort besieged. Mede on Daniel, p. 41.

Was it that he who came to abrogate the burden of the law, not the equity, should put this yoke upon a blameless person, to league himself in chains with a begirting mischief, not to separate till death. Milton, Tetrachordon.

BE'GLERBEG.† n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks; or rather of provinces, as Mr. Mason has rightly observed.

Next to the first vizier are the several beglerbegs, having under their jurisdiction many provinces. Ricaut.

To Beglo'om.* v. a. [from be and gloom.] To cast a gloom over; to darken.

I should rather endeavour to support your mind, than begloom it with my own melancholy. Badcock to Dr. White, 1787. Statement of Dr. White's Obligations, &c. p. 82.

To Begna'w.† v. a. [Sax. beȝnaȝan. Mr. Mason has inadvertently given this word as beknaw, charging Dr. Johnson with an omission, where his example from Shakspeare's K. Richard, cited by Mr. Mason to exemplify beknaw which has no real existence, illustrates the genuine word begnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul. Shakspeare, Richard III.

To Bego'd.* v. a. [from be and God.] To deify; to treat as a god.

High-flown perfectionists,—what is yet more execrable, when they are come to the height of their begodded condition, &c., cannot sin, do what they will! More, Myst. of Godliness, p. 510.

Bego'ne.† interject. [Only a coalition of the words be gone, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old participle also for gone; and we yet use "woe begone," i. e. far gone in woe; and in the dialect of Norfolk and Suffolk, begone is decayed or worn.] Go away; hence; haste away.

I was a lusty one,
And faire, and rich, and yonge, and well begone. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

Begone! the goddess cries, with stern disdain;
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Addison.

Bego'red.* part. adj. [from be and gore.] Smeared with gore.

Besides, ten thousand monsters foule abhor'd
Dit wait about it, gaping griesly, all begor'd. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 3.

Bego't. } The participle passive of the Bego'tten. } verb beget.

Remember that thou wast begot of them. Ecclus. vii. 28.

The first he met, Antiphates the brave,
But base begotten on a Theban slave. Dryden.

To Begra've.* [Teut. begraven, from grav, a grave.] Frequently used by Gower.

1. To bury. Obsolete.

They arrive
Where that the body was begrave
With worship. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

2. To engrave. Obsolete also.

[He] stood upon a foote on highte
Of borned golde; and with great sleight
Of workmanship it was begrave.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

To BEGRE'ASE.† v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or dawb with unctuous or fat matter. Minsheu.

To BEGRI'ME.† v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

They did endeavour to purge it [religion] of all such filth as you and your predecessors had begrimed it with.
Crowley's Deliberate Answer, &c. (1587,) fol. 80.

Her name that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd, and black
As my own face. Shakspeare.

BEGRI'MER.* n. s. [from begrime.] That which soils or spots a thing. Sherwood.

To BEGRU'DGE.* v. a. [from be and grudge. See To GRUDGE.] To envy.

None will have cause to begrudge the beauty or height of corner stones, when beholding them to beare a double degree of weight in the building.
Standard of Equality, § 25.

To BEGUI'LE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossians, ii. 4.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat! Milt. P. L.

Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled, and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakspeare.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakspeare.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

BEGUI'LER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who beguiles.

To-day a beguiler, to-morrow beguiled.
Wodroephe, Fr. & Eng. Gr. 1623, p. 476.

To BEGUI'LTY.* v. a. [from be and guilty.] To render guilty.

By easy commutations of publick penance for a private pecuniary mulct [thou] dost at once beguilty thine own conscience with sordid bribery, and embolden the adulterer to commit that sin again without fear, from which he hath once escaped without shame, or so much as valuable loss. Bp. Sanderson, Sermons, p. 275.

*BE'GUIN. n. s. [Fr. beguin, low Lat. beghina. V. Du Cange.] A nun of a particular order, supposed to be so named from beguin, old Fr., a kind of coif, or head-dress; or begine, Germ. Matthew of Westminster says that the order of beguins was very common in Germany. Cotgrave says, that they "commonly be all old, or well in years," in V. BEGUIN. But see also Roquefort, Supplem. Gloss. Rom. p. 39. "Bégard, béguard; religieux pénitent du tiers ordre de S. François. On dit aussi bénin, bégnin, beguin, &c. au feminin béguine." This word is given on account of bigot, which see.

Young wanton wenches, and beguins, nuns, and naughty packs. World of Wonders, (1608,) p. 184.

BEGU'N.† The participle passive of begin, Dr. Johnson says; but the example which he gives, proves it to be merely the preterperfect tense of begin. [Sax. bezunne.]

But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times has brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world begun,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night.
Sir J. Davies.

BEHA'LF.† n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behafe; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf. This remark of Dr. Johnson approaches nearly to the genuine Sax. behepe, which escaped him.]

1. Favour; cause favoured; we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.

Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of Divine Providence in its behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.

Lest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise. Milton.

Others believe, that by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument.
Addison on Italy.

To BEHA'PPEN.* v. n. [from be and happen.] To happen to; to befall.

This is the greatest shame, and foulest scorn,
Which unto any knight behappẽ may,
To lose the badge that should his deeds display.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 52.

To BEHA'VE.† v. a. [Sax. See BEHALF. pel-behoꝑen, well adorned. V. Lye in behoꝑen.] To employ.

1. To carry, to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. 2 Thess. iii. 7.

Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Macc. ii. 21.

To their wills wedded, to their errours slaves,
No man, like them, they think, himself behaves.
Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used. In these passages, it is the Sax. behabban, from the Goth. haban, being the primitive sense of the word.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss.
Spenser, F. Q.

With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument.
Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

To BEHA'VE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR. n. s. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage with respect to propriety.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney.

2. External appearance, with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shaksp.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Sam. xxi. 13.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's BEHAVIOUR. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superiour power. L'Estrange, Fables.

To BEHE'AD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.

On each side they fly,
By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once. Philips.

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison on Italy.

To BEHE'L.* v. a. [from be and hell.] To torture as with the pains of hell.

Satan, Death, and Hell, were his inveterate foes, that either drew him to perdition, or did behel and wrack him with the expectation of them.
Hewyt's Serm. (1658), p. 72.

BEHE'LD. particip. passive, [from behold; which see.]

All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again!
Pope, Odyssey.

BEHE'MOTH. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant. Calmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job, xl. 15.

Behold! in plaited mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson.

BE'HEN. } n. s. Valerian roots. Also a
BEN. } fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dict.

BEHE'ST.† n. s. [Either from be and hæse, Sax. a command; or from behebban, to behight; which verb signifies, among other senses, to command; though not so noticed by Dr. Johnson. Behest is in the Prompt. Parv. rendered promissio; and to behight, promitto, as also in the Ort. Vocab. 1514.] Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law.
Spenser, F. Q.

I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell.
Fairfax, Tasso.

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro

In heaven God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton, P. L.

To BEHI'GHT.† v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [Sax. behetan, to promise.]

1. To promise: this word is obsolete.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vow yplight,
Uprose from drowsy couch, and him addrest,
Unto the journey which he had behight.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 1.

2. To entrust; to commit.

That most glorious house that glist'reth bright,—
Whereof the keys are to thy hand behight
By wise Fidelia. Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 50.

3. To call; to name; hight being often put in old authors for named or was named. See HIGHT.

But now aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou behight me born of English blood,
Whom all a faeries son do nominate?
Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 64.

4. To command.

So taking courteous congé, he behight
Those gates to be unbarr'd; and forth he went.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 17.

5. To adjudge.

There it was judged, by those worthy wights,
That Satyrane the first day best had donne: —
The second was to Triamond behight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 7.

6. To address; to speak to.

Whom soon as he beheld he knew, and thus behight. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 25.

7. To inform; to assure.

In right ill array
She was, with storm and heat, I you behight.
Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

8. To mean; to intend.

The author's meaning should of right be heard,
He knoweth best to what end he enditeth:
Words sometime bear more than the heart behiteth.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 461.

9. To reckon; to esteem.

False faitour Scudamour, that hast by flight
And foule advantage this good knight dismayd,
A knight much better than thyself behight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 44.

BEHI'ND.† prep. [Goth. hinder, Sax. behindan, hindan.]

1. At the back of another.

Acomates hasted with harquebusiers, which he had caused his horsemen to take behind them upon their horses. Knolles.

2. On the back part; not before.

She came in the press behind, and touched his garment. Mark, v. 27.

3. Towards the back.

The Benjamites looked behind them.
Judges, xx. 40.

4. Following another.

Her husband went with her along, weeping behind her. 2 Samuel, iii. 16.

5. Remaining after the departure of something else.

He left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in one hour. Shakspeare.

Piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them. Tillotson.

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.

What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.

Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind.
Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another, having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.

From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head
Dryden.

BEHI'ND. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

We cannot be sure, that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEHI'NDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be a half year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.

3. Shakspeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakspeare.

To BEHO'LD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon; to behold is to see, in an emphatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel, xl. 4.

When Thessalians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold.
Dryden.

The Saviour comes by ancient bards foretold.
Hear him ye deaf, and all ye blind behold. Pope.

BEHO'LD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee.
Genesis, xxviii. 15.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton, P. L.

BEHO'LDEN. particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obliged; bound in gratitude; with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakspeare.

Little are we beholden to your love,
And little looked for at your helping hands. Shaksp.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; one that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

These beasts among
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton, P. L.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's, than beholder's sight.
Denham.

The justling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Granville.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obliged. See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.

Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him. Sidney.

In this my doubt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I seem'd to shun beholdingness.
Donne, Poems, p. 159.

To BEHO'NEY.* v. a. [from be and honey.] To sweeten with honey. Sherwood.

BEHO'OF.† n. s. [Sax. behepe, Germ. behuf, Su. behof. See also BEHALF.] That which behoves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her Majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway.
Milton, P. L.

Wert thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus, by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate.
Milton, Ode.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears.
Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

BEHO'OVABLE.* adj. [from behoove.] So written by Minsheu; by others, behovable; which see. Fit; expedient.

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behoꝑan, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behoveth the very foundation and root, the highest wellspring and fountain of them to be discovered.
Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooved or became him to perform.
Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art.
Thomson.

BEHO'OVEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser on Ireland.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

Madam, we have culled such necessaries
As are behooveful for our state to-morrow. Shaksp.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publickly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgement, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVEFULLY. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation.
Spenser on Ireland.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as striken dead,
No living wight would have him life behot.
Spenser, F. Q.

BEHO'VABLE.* adj. [from behove.] Profitable; expedient; useful.

All spiritual graces behoveable for our soul.
Homilies, ii. 227.

BEHO'VE.* n. s. [Sax. behoꝑan.] Advantage; interest; convenience; behoof. Obsolete.

To further forth the fruit of my desire,
My friends devis'd this mean for my behove.
Gascoigne's Poems, (1575,) p. 140.

I lothe that I did love;
In youth that I thought swete:
As time requires for my behove
Methinks they are not mete.
Old Ballad referred to in Hamlet.

To BEHO'VE.* v. n. [Sax. behoꝑan. This is the word now used for behoove, and was that of our ancient writers; though Dr. Johnson and Dr. Ash have not condescended even to notice behove. The double o, indeed, is not analogous to the etymology. See also BEHOVEFUL, BEHOVELY, and the subst. BEHOVE.] To be fit; to be meet.

Thus it is writun, and thus it bihofte Christ to suffre. Wicliffe, (1380,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer. Transl. (1578,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer. Transl. (1611,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

BEHO'VEFUL.* adj. [from behove and full.] Fit; expedient.

That freedom of judgement, which was behoveful for the study of philosophy.
Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 306.

BEHO'VELY.* adj. [from behove.] Profitable. I cite this ancient adjective in confirmation of the orthography of behove.

Whereof if thou wilt, that I tell,
It is behovely for to hear. Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.

To BEHO'WL.* v. n. To howl at; a word, Dr. Ash says, not much used. The fact is, that the existence of this word is doubtful. It has been proposed and defended by the commentators on Shakspeare, beginning with Bishop Warburton, for the reading of beholds or behoulds in the following passage of Shakspeare, as it stands in the old copies; and modern editions read accordingly behowls. Hence Dr. Ash, I suppose, adopted behowl; for I know no other work in which the word is to be found; and the commentators themselves support it in its assumed position, only by observing the propriety of howl.

Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf behowls the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fordone.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr. v. 2.

To BEJA'DE.* v. a. [from be and jade.] To tire.

If you have no mercy upon them, yet spare yourself, lest you bejade the good galloway, your own opiniatre wit.
Milton, Anim. upon the Rem. Defence.

To BEJA'PE.* v. a. [from be and jape, a jest. See JAPE.] To laugh at; to deceive; to impose upon. Obsolete.

[Thou] hast bejaped here duke Theseus.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

I shall bejaped ben a thousand time
More than that foole, of whose folly men rime.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. i. 532.

BE'ING.† particip. [from be, beonb, Sax. existing.]

Those who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.

BE'ING. n. s. [from be.]

1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have received both their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Though author of her being, and being there.
Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear; and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton, P. L.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation.
Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being: then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate,
For future being, and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould.
Pope.

3. The person existing.

Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat,
By seeming kindness mixt with deep deceit.
Dryden.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the Supreme; because no other being can make a right judgement of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison, Spect.

BE'ING.† conjunct. [from be.] Since. Dict.

Now, being death is nothing else but the privation or recession of life, and we are then properly said to die when we cease to live; being life consisteth in the union of the soul unto the body, from whence, as from the fountain, flow motion, sensation, and whatsoever vital perfection; death can be nothing else but the solution of that vital union.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

BE'ING-PLACE.* n. s. [from being and place.] A place in which to be; a state of existence.

Before this world's great frame, in which all things
Are now contain'd, found any being place.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,
Be't so she will not here, before your grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius;
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shaks.

To BEKI'SS.* v. a. [from be and kiss.] To salute.

She's sick o' the young shepherd that bekist her.
B. Jonson, Sad Shep. i. 6.

To BEKNA'VE.* v. a. [from be and knave.] To call knave.

May satire ne'er befool ye, or beknave ye. Pope.

To BEKNO'W.* v. a. [from be and know.] To acknowledge; to confess. Obsolete.

No wight that excuseth himself wilfully of his sinne, may not be delivered of his sinne, till that he mekely beknoweth his sinne.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

This messager turmented was, till he
Muste beknowe, and tellen plat and plain,
Fro night to night, in what place he had lain.
Ib. Man of Law's Tale.

To BELA'BOUR.† [from be and labour.] To beat; to thump: a word in low speech, Dr. Johnson says; but used in a very serious poem, I may add.

What several madnesses in men appear,
Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;
Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks.
Dryden.

He sees virago Nell belabour,
With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour. Swift.

The strong man,
By stronger arm belabour'd, gasps for breath.
R. Blair, The Grave.

To BELA'CE. v. a. [Sea term.] To fasten; as to belace a rope. Dict.

BELA'CED.* part. adj. [from be and lace.] Adorned with lace.

When thou in thy bravest
And most belaced servitude dost strut,
Some newer fashion doth usurp: and thou
Unto its antick yoke durst not but bow.
Beaumont's Psyche, 16. 10.

To BELA'M.* v. a. [from be and lam. See To LAMM, which Dr. Johnson notices.] Dr. Ash says, that belam is derived from a low word; but no more. It is a common word in the North of England, and in the sense which is assigned to it in our old lexicographer, viz. To beat; to bang. V. Cotgrave in BATEMENT, and Sherwood in BELAMME.

BE'LAMY. n. s. [bel amie, Fr.] A friend; an intimate. This word is out of use.

Wise Socrates
Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,
To the fair Crittias, his dearest belamy.
Spenser, F. Q.

BE'LAMOUR. n. s. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; consort; paramour: obsolete.

Lo, lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r,
With silken curtains, and gold coverlets,
Therein to shroud her sumptuous belamour.
Spenser, F. Q.

To BELA'TE.* v. a. [from be and late.] To retard a person, so as to make him too late.

The action cannot waste,
Caution retard, nor promptitude deceive,
Slowness belate, nor hope drive on too fast.
Davenant's Gondibert, ii. 2.

BELA'TED. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,
Whose midight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton, P. L.
Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks
Belated, seems on watch to lie. Swift.

BELA'TEDNESS.* n. s. [from belated.] Slowness; backwardness.

That you may see I am sometimes suspicious of myself, and do take notice of a certain belatedness in me, I am the bolder to send you some of my nightward thoughts. Milton, Lett.

To BELA'VE.* [from be and lave. See To LAVE.] To wash. Cockeram.

To BELA'WGIVE.* v. a. [from be, law, and give. An unusual word.] To give a law to; to legislate for.

The Holy One of Israel hath belawgiven his own people with this very allowance.
Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce.

To BELA'Y.† v. a. [from be and lay; as to waylay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.

The speedy horse all passages belay,
And spur their smoaking steeds to cross their way.
Dryden.

2. To place in ambush, Dr. Johnson says; and, in proof of his assertion, cites a passage in Spenser, which he copied from a corrupted edition, and in which the word forces led him to a wrong definition. The true word in Spenser is forts, (see the edit. of Spenser, 1805, vol. 8. p. 124.) and the meaning of belay is to attack; to besiege; adopted by Spenser from our older poetry, and from Spenser by Sandys. The Scotch use bely also for to besiege.

About Thebes, where he laie,
Whan it of siege was belaine.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might
Than those small forts which ye were wont belay.
Spenser, Sonn. xiv.

So when Arabian thieves belaid us round,
And when by all abandon'd, Thee I found.
Sandys, Hymn to God.

3. To decorate; to lay over.

All in a woodman's jacket he was clad
Of Lincolne greene, belay'd with silver lace,
Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 5.

To BELAY a rope. [Sea term.] To splice; to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

To BELCH.† v. n. [bealcan, Saxon; formerly written belk, bolke, or bealk. Dict. of Huloet, and of Barret.]

1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

Full gorges belk, if not much rather spew,
Most fulsomely.
Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. T. 1.

2. To issue out, as by eructation.

Behold, they belch out with their mouth; swords are in their lips. Psalm lix. 7.

The waters boil, and, belching from below,
Black sands as from a forceful engine throw.
Dryden.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,
On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd.
Dryden.

To BELCH.† v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness; hatefulness; or horrour.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakspeare.

The mouth of fools poureth out [in the margin belcheth] foolishness. Proverbs, xv. 2.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart.
Shakspeare.

Immediate in a flame,
But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heaven appear'd,
From those deep-throated engines belch'd.
Milton, P. L.

The gates that now
Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame
Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through.
Milton, P. L.

Rough as their savage lords who rang'd the wood,
And, fat with acorns, belch'd their windy food.
Dryden.

There belcht the mingled streams of wind and blood,
And human flesh, his indigested food.
Pope, Odyssey.

When I an amorous kiss design'd,
I belch'd an hurricane of wind. Swift.

BELCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.
2. A cant term for malt liquor.

A sudden reformation would follow, among all sorts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BE'LCHING.* n. s. [from belch.] The act of eructation; "a bealking or breaking of wind upwards," Barret. Bishop Hall seems to use it in the sense of violently throbbing, in allusion, perhaps, to the painful efforts of those diseased persons, whom belching attacks.

Often belkings [are] a token of ill digestion.
Barret, Alv.

What aches of the bones, what belking of the joints, what convulsion of the sinews!
Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The symptoms are, a sour smell in their fæces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels.
Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

BE'LDAM.† n. s. [belle dame, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman; generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults and miseries, Dr. Johnson says. The only example which he gives, is that from Milton; which certainly implies no contempt, but merely great age. It is indeed often used by our old writers for the grandmother; and we have, in our language, belsire for grandsire, corresponding with beldam for grandam.

The familiar examples, as of the mother, the the beldame, the aunt, the sister, the cosyn, or of some other kinswoman or freinde, should be of more force and value. Vives, Dut. of an Husband, tr. by Paynel, (about 1550.)

To shew the beldame daughters of her daughter.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

The beldam and the girl, the grandsire and the boy. Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 6.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,
When beldam Nature in her cradle was.
Milton, Vac. Ex.

2. A hag.

Miso his wife, so handsome a beldame, that only her face and her splay-foot have made her accused for a witch. Sidney, Arcadia, B. I.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angerly?—
—Have I not reason, beldams as you are?
Saucy and overbold? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;
I weep for woe, the testy beldam swore. Dryden.

To BELE'AGUER.† v. a. [beleggeren, Dutch, galukan, Goth. to shut up, to inclose; belägern, Germ.] To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then beleaguer'd by Turnus and the Latins.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Against beleagur'd heav'n the giants move:
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky.
Dryden, Ovid.

BELE'AGURER.† n. s. [from beleaguer.] One that besieges a place. Sherwood.

To BELE'AVE.* v. a. [from be and leave; an old English as well as a Scottish verb. See Jamieson's Dict. in BELIEF. Not disused in the time of Milton.] To leave.

Wondering at fortune's turns, and scarce is he,
Beleft, relating his own misery.
May's Lucan, B. 8.

To BELE'E.† v. a. [a term in navigation.] To place in a direction unsuitable to the wind. One vessel is said to be in the lee of another, when it is so placed that the wind is intercepted from it. This remark has been rendered subservient to the establishment of belee'd, by the commentators, as the genuine text of Shakspeare in Othello; beled being the reading of the old quarto; belee'd, that of the first folio, which Warburton wished to reject, but his successors have adopted. Iago, the speaker of the following lines, means that Cassio had got the wind of him.

He, sir, had the election:
And I, — of whom his eyes had seen the proof,
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds
Christian and heathen,—must be belee'd and calm'd
By debitor and creditor, this counter-caster.
Shakspeare, Othello, i. 1.

BELEMNI'TES. n. s. [from βέλος, a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrow-head, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

To BELE'PER.* v. a. [from be and leper.] To infect as with a leprosy.

You have a law, lords, that without remorse
Dooms such as are beleper'd with the curse
Of foul ingratitude, to death.
Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

Imparity, and church-revenue, rushing in, corrupted and belepered all the clergy with a worse infection than Gehazi's. Milton, Eiconocl. Ch. 14.

BE'LFLOWER. n. s. [from bell and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

There is a vast number of the species of this plant. 1. The tallest pyramidal belflower. 2. The blue peach-leaved belflower. 3. The white peach-leaved belflower. 4. Garden belflower, with oblong leaves and flowers; commonly called Canterbury bells. 5. Canary belflower, with orrach leaves and a tuberose root. 6. Blue belflower, with edible roots, commonly called rampions. 7. Venus looking-glass belflower, &c. Miller.

BE'LFOUNDER. n. s. [from bell and found.] He whose trade it is to found or cast bells.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise belfounders in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon.

BE'LFRY.† n. s. [Beffroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because, bells were in it, Dr. Johnson says. But our belfry is not a corruption, but comes from the old French belfroit, or low Latin belfredus. V. Du Cange. And Roquefort in BEFROI.] The place where the bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure. Gay.

BELGA'RD. n. s. [belle egard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
Under the shadow of her even brows,
Working belgards, and amorous retrait.
Spenser, F. Q.

To BELI'BEL.* v. a. [from be and libel.] To traduce; to libel; to slander.

The pope, hearing thereof, belibelled him [the emperour] more foully than ever before.
Fuller's Hist. of the Holy War, p. 163.

To BELI'E. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimick.

Which durst, with horses hoofs that beat the ground,
And martial brass, belie the thunder's sound.
Dryden.

The shape of man, and imitated beast,
The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belie.
Dryden, Fables.

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.

Sure there is none but fears a future state;
And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
Their trembling hearts belie their boastful tongues.
Dryden.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers agree,
The evening has the day bely'd,
And Phillis is some forty-three. Prior.

3. To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.

Thou dost belie him, Piercy, thou beliest him:
He never did encounter with Glendower. Shaks.

4. To give a false representation of any thing.

Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words.—
— Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts.
Shakspeare.

Tuscan Valerus by force o'ercame,
And not bely'd his mighty father's name.
Dryden, Æneid.

In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue bely'd;
And in my looks you might have read,
How much I argu'd on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BELI'EF. n. s. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,
Future in hope, but present in belief. Wotton.

Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wake.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;
Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief.
Milton, S. A.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

BELI'EVABLE.† adj. [from believe.] Credible; that may be credited or believed. Sherwood.

To BELIE'VE.† v. a. [ȝelỳfan, Saxon, galaubian, Gothick.]

1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.

Adherence to a proposition, which they are persuaded, but do not know to be true, is not seeing, but believing. Locke.

Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watts, Logick.

2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.

The people may hear when I speak with thee and believe thee for ever. Exodus, xix. 9.

To BELI'EVE. v. n.

1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.

They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Exodus, iv. 5.

2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.

Now God be prais'd, that, to believing souls,
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shaks.

For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans, x. 10.

3. With the particle in; to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron. xx. 20.

4. With the particle upon; to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. St. John, i. 12.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison, on Italy.

BELIE'VER. n. s. [from believe.]

1. One that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity, had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.

If he which writeth, do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth, be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.

Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELI'EVINGLY. adv. [from to believe.] After a believing manner.

BELI'KE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]

1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.

Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shakspeare.

Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Ralegh.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony; as, It may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; for else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants.

Brerewood on Languages.

BELI'KELY.* adv. [from belike.] Probably; still used in the north of England.
Having belikely heard some better words of me, than I could deserve.
Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

To BELI'ME.* v. a. [from be and lime.] To smear as with lime; to soil.
Ye, whose foul hands are belimed with bribery, and besmeared with the price of blood.
Bp. Hall, Works, vol. 2. p. 301. ed. 1661.

BELI'VE.† adv. [bilive, Sax. probably from bi and life, in the sense of vivacity; speed; quickness.] Speedily; quickly; a word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. But it is still common, I must add, in Westmoreland for presently; which sense, implying a little delay, like our expression of by and by, was formerly the general acceptation of the word; no doubt, from the Sax. belipan, to remain.
By that same way the direful dames to drive
Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house are come belive.
Spenser, F. Q.

BELL.† n. s. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.
Your flock assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with rev'rence. Shakspeare.
Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shaks.
Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.
Holder, Elements of Speech.
He has no one necessary attention to any thing, but the bell which calls to prayers twice a-day.
Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.
Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakspeare, Tempest.
The humming bees that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed.
Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.
As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the faulcon his bells, so hath man his desires.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

4. Bell, book, and candle; the old phrase for execration, adopted from the directions given, in elder times, that sentence of excommunication against delinquents should be "throughout explained in order in English, with bells tolling, and candles lighted, that it may cause the greater dread." See Johnson's Eccles. Laws, vol. 2. And note on Shakspeare's K. John, A. iv. S. 2.]
Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver becks me to come on.
Shakspeare, K. John.
Out with your beads, Curate;
The devil's in your dish: bell, book, and candle!
Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

5. To bear the bell. To be the first; from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar, Dr. Johnson says. But his solitary example from Hakewill explains neither assertion; and exhibits not the precise expression bear the bell. Some think, that a bell was formerly a common prize. In the reign of K. James I. the prize at a horse-race in Chester was a silver bell; and at York, a golden bell. See Lysons's Cheshire, p. 586. And Gent. Mag. vol. 50. p. 515. To bear away the bell is also found in our old writers, and has given rise to a conjecture that the expression may mean "carrying or winning the fair lady," belle. See Brand's Popular Antiq. But this is rather far-fetched; and the example, which I give from Howell, discountenances the conjecture. That from B. Riche justifies the opinion, that it comes from the sheep bearing the bell.
So Satyrane that day was judg'd to beare the bell.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 25.
My prickear'd ewe, since thou dost beare the bell,
And all thy mates do follow at thy call,
Keepe still this laune, &c. B. Riche, Adventures of Simonides, (1584,) P. i. sign. N iij.
The ale bore away the bell among the doctors.
Howell's Letters, B. 1. § 2. L. 21.
The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewill.

6. To shake the bells. A phrase, in Shakspeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.
Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells.
Shakspeare.

To BELL. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.
Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELL-FASHIONED. adj. [from bell and fashion.] Having the form of a bell; campaniform.
The thorn apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashioned flowers at the joints.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELLADO'NNA. n. s. [Ital.] In botany, the deadly nightshade. This name is said by Ray to have been given to it by the Italians, because the ladies make a cosmetick of the juice, or distilled water, which they use to make their complexion fair and white.

BELLE.† n. s. [beau, belle, Fr.] A smart or gay young lady.
What motive could compel
A well-bred lord to assault a gentle belle?
O say, what stranger cause yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?
Pope, Rape of the Lock.
My beaus are now shepherds, and my belles wood-nymphs. Tatler, No. 182.

BE'LLED.* adj. [In heraldry.] Having bells affixed to it; as, a hawk rising, jessed and belled.

BELLES LETTRES. n. s. [Fr.] Polite literature. It has no singular.
The exactness of the other, is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles lettres. Tatler.

BE'LLIBONE. n. s. [from bellus, beautiful, and bonus, good, Lat. belle & bonne, Fr.] A woman excelling both in beauty and goodness. A word now out of use.
Pan may be proud, that ever he begot
Such a bellibone,
And Syrinx rejoice, that ever was her lot
To bear such an one.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

BE'LLICK, or BE'LLIQUE.* adj. [old Fr. bellique, militaire; from the Lat. bellicus.] Warlike; martial.
The bellique Cesar, as Suetonius tells us, was noted for singularity in his apparel.
Feltham's Resolves, ii. 52.
Archimedes, the geometrician, was so serviceable to his fellow-creatures by his machines and bellick instruments, that Marcellus and his forces despaired of taking the town.
Pelling's Good Old Way, 1680, p. 128.

BE'LLIED.* adj. [from belly.] Sometimes used in composition. See BIGBELLIED, GORBELLIED.

BELLI'GERANT.† } adj. [Lat. belligerans,
BELLI'GEROUS. } belliger.] Waging war.
Dict.

To BELLI'GERATE.* v. n. [Lat. belligero.] To make war. Cockeram.

BELLI'GERENT.* adj. This is the word most in use, as Mr. Mason has observed on the two preceding synonymous adjectives.
Pére Bougeant's third volume will give you the best idea of the treaty of Munster, and open to you the several views of the belligerent and contracting parties. Ld. Chesterfield.

BE'LLING.† n. s. [Sax. bellan, to roar. Belling is indeed only bellowing contracted, and it is sometimes written bellowing by those who describe the present term.] A hunting term, spoken of a roe, when she makes a noise in rutting time. Dict.

BELLI'POTENT. adj. [bellipotens, Lat.] Puissant; mighty in war. Dict.

BE'LLITUDE.* n. s. [Latin, bellitudo.] Handsomeness: beauty. Obsolete.
Cockeram.

To BE'LLOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]

1. To make a noise as a bull.
Jupiter became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune a ram, and bleated. Shakspeare.
What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat
Within the lion's den? Dryden, Sp. Friar.
But now, the husband of a herd must be
Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny. Dryd.

2. To make any violent outcry.
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shakspeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.
The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.
This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terrour.

Till, at the last, he heard a dreadfull sound,
Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebound. Spenser.
The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

BE'LLOW.* n. s. [from the verb.] Roar; as, the bellow of the wind or sea.

BE'LLOWER.* n. s. [from bellow.] One who roars or bellows.
Mimical squeakers and bellowers.
Echard, Obs. on Ans. to Cont. of the Clergy, p. 137.

BE'LLOWING.* n. s. [from bellow.] Loud noise; roaring.
Captain Brown thundered out his farewell in a hundred great shot, whose echo not only made Gombroon tremble, but seemed to rend the higher regions with their bellowings. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 111.
The beasts that haunt those springs,
Of whom I hear the dreadful bellowings. Brown, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 1.

BE'LLOWS.† n. s. [bilȝ, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly, Dr. Johnson says. But it is no corruption, being from the Goth. balgs, balgeis. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.
Since sighs into my inward furnace turned,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire. Sidney.
One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And with forc'd wind, the fuel did inflame. Spenser, F. Q.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.
The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage, it is singular.
Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BE'LLUINE.† adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.
There have been the fearfullest distractions here, that ever happened upon any part of the earth; a belluin kind of immanity never ranged so among men. Howell's Letters, iii. 15.
If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best. Atterbury.

BE'LLY.† n. s. [balgs, Goth. balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welsh. "Bulg perantiquo usu utrem, imò quodlibet receptaculum coriaceum. Anglo-Saxones utrem vocabant bælȝe, &c." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 98.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.
The body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulf it did remain,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.
And the lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Genesis, iii. 14.

3. The womb: in this sense, it is commonly used ludicrously or familiarly.
I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.
The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs. Primly's big belly. Congreve, Way of the World.

4. That part of man which requires food, in opposition to the back, or that which demands clothes.
They were content with a licentious life, wherein they might fill their bellies by spoil, rather than by labour. Hayward.
Whose god is their belly. Phil. iii. 19.
He that sows his grain upon marble, will have many a hungry belly before harvest. Arbuthnot.

5. The part of any thing that swells out into a larger capacity.
Fortune sometimes turneth the handle of the bottle, which is easy to be taken hold of; and, after the belly, which is hard to grasp. Bacon, Orn. Rat.
An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. Any place in which something is enclosed.
Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. Jonah, ii. 2.

To BE'LLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell into a larger capacity; to hang out; to bulge out.
Thus by degrees day wastes, signs cease to rise,
For bellying earth, still rising up, denies
Their light a passage, and confines our eyes. Creech, Manilius.
The power appeas'd, with winds suffic'd the sail,
The bellying canvas strutted with the gale. Dryden.
Loud rattling shakes the mountains and the plain,
Heav'n bellies downwards, and descends in rain. Dryden.
'Midst these disports, forget they not to drench
Themselves with bellying goblets. Philips.

To BE'LLY.* v. a. To fill; to swell out.
Your breath with full consent bellied his sails. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

BE'LLYACHE.† n. s. [from belly and ache.] The cholick; or pain in the bowels.
The belly-ache,
Caus'd by an inundation of pease-porridge! Beaum. and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

BE'LLYBAND.* n. s. [from belly and band.] The girth which fastens the saddle of a horse in harness, or gears. Sherwood.

BE'LLYBOUND. adj. [from belly and bound.] Diseased, so as to be costive and shrunk in the belly.

BE'LLYCHEER.* n. s. [An old word in our language; from belly and cheer, though it may also be thought a corruption of the Fr. belle chere. It has escaped the notice of our lexicographers.] Good cheer; entertainment for the belly.
Belle-chere,
That he hath had ful often times here. Chaucer, Shipman's Tale.
O cyties of Englande, whose glory standeth more in bellye-cheere, than in the serche of wysdome godlye! Bale's Pref. to Leland's Journey.
Demure civility
Shall seem to say, Good brother, sister dear;
As for the rest, to snort in belly-cheer. Marston's Scourge of Vill. iii. 9.
Senseless of divine doctrine, and capable only of loaves and bellycheer. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BE'LLY-FRETTING. n. s. [from belly and fret.]
1. [With farriers.] The chafing of a horse's belly with the foregirt.
2. A great pain in a horse's belly caused by worms. Dict.

BE'LLYFUL. n. s. [from belly and full.]
1. As much food as fills the belly, or satisfies the appetite.
2. It is often used ludicrously for more than enough; thus King James told his son that he would have his bellyful of parliamentary impeachments.

BE'LLYGOD. n. s. [from belly and god.] A glutton; one who makes a god of his belly.
What infinite waste they made this way, the only story of Apicius, a famous bellygod, may suffice to shew. Hakewill on Providence, p. 378.

BE'LLY-PINCHED. adj. [from belly and pinch.] Starved.
This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry; unbonnetted he runs. Shaksp.

BE'LLYROLL. n. s. [from belly and roll.] A roll so called, as it seems, from entering into the hollows.
They have two small harrows that they clap on each side of the ridge, and so they harrow right up and down, and roll it with a bellyroll, that goes between the ridges, when they have sown it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BE'LLYSLAVE.* n. s. [from belly and slave.] A slave to the appetites.
Beastly belly-slaves, which, void of all godliness or virtuous behaviour, not once, but continually, day and night, give themselves wholly to bibbing and banqueting. Homily against Gluttony and Drunkenness.

BE'LLYTIMBER. n. s. [from belly and timber.] Food; materials to support the belly.
Where belly-timber, above ground
Or under, was not to be found. Hudibras.

BE'LLYWORM.† n. s. [from belly and worm.] A worm that breeds in the belly.
Of belly-worms there be three usual sorts. 1. The round ones called teretes. 2. The flat ones called lati. 3. Those called ascarides; for ascarides is not the general name of all belly-worms. Ray, Dict. Trilingue.

BE'LMAN. n. s. [from bell and man.] He whose business it is to proclaim any thing in towns, and to gain attention by ringing his bell.
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the stern'st good night. Shakspeare.
Where Titian's glowing paint the canvas warm'd,
Now hangs the belman's song, and pasted here
The colour'd prints of Overton appear. Gay.
The belman of each parish, as he goes his circuit, cries out every night, Past twelve o'clock! Swift.

BE'LMETAL. n. s. [from bell and metal.] The metal of which bells are made; being a mixture of five parts copper with one of pewter.
Belmetal has copper one thousand pounds, tin from three hundred to two hundred pounds, brass one hundred and fifty pounds. Bacon, Phys. Rem.
Colours which arise on belmetal, when melted and poured on the ground in open air like the colours of water bubbles, are changed by viewing them at divers obliquities. Newton, Opt.

To BELO'CK† v. a. [Sax. belocen.] To fasten, as with a lock, one of our oldest verbs.

And after of his own choys,
He took his death upon the croys;
And how in grave he was beloke,
And how that he hath hell broke.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

This is the hand, which with a vow'd contract
Was fast belock'd in thine. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

BE'LOMANCY. n. s. [from βέλος and μαντεία.] Belomancy, or divination by arrows, hath been in request with Scythians, Alans, Germans, with the Africans and Turks of Algier.

To whom belongest thou? whence art thou?
1 Sam. xxx. 13.

5. To be the quality or attributes of.
The faculties belonging to the Supreme Spirit, are unlimited and boundless, fitted and designed for infinite objects. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

6. To be referred to; to relate to.
He careth for things that belong to the Lord.
1 Corinth. vii. 32.

BELO'NGING.* n. s. [from belong.] Quality; endowment; faculty.
Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.
Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do;
Not light them for ourselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

To BELO'VE.* v. a. Dr. Johnson says, that this verb is seldom or never used; and accordingly he takes no further notice of it. See BELOVED. But it was formerly in use.
If beauty were a string of silke, I would wear it about my neck for a certain testimony that I belove it much.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. 1623, p. 322.

BELO'VED.† participle. [from belove, derived of love. It is observable, that though the participle be of very frequent use, the verb is seldom or never admitted; as we say, you are much beloved by me, but not, I belove you. This is not exactly the case. See To BELOVE.] Loved; dear.
I think, it is not meet,
Mark Anthony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar. Shakspeare.
In likeness of a dove
The Spirit descended, while the Father's voice
From heaven pronounc'd him his beloved Son.
Milton, P. R.

BELO'W.† prep. [from be and low.]

1. Under in place; not so high.
For all below the moon I would not leap.
Shakspeare.
He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,
And tread upon his neck. Shakspeare.

2. Under in point of time.
The most eminent scholars, which England produced before and even below the twelfth century, were educated in our religious houses. T. Warton.

3. Inferiour in dignity.
The noble Venetians think themselves equal at least to the electors of the empire, and but one degree below kings. Addison.

4. Inferiour in excellence.
His Idylliums of Theocritus are as much below his Manilius, as the fields are below the stars.
Felton.

5. Unworthy of; unbefitting.
'Tis much below me on his throne to sit;
But when I do, you shall petition it. Dryden.

BELO'W. adv.

1. In the lower place; in the place nearest the centre.
To men standing below on the ground, those that be on the top of Paul's, seem much less than they are, and cannot be known; but, to men above, these below seem nothing so much lessened, and may be known. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of the tempests and winds before the air here below; and therefore the obscuring of the smaller stars, is a sign of tempest following.
Bacon, Ib.
His sultry heat infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden.
This said, he led them up the mountain's brow,
And shew'd them all the shining fields below.
Dryden.

2. On earth, in opposition to heaven.
And let no tears from erring pity flow.
For one that's bless'd above, immortaliz'd below.

You are a charitable belswagger; my wife cried out fire, and you cried out for engines. Dryden.

BELT. n. s. [belt, Sax. balteus, Lat.] A girdle; a cincture in which a sword, or some weapon, is commonly hung.
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule. Shakspeare.
Ajax slew himself with the sword given him by Hector, and Hector was dragged about the walls of Troy by the belt given him by Ajax. South.
Then snatch'd the shining belt, with gold inlaid;
The belt Eurytion's artful hands had made.
Dryden.

To BELT.* v. a. [from the subst.] To encircle; to enclose as with a belt.
These ramparts seem intended to have had some effect even on the eye. Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and belting the hills far and wide with white, more especially if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facing, they must have been visible at a vast distance.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 67.

BE'LWETHER. n. s. [from bell and wether.] A sheep which leads the flock with a bell on his neck.
The fox will serve my sheep to gather,
And drive to follow after their belwether.
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.
To offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; to be a bawd to a belwether. Shakspeare.
The flock of sheep and belwether thinking to break into another's pasture, and being to pass over another bridge, justled till both fell into the ditch. Howell.

Bemock the modest moon. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

To BEMO'CK *at. To laugh at.

The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemock'd at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish
One dowle that's in my plume; my fellow ministers
Are like invulnerable. Shakspeare, Tempest.

To BEMO'IL. v. a. [be and moil, from mouiller, Fr.] To bedraggle; to bemire; to encumber with dirt and mire.

Thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled, how he left her with the horse upon her. Shakspeare.

BENCH. n. s. [benc, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,
An hundred nymphs sat side by side about. Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;
His lofty numbers, with so great a gust,
They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:
But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,
And broke the benches with their loud applause,
His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread.
Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law. Shakspeare.

Cyriac, whose grandsire on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause,
Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench. Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same way.

Fools to popular praise aspire,
Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;
While, from both benches, with redoubled sounds,
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds.
Dryden.

To BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
The thick young grass arose in fresher green.
Dryden.

Pownall, on the Study of Antiquities, p. 68.

BENEFI'CIALNESS. n. s. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

BENEFI'CIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or benefi- ciary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFI'CIARY.† n. s.

1. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe.

2. A person benefited by another.

His beneficiaries frequently made it their wonder, how the doctor should either know of them or their distress. Fell's Life of Hammond, § 2.

BENEFI'CIENCY.* n. s. [Fr. beneficience.] Kindness; benignity; graciousness.

They [the ungrateful] discourage the inclinations of noble minds, and make beneficiency cool unto acts of obligation, whereby the grateful world should subsist and have their consolation. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 17.

BENEFI'CIENT.* adj. [from beneficience. The French have also the verb beneficier. V. Cotgrave.]

As its tendency is necessarily beneficient, it is the proper object of gratitude and reward. A. Smith, Theor. of Hum. Sent.

BE'NEFIT. n. s. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakspeare.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalm ciii. 2.

Offer'd life
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith not void of works. Milton, P. L.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom, xvi. 24.

3. [In law.] Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or otherwise suffereth death for his transgression. Cowel.

To BE'NEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shaksp.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbuthnot.

To BE'NEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old and renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton on Educ.

To BENE'GROE.* v. a. [from be and negro; an unusual but forcible word.] To make extremely dark.

And if at the coming and appearance of the humanity of Christ, the sun shall be benegroed in darkness, as a petty light at the coming of a greater; how if you cast an eye upon the life of God. Hewyt, Sermons, (1658.) p. 79.

Surrounded with miseries, benegroed in more than Cimmerian, and that perpetual darkness too, &c. Ibid. p. 109.

To BENE'ME, or BENE'MPNE.* v. a. [from be and nempne, Sax. naman, nemnan, to name; pret. and part. benempt, bynempt. Chaucer uses the verb nempne, for name, Squire's Tale, ver. 10632. Dr. Johnson gives benempt as an adjective, when his example clearly proves it to be a verb; and defines it named, marked out, when it there means promised or given. The word in any sense is now obsolete.]

1. To name; to pronounce.

But say me, what is Algrind, he
That is so oft bynempt? Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

But, ere they did their utmost obsequy,
Sir Guyon more affection to increase,
Bynempt a sacred vow, which none should ay release. Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 60.

2. To promise; to give.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gayne,
Than kid or cosset, which I thee bynempt. Spenser, Shep. Cal. November.

BENE'MPT.† See To BENEME.

BENEPLA'CITURE.* n. s. [from beneplacitum, Lat. good pleasure.] Will; choice.

Hath he by his holy penmen told us, that either of the other ways was more suitable to his beneplaciture? Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, ch. 4.

To BENE'T. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane
They had begun the play. Shakspeare.

BENE'VOLENCE.† n. s. [benevolentia, Lat. benivolence, old Fr.]

1. Disposition to do good; kindness, charity; good will.

If Sir John Falstaff have committed disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you. Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life, and sense,
In one close system of benevolence. Pope, Ess. on Man.

2. The good done; the charity given.

That which we distribute to the poor, St. Paul calleth a blessing or benevolence. Outred, Transl. of Cope on the Proverbs, 1580. fol. 151. b.

3. A kind of tax.

This tax, called a benevolence, was devised by Edward IV. for which he sustained much envy. It was abolished by Richard III. Bacon, Hen. VII.

BENE'VOLENT. adj. [benevolens, benevolentia, Lat.] Kind; having good will, or kind inclinations.

Thou good old man, benevolent as wise. Pope.

Nature all
Is blooming and benevolent like thee. Thomson.

BENE'VOLENTLY.* adv. [from benevolent.] In a kind manner.

BENE'VOLENTNESS. n. s. The same with benevolence.

BENE'VOLOUS.* adj [Lat. benevolus, old Fr. benevole.] Kind; friendly.

A benevolous inclination is implanted into the very frame and temper of our church's constitution. Puller, Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 509.

BENGA'L. n. s. [from Bengal in the East Indies.] A sort of thin slight stuff, made of silk and hair, for women's apparel.

BE'NJAMIN.† n. s. A plant.

The odour of his sock was like to be neither musk nor benjamin. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

BE'NJAMIN. n. s. A gum. See BENZOIN.

To BENI'GHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shrowd with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' the center, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. Milton, Comus.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish. Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy and benight the sky. Garth.

The miserable race of men that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts,
Under the polar Bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heaven appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryden.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryden.

BENI'GN.† adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity. The earliest usage of the word, which Dr. Johnson has given, is in the Paradise Lost of Milton; about ten years before the publication of which, the word was apparently little known. See "Benign, gentle, &c." among "the unusual words" at the end of Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy, 1655.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair. Milton.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign. Milton.

We owe more to Heaven than to the sword,
The wish'd return of so benign a lord. Waller.

What Heav'n bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back in sacrifice and adoration. South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferiour creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign. Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men. Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons; but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexes. Arbuthnot.

BENIGN Disease, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small-pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes. Quincy.

BENI'GNANT.* adj. [from benign.] Kind; gracious; actually good.

Defend my heart, benignant Power,
From amorous looks and smiles;
And shield me, in my gayer hour,
From love's destructive wiles.
Maiden's Wish, Collect. of Eng. Songs, i. iv. 20.

If what has now been stated should be urged by the enemies of Christianity, as if its influence on the mind were not benignant, let it be remembered, that Johnson's temperament was melancholy, of which such direful apprehensions of futurity are often a common effect.
Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 314.

BENI'GNITY.† n. s. [old Fr. benigneté.]

1. Graciousness; goodness.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions.
Brown.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it.
South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience.
Hooker.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood.
Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in choleric bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus.
Wiseman.

BENI'GNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light.
Waller.

Oh truly good, and truly great!
For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set.
Prior.

BE'NISON.† n. s. [old Fr. beniçon, bonne priere; benéison, benediction. Lacombe.] Blessing; benediction; not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see
That face of her's again; therefore, begone
Without our grace, our love, our benison.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou, fair moon,
That wont'st to love the traveller's benison.
Milton, Comus.

BE'NNET. n. s. An herb; the same with avens.

BENT.† n. s. [from the verb To bend.]

1. The state of being bent; a state of flexure: curvity.

Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little.
Walton's Angler.

2. Degree of flexure.

There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of bows; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them.
Bp. Wilkins.

3. Declivity. [old Fr. pente, the slope of a hill. Dryden has adopted the word from Chaucer.]

A mountain stood,
Threatening from high, and overlook'd the wood:
Beneath the lowering brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent.
Dryden.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent.
Shakspeare.

We both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet.
Shakspeare.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees.
Locke.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy!
Spenser, F. Q.

To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found
Be you beneath the sky.
Shakspeare.

He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York.
Bacon.

Soon inclin'd to admit delight,
The bent of nature!
Milton, P. L.

The golden age was first; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;
And, with a native bent, did good pursue.
Dryden.

Let there be propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry.
South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five.
Atterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it.
Hooker.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent, and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government.
Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition; shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scoul at.
Shakspeare.

Two of them have the very bent of honour.
Shakspeare.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand.
Dryd.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches.
Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass. [Germ. bintz, from binden, to bind, a rush; so our bent may here be from band.]

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness naught reversed.
Drayton, Nymph.

Then the flowers of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth.
Bacon, Essay of Gardens.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair.
Peacham.

BE'NTING Time.† [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare benting times, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home.
Dryden.

The pigeon never knoweth woe,
Until she doth a benting go.
Old Proverb.

To BENU'M. v. a. [benumen, Saxon.]

1. To make torpid; to take away the sensation and use of any part by cold, or by some obstruction.

So stings a snake that to the fire is brought,
Which harmless lay with cold benumm'd before.
Fairfax.

The winds blow moist and keen, which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumm'd.
Milton, P. L.

My sinews slaken, and an icy stiffness
Benums my blood.
Denham.

It seizes upon the vitals, and benums the senses; and where there is no sense, there can be no pain.
South.

Will they be the less dangerous, when warmth shall bring them to themselves, because they were once frozen and benummed with cold?
L'Estrange.

2. To stupify.

These accents were her last: the creeping death Benumm'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath.
Dryden.

BENU'MMEDNESS.* n. s. [from benum. A very old Eng. substantive, occurring in Barret's Alvearie.] The state of being benummed.

Set before the eyes of all the world the benummedness and hardness of such consciences.
The Apologie of the Prince of Orange, 1581, Sign. E. 2.

Preternatural sleep is a committing a rape upon the body and mind, whereby the offensive superfluities, by their violent assaults, force the brain to a benummedness for its destruction.
Smith's Old Age, p. 131.

When there is a benumbedness, or searedness, upon the grand principle of spiritual sense, as it is expressed in Ephes. xix. 4. we come "to be past feeling," no wonder then if sin and Satan inflict blow after blow, in the most fatal manner, upon the soul.
South, Sermons, ix. 55.

BE'NZOIN. n. s. A medicinal kind of resin imported from the East Indies, and vulgarly called benjamin. It is procured by making an incision in a tree, whose leaves resemble those of the lemon-tree. The best comes from Siam, and is called amygdaloides, being interspersed with white spots, resembling broken almonds.

The beryl of our lapidaries is only a fine sort of cornelian of a more deep bright red, sometimes with a cast of yellow, and more transparent than the common cornelian. Woodward.

To BESA'INT.* v. a. [from be and saint.] To make a saint of.

As absurd, no doubt, is their canonizing, securing and besainting themselves in this life, upon every slight, premature persuasion that they are in Christ. Hammond's Serm. p. 611.

Make antiquity
A patron of black patches, and deny
That perukes are unlawful, and besaint
Old Jezebel for shewing how to paint.
John Hall's Poems, p. 3.

To BESCA'TTER.* v. a. [from be and scatter.] To throw loosely over.

Her goodly lockes adowne her backe did flow
Unto her waiste, with flowres bescattered.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 46.

To BESCO'RN.* v. a. [from be and scorn.] To mock at: to scorn.

Then was he bescorned, that onely should have been honoured in all things.
Chauc. Pars. Tale, ed. Urry, p. 195.

To BESCRA'TCH.* v. a. [from be and scratch; one of our oldest verbs.] To tear with the nails, or with any thing pointed.

Nor she had nothing slow ybe
For to bescrachin of hir face,
And for to rent in many place
Hir clothes. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose.

For sore he swat, and running through that same
Thick forest, was bescracht, and both his feet nigh lame. Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 3.

To BESCRA'WL.* v. a. [from be and scrawl. See To SCRAWL.] To scribble over.

These wretched projectors of ours, that bescrawl their pamphlets every day with new forms of government for our church.
Milton, Reason of Church Gov. i. 1.

To BESCRE'EN. v. a. [from screen.] To cover with a screen; to shelter; to conceal.

What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumblest on my counsel! Shakspeare.

To BESCRI'BBLE.* v. a. [from be and scribble. See To SCRIBBLE.] To write on.

That power the undiscerning canonist hath improperly usurped in his court-leet, and bescribbled with a thousand trifling impertinences.
Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 12.

To BESCU'MBER.* v. a. [from cumber.] To load with something useless or impertinent.

Did Block bescumber
Statutes' white suit, wi' the parchment lace there?
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Mortimer's numbers
[The pedant] with much Esculine filth bescumbers.
Marston's Satires, iii. 9.

To BESE'E.* v. n. part. beseen. [Sax. beþeon.] To look; to mind. One of our oldest verbs.

I have synned bitrayinge rightful blood. And they saiden, What to us? Bisee thee. [In our established version, See thou to that.]
Wicliffe, S. Matt. xxvii.

To BESE'ECH. v. a. pret. I besought, I have besought. [from þecan, Sax. versoeken, Dutch.]

1. To intreat; to supplicate; to implore: sometimes before a person.

I beseech you, Sir, pardon me; it is only a letter from my brother, that I have not all over-read.
Shakspeare.

I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Philemon, 10.

I, in the anguish of my heart, beseech you
To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul.
Addison.

2. To beg; to ask: before a thing.

But Eve fell humble, and besought
His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint.
Milton, P. L.

Before I come to them, I beseech your patience, whilst I speak something to ourselves here present.
Spratt.

BESE'ECH.* n. s. [from the verb.] Request.

Good madam, hear the suit that Edith urges
With such submiss beseeches.
Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

BESE'ECHER.* n. s. [from beseech.] The person who makes request or supplication.

Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill.
Shakspeare, Sonn. 135.

Thou art the God, have pity on thy humble beseechers.
Wh. Duty of Man, Pr. for the Peace of the Ch.

To BESE'EK.* v. a. [Sax. þecan. See To SEEK.] To request; to beseech. The old and genuine word for beseech.

We beseke you of mercie and socour:
Have mercie on our woe and our distresse.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

Recounting which, how would he sob and shriek!
And to be young again of Jove beseek.
Sackville, Induct. Mirrour for Magistrates.

He arriving with the fall of day,
Drew to the gate, and there with prayers meeke
And myld entreaty lodging did for her beseeke.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 37.

To BESE'EM. v. a. [beziemen, Dutch.] To become; to be fit; to be decent for.

What form of speech, or behaviour beseemeth us in our prayers to Almighty God? Hooker.

This oversight
Beseems thee not, in whom such virtues spring.
Fairfax.

Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their brave beseeming ornaments. Shaks.

What thoughts he had, beseems not me to say;
Though some surmize he went to fast and pray.
Dryden.

BESE'EMING.* n. s. [from beseem.] Comeliness. Barret.

BESE'EMLY.* adj. [from beseem.] Fit; becoming; decent.

See to their seats they hye with merry glee,
And in beseemly order sitten there.
Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

BESE'EN.† particip. [from besee, Skinner. This word I have found only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says. But see BESEE. In our older writers, this participle is besey; as "evil besey," ill beseen; "richly besey," of a rich appearance. V. Tyrwhitt, Gloss. Chauc. Spenser uses it more than once.] Adapted; adjusted; becoming.

Then her they crowne their goddesse and their queene,
And decke with flowers thy altars well beseene.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Love.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen
Armed in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments, right well beseen.
Spenser, F. Q.

To BESE'T.† v. a. pret. I beset; I have beset. [Goth. bisatjan, Mar. xii. 1. Sax. beþæcan, beþæt.]

1. To besiege; to hem in; to inclose; as with a siege.

Follow him that's fled;
The thicket is beset, he cannot 'scape. Shakspeare.

Now, Cæsar, let thy troops beset our gates,
And bar each avenue ———
Cato shall open to himself a passage. Addison.

I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch
Beset with ills and cover'd with misfortunes.
Addison.

2. To waylay; to surround.

Draw forth thy weapon, we're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress. Shakspeare.

The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just. Milton.

True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil besets or danger lies in his way.
Locke.

3. To embarrass; to perplex; to entangle without any means of escape.

Now, daughter Sylvia, you are hard beset.
Shakspeare.

Thus Adam, sore beset, reply'd. Milton.

Sure, or I read her visage much amiss,
Or grief besets her hard. Rowe.

We be in this world beset with sundry uneasinesses, distracted with different desires. Locke.

4. To fall upon; to harass. Not used.

But they him spying, both with greedy force
At once upon him ran, and him beset
With strokes of mortal steel. Spenser, F. Q.

To BESHI'NE.* v. n. [from be and shine.] To shine upon. An unusual word.

He had a wyf,
That he lovid as hertlich as his own lyf;
[She] was as fair a creature as sun might beshine.
Hist. of Beryn, Urry's Ch. p. 603.

To BESHRE'W.† v. a. The original of this word is somewhat obscure; as it evidently implies to wish ill, some derive it from beschryen, Germ. to enchant. Topsel, in his Book of Animals, deduces it from the shrew mouse, an animal, says he, so poisonous, that its bite is a severe curse. A shrew likewise signifies a scolding woman; but its origin is not known. This is Dr. Johnson's account of the etymology. But see SHREW. Beshrew is probably from the Sax. verb. beþýpe-pian, particip. beþýþþe, ensnared; the verb properly meaning to take by stratagem or snare. Mr. Tooke thinks beshrew to be the imperative of this verb, beþýpepe, and to mean, be thou vexed, Div. of Purley, vol. ii. p. 210. To this I cannot accede. — "That they might take Jesus by subtilty," S. Matt. xxvi. 4. is in the Sax. mid þacne beþýpan. Be thou taken in some snare is, therefore, an explanation of better authority than Mr. Tooke's unsupported assertion; and is moreover illustrated, I think, by a passage in Gower, where beshrewed seems to mean full of subtilty, and is a just picture of hypocrisy.

This double hypocrisie,
With his devout apparancie,

A vyser set upon his face,
Whereof, toward the worldës grace,
He seemeth to be right well thewed;
And yet his herte is all beshrewed.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

1. To wish a curse to.
Nay, quoth the cock; but I beshrew us both,
If I believe a saint upon his oath. Dryden, Fables.

2. To happen ill to.
Beshrew thee, cousin, which did'st lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair. Shaksp.
Now much beshrew my manners, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. Shaksp.

To BESHU'T.* v. a. [from be and shut.] To shut up. Obsolete.
They have my joié fully let,
Sith Bialacoil they have beshet
Fro me in prison wickedly.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 4488.

BESI'DE. } BESI'DES. } prep. [from be and side.]

1. At the side of another; near.
Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,
Ennobled since by this great funeral. Fairfax.
He caused me to sit down beside him. Bacon.
At his right hand Victory
Sat eagle-wing'd: beside him hung his bow.
Milton, P. L.
Fair Lavinia fled the fire
Before the gods, and stood beside her sire. Dryd.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows;
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows.
Gay, Pastorals.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
Unheard, unknown,
He makes his moan. Pope, Ode, St. Cecilia.

2. Over and above.
Doubtless, in man there is a nature found,
Beside the senses, and above them far.
Sir J. Davies.
In brutes, besides the exercise of sensitive perception and imagination, there are lodged instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty. Hale.
We may be sure there were great numbers of wise and learned men, beside those whose names are in the Christian records, who took care to examine our Saviour's history.
Addison, on the Christian Religion.
Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, are abstracted from ideas of sense. Addison on Virg. Geor.

3. Not according to, though not contrary; as we say, some things are beside nature, some are contrary to nature.
The Stoicks did hold a necessary connexion of causes; but they believed, that God doth act præter & contra naturum, besides and against nature.
Bp. Bramhall, against Hobbes.
To say a thing is a chance, as it relates to second causes, signifies no more, than that there are some events beside the knowledge, purpose, expectation, and power of second causes. South.
Providence often disposes of things by a method beside, and above the discoveries of man's reason.
South.
It is beside my present business to enlarge upon this speculation. Locke.

4. Out of; in a state of deviating from.
You are too wilful blame,
And, since your coming here, have done
Enough to put him quite beside his patience.
Shakspeare.
Of vagabonds we say,
That they are ne'er beside their way. Hudibras.
These may serve as landmarks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

5. Before a reciprocal pronoun, out of; as beside himself; out of the order of rational beings; out of his wits.
They be carried besides themselves, to whom the dignity of publick prayer doth not discover somewhat more fitness in men of gravity, than in children. Hooker.
Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear. Shaksp.
Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself: much learning doth make thee mad.
Acts, xxvi. 24.

BESIDE.† } BESIDES. } adv.

1. More than that; over and above.
If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in peril.
Shakspeare.
Besides, you know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend. Dryd.
That man that doth not know, those things which are of necessity for him to know; is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides.
Tillotson.
Some wonder, that the Turk never attacks this treasury. But, besides that he has attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians kept too watchful an eye. Addison.

2. Not in this number; out of this class; not included here.
The men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? Genesis, xix. 12.
Outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world besides, must keep faith among themselves.
Locke.
All that we feel of it, begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside as much an empty shade,
An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead. Pope.
And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride
Still to charm those who charm the world beside.
Pope.

3. Except.
We would have omniscience and all parts of divinity besides the holiness; yet alas, those without these would prove but fatal acquests.
Decay of Christian Piety, p. 349.

BESI'DERY. n. s. A species of pear.

To BESI'EGE. v. a. [from siege.] To beleaguer; to lay siege to; to beset with armed forces; to endeavour to win a town or fortress, by surrounding it with an army, and forcing the defendants, either by violence or famine, to give admission.
And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down.
Deuteronomy, xxviii. 52.
The queen with all the northern earls and lords,
Intend here to besiege you in your castle. Shaksp.

BESI'EGER. n. s. [from besiege.] One employed in a siege.
There is hardly a town taken, in the common forms, where the besiegers have not the worse of the bargain. Swift.

To BESI'T.* v. a. [from be and sit. See To SIT.] To suit; to become. Not now in use; and ignorantly converted into befit by some editors of Spenser, who supposed the author not to know the language of his own and former times. Chaucer and Gower repeatedly use sit in this sense of become.
Me ill besits, that in derdoing arms
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baytes and pleasing charmes,
With which weake men thou witchest to attend.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 10.
And that which is for ladies most besitting,
To stint all strife, and foster friendly peace,
Was from those dames so farre and so unfitting,
As that, instead of praying them surcease,
They did much more their cruelty encrease.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 19.

To BESLA'VE.* v. a. [from be and slave.] To subjugate; to make a slave of.
He that hath once fixed his heart upon the face of an harlot, and hath beslaved himself to a bewitching beauty, casts off at once all fear of God, respect to laws, shame of the world, regard of his estate, care of wife, children, friends, reputation, patrimony, body, soul. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 116.
Whom sad diseases have beslaved to drugs and diets. Quarles, Judgement and Mercy.
It [covetousness] blinds justice, poisons charity, strangles conscience, beslaves the affections, betrays friendship, breaks all relations. Ibid.

To BESLI'ME.* v. a. [from be and slime.] To soil; to dawb.
Our fry of writers may beslime his fame,
And give his action that adulterate name.
B. Jonson, Poetastor Prol.

To BESLU'BBER. v. a. [from slubber.] To dawb; to smear.
He persuaded us to tickle our noses with speargrass, and make them bleed; and then beslubber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true men. Shakspeare.

To BESME'AR.† v. a. [from smear. See To SMEAR.]

1. To bedawb; to overspread with something that sticks on.
He lay as in a dream of deep delight,
Besmear'd with precious balm, whose virtuous might Did heal his wounds. Spenser, F. Q.
That face of his I do remember well;
Yet when I saw it last, it was besmear'd
As black as Vulcan. Shakspeare.
First Moloch! horrid king! besmear'd with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Milton, P. L.
Her fainting hand let fall the sword, besmear'd
With blood. Denham.
Her gushing blood the pavement all besmear'd.
Dryden.

2. To soil; to foul.
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmear it. Shakspeare.
Then should a great deal of good paper escape the misery of being besmeared by his pen.
Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, ii. 14.

BESME'ARER.* n. s. [from besmear.] One who soils or besmears any thing.
Sherwood.

To BESMI'RCH.† v. a. [from be and smirch. See To SMIRCH.] To soil; to discolour. Not in use.
Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no soil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakspeare.
Our gayness, and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shaksp.

To BESMO'KE.† v. a. [from smoke.]

1. To foul with smoke. Kersey.

2. To harden or dry in smoke.

Of fustian he wered a gipon,
Alle besmotred with his haberjeon.
Chaucer, Canterb. T. Prol.

To BESNO'W.* v. a. [Sax. beꝛnipeð, from ꝛnipan, to snow.] To scatter in abundance like snow; to whiten as snow.

The presents every day ben newed,
He was with giftes al besnewed,
The people was of him so glad.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.
Another shall
Impearl thy teeth, a third thy white and small
Hand shall besnow. — Carew, Poems, p. 95.

BESNU'FFED.* adj. [from snuff.] Smeared with snuff.
Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face. Young, Satire 6.

BE'SOM. n. s. [beȝm, beȝma, Sax.] An instrument to sweep with.
Bacon commended an old man that sold besoms: a proud young fellow came to him for a besom upon trust; the old man said, Borrow of thy back and belly, they will never ask thee again; I shall dun thee every day. Bacon.
I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts. Isaiah, xiv. 22.

To BESO'RT. v. a. [from sort.] To suit; to fit; to become.
Such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you. Shaks. K. Lear.

BESO'RT. n. s. [from the verb.] Company; attendance; train.
I crave fit disposition for my wife,
With such accommodation and besort,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare, Othello.

To BESO'T. v. a. [from sot.]
1. To infatuate; to stupify; to dull; to take away the senses.
Swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude,
Crams and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, Comus.
Or fools besotted with their crimes,
That know not how to shift betimes. Hudibras.
He is besotted, and has lost his reason; and what then can there be for religion to take hold of him by? South.
2. To make to doat, with on. Not much used.
Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights. Shaksp.
Trust not thy beauty; but restore the prize,
Which he, besotted on that face and eyes,
Would rend from us. Dryden.

BESO'TTEDLY.* adv. [from besotted.] In a foolish, besotted manner.
After ten or twelve years' prosperous war and contestation with tyranny, basely and besottedly to run their necks again into the yoke, which they have broken. Milton, Ready Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

BESO'TTEDNESS.* n. s. [from besotted.] Stupidity; infatuation.
God, when men sin outrageously and will not be admonished, gives over chastising them, perhaps by pestilence, fire, sword, or famine, which may all turn to their good; and takes up his severest punishments, hardness, besottedness of heart, and idolatry to their perdition.
Milton, of True Religion, &c. ad fin.

BESO'UGHT.† [part. passive of beseech, and of beseek; which see.]
Hasten to appease
The incensed Father, and the incensed Son,
While pardon may be found, in time besought.
Milton.

To BESPA'NGLE. v. a. [from spangle.] To adorn with spangles; to besprinkle with something shining.
Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
The heav'ns bespangling with dishevell'd light. Pope.

To BESPA'TTER.† v. a. [from spatter.]
1. To soil by throwing filth; to spot or sprinkle with dirt or water.
Those who will not take vice into their bosoms, shall yet have it bespatter their faces.
Government of the Tongue.
His weapons are the same which women and children use; a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Swift.
2. To asperse with reproach.
Fair Britain, in the monarch blest,
Whom never faction could bespatter. Swift.
If the calumniator bespatters and belyes me, I will endeavour to convince him by my life and manners, but not by being like himself.
South, Sermons, viii. 198.

To BESPA'WL.† v. a. [from spawl.] To dawb with spittle.
This remonstrant would invest himself conditionally with all the rheum of the town, that he might have sufficient to bespaul his brethren.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Arbuthnot.
A heavy writer was to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.
2. To make way by a previous apology.
My preface looks as if I were afraid of my reader, by so tedious a bespeaking of him. Dryden.
3. To forebode; to tell something beforehand.
They started fears, bespoke dangers, and formed ominous prognosticks, in order to scare the allies.
Swift.
4. To speak to; to address. This sense is chiefly poetical.
With hearty words her knight she gan to chear,
And, in her modest manner, thus bespake,
Dear knight. Spenser, F. Q.
At length with indignation thus he broke
His awful silence, and the powers bespoke. Dryd.
Then staring on her with a ghastly look,
And hollow voice, he thus the queen bespoke.
Dryden.
5. To betoken; to shew.
When the abbot of St. Martin was born, he had so little of the figure of a man, that it bespoke him rather a monster. Locke.
He has dispatched me hence,
With orders that bespeak a mind composed.
Addison.

BESPE'AKER. n. s. [from bespeak.] One that bespeaks any thing.

A purple flood
Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood:
The bed besprinkles, and bedews the ground. Dryd.

BESPRI'NKLER.* n. s. [from besprinkle.] One that sprinkles any thing. Sherwood.

To BESPI'RT, or BESPURT.* v. a. [from be and spirt, which see.] To throw out scatteringly.
It will be nothing disagreeing from Christian meekness, to handle such a one in a rougher accent, and to send home his haughtiness well bespurted with his own holy-water.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

To BESPU'TTER. v. a. [from sputter.] To sputter over something; to dawb any thing by sputtering, or throwing out spittle upon it.

BEST.† adj. the superlative from good. [Goth. batista; bet, betepa, betyt, beyt, good, better, best, Saxon.]
1. Most good; that which has good qualities in the highest degree.
And he will take your fields, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. 1 Sam. viii. 14.
When the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker.
When he is best, he is little more than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. Shakspeare.
I think it a good argument to say, the infinitely wise God hath made it so: and therefore it is best. But it is too much confidence of our own wisdom, to say, I think it best, and therefore God hath made it so. Locke.

An evil intention perverts the best actions, and makes them sins. Addison.

2. The best. The utmost power; the strongest endeavour; the most; the highest perfection.

I profess not talking: only this,
Let each man do his best. Shakspeare.
The duke did his best to come down. Bacon.
He does this to the best of his power. Locke.
My friend, said he, our sport is at the best. Addison.

3. To make the best. To carry to its greatest perfection; to improve to the utmost.

Let there be freedom to carry their commodities where they may make the best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Bacon.
His father left him an hundred drachmas; Alnaschar, in order to make the best of it, laid it out in glasses. Addison.
We set sail, and made the best of our way, till we were forced, by contrary winds, into St. Remo. Addison.

BEST. adv. [from well.] In the highest degree of goodness.

He shall dwell in that place where he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best. Deut. xxiii. 16.

BEST.† is sometimes used in composition, Dr. Johnson observes; but in the following and similar words it is arbitrary.

My best-beloved, and approved friend. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
These latter best-betrust spies had some of them further instructions, to draw off the best friends and servants of Perkin, by making remonstrances to them, how weakly his enterprize and hopes were built. Bacon, Hen. VII.
The best-condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
By this law of loving even our enemies, the christian religion discovers itself to be the most generous and best-natured institution that ever was in the world. Tillotson.
Which might have aw'd the best-resolved of men. Milton, S. A. v. 847.
His death (whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,)
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best-temper'd courage in his troops.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

To BESTA'IN. v. a. [from stain.] To mark with stains; to spot.

We will not line his thin bestained cloke
With our pure honours. Shakspeare.

To BESTE'AD.† v. a. I bested; I have bested, and bestad. [from stead.]

1. To profit.

Hence, vain deluding joys,
The brood of folly, without father bred,
How little you bestead,
Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys.
Milton, Il Pens.

2. To treat; to accommodate. This should rather be bested.

They shall pass through it hardly bestead, and hungry. Isaiah, viii. 21.

3. To dispose.

What the foule evil hath thee so bestad?
Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

BE'STIAL. adj. [from beast.]

1. Belonging to a beast, or to the class of beasts.

His wild disorder'd walk, his haggard eyes,
Did all the bestial citizens surprize. Dryden.

2. Having the qualities of beasts; brutal; below the dignity of reason or humanity; carnal.

I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. Shaksp. Othello.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite, in change of lust. Shaksp.
For those, the race of Israel oft forsook
Their Living Strength, and unfrequented left
His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods. Milton, P. L.
The things promised are not gross and carnal, such as may court and gratify the most bestial part of us. Decay of Piety.

BESTIA'LITY.† n. s. [old Fr. bestialité.] The quality of beasts; degeneracy from human nature.

They tickle themselves with the wanton remembrances of their younger bestialities.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 189.
What can be a greater absurdity, than to affirm bestiality to be the essence of humanity, and darkness the centre of light?
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

To BE'STIALIZE.* v. a. [from bestial.] To make like a beast.

In all the true pleasures which ever fell to my lot, they [reason and reflection] had a considerable share; and where they are wanting, there is no such thing as pleasure of any kind for me; and humanity is debased and bestialized where it is otherwise. Phil. Letters on Physiog. (1751,) p. 87.

BE'STIALLY.† adv. [from bestial.] Brutally; in a manner below humanity.

To BE'STIATE.* v. a. [from beast.] To make like a beast; to bestialize.

Drunkenness beastiates the heart, and spoils the brain; overthrows the faculties and organs of repentance, and resolution.
Junius, Sin Stigmatized, 1639. p. 235.

To BESTI'CK.† v. a. preter. I bestuck, I have bestuck. [from stick.] To stick over with any thing; to mark any thing by infixing points or spots here and there.

Truth shall retire,
Bestuck with slanderous darts; and works of faith
Rarely be found. Milton, P. L.
I have gained a name bestuck, or, as I may say, bedecked with the reproaches and reviles of this modest confuter. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

To BESTI'NK.* v. n. part. bestunk. To stink. Sherwood.

To BESTI'R.† v. a. [from stir.]

1. To put into vigorous action. It is seldom used otherwise than with the reciprocal pronoun.

As when men wont to watch
On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouze and bestir themselves ere well awake.
Milton, P. L.
Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk
Whatever earth, all-bearing mother yields,
She gathers. Milton, P. L.
But, as a dog that turns the spit,
Bestirs himself, and plies his feet
To climb the wheel, but all in vain,
His own weight brings him down again. Hudibras.
What aileth them, that they must needs bestir themselves to get in air, to maintain the creature's life? Ray.

2. It is used by Shakspeare with a common word, Dr. Johnson says; and so it is in Ben Jonson, with a word often vulgarly applied to it in modern times.

I am scarce in breath, my lord. — No marvel you have so bestirred your valour, you cowardly rascal. Shakspeare.
How should we bustle forward? Give some counsel
How to bestir our stumps i'these cross ways.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

BE'STNESS.* n. s. [from best.] The most excellent state of a thing.

Generally the bestness of a thing (that we may so call it) is best discerned by the necessary use.
Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, § 4.

To BESTO'RM.* v. n. [from be and storm.] To rage; to storm.

As, when all is smooth and prosperous without, a man may shelter himself from the persecutions of his conscience; so, when all is calm and serene within, he may shelter himself there from the persecutions of the world: but when both are bestormed, he hath no refuge to fly to.
Dr. Scott's Works, ed. 1718. vol. ii. 255.
All is sea besides,
Sinks under us, bestorms, and then devours.
Young, Night Th. 4.

To BESTO'W.† v. a. [Sax. berœndan, berœb, Dutch, bestedan.]

1. To give; to confer upon; commonly with upon.

All men would willingly have yielded him praise; but his nature was such as to bestow it upon himself, before any could give it. Sidney.
All the dedicate things of the house of the Lord, did they bestow upon Baalim. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

2. Sometimes with to.

Sir Julius Cæsar had, in his office, the disposition of the six clerks' places; which he had bestowed to such persons as he thought fit. Clarend.

3. To give as charity or bounty.

Our Saviour doth plainly witness, that there should not be as much as a cup of cold water bestowed for his sake, without reward. Hooker.
And though he was unsatisfied in getting,
Which was a sin; yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely. Shakspeare.
Spain to your gift alone her Indies owes;
For what the pow'rful takes not, he bestows.
Dryden.
You always exceed expectations: as if yours was not your own, but to bestow on wanting merit. Dryden.

4. To give in marriage.

Good reverend father, make my person yours;
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
Shakspeare.
I could have bestowed her upon a fine gentleman, who extremely admired her. Tatler.

5. To give as a present.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw,
And fat of victims which his friends bestow.
Dryden.

6. To apply.

The sea was not the duke of Marlborough's element; otherwise the whole force of the war would infallibly have been bestowed there. Swift.

7. To lay out upon.

And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, sheep, or for wine. Deut. xiv. 26.

8. To lay up; to stow; to place.

And when he came to the Tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house. 2 Kings, v. 24.

BESTO'WAL.* n. s. [from bestow.] Disposal.

BESTO'WER.† n. s. [from bestow.] Giver; one that confers any thing; disposer.

They all agree in making one supreme God; and that there are several beings that are to be worshipped under him; some as the bestowers of thrones, but subordinate to the Supreme.
Stillingfleet.
Where benefits
Are ill conferr'd, as to unworthy men
That turn them to bad uses, the bestower
For wanting judgement how and on whom, to place them,
Is partly guilty. Beaum. and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

To BESTRA'DDLE.* v. a. To BESTRIDE, which see. See also To STRADDLE.

BESTRA'UGHT.† particip. [Of this parti- ciple I have not found the verb; by analogy we may derive it from bestract; perhaps it is corrupted from distraught. Such is Dr. Johnson's remark. He might have found the part. bestract, however, in the old dictionaries of Minsheu and Sherwood; in that of the former, with the interpretation "distractus mente." i. e. distracted; in that of the latter, "bestract or bestraught, distract or distraught." Our elder language exhibits also bestraughted in the sense of distracted.] Distracted; mad; out of one's senses; out of one's wits.

Bestrawghted heads relief hath found
By musick's pleasaunt swete delightes.
Paradise of Dainty Devises, (1576,) No. 53.

Ask Marian, the fat alewife, if she knew me not. What; I am not bestraught. Shakspeare.

To BESTRE'W.† v. a. particip. pass. bestrewed, or bestrown. Sax. beꞇpypeb. See To STREW.] To sprinkle over.

So thick bestrown,
Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood.
Milton, P. L.

To BESTRI'DE.† v. a. I bestrid; I have bestrid, or bestridden. Sax. beꞇpiban hopꞇ, to bestride an horse.]

1. To stride over any thing; to have any thing between one's legs.

Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world
Like a colossus. Shakspeare.

Make him bestride the ocean, and mankind
Ask his consent to use the sea and wind. Waller.

2. To step over.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Shakspeare.

3. It is often used in the consequential sense for to ride on.

He bestrides the lazy pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shaksp.

That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid:
That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd.
Shakspeare.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride.
Dryden.

The bounding steed you pompously bestride,
Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride.
Pope.

4. It is used sometimes of a man standing over something which he defends: the present mode of war has put this sense out of use.

He bestrid
An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee. Shakspeare.

If thou see me down in the battle and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship. Shakspeare.

He doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life, under great Bolingbroke. Shaks.

To BESTU'D.† v. a. [from stud.] To adorn with studs, or shining prominences.

Her star-bestudded crown.
Drayton, Ep. of King John to Matilda.

The unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton, Comus.

To BESWI'KE.* v. a [Sax. beꞇpican, to entice; Iceland. swikia. One of our oldest verbs, repeatedly used by Gower; in the following passage well applied to the Syrens.] To allure.

In women's voice they singe,
With notes of so great likynge,
Of such measure, of such musicke,
Whereof the shippes they beswike,
That passen by the costes there.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

BET.† n. s. [peꞇꞇian, to wager; peꞇ, a wager, Sax. from which the etymologists derive bet. I should rather imagine it to come from beꞇan, to mend, encrease, or better, as a bet encreases the original wager, Dr. Johnson says. What is meant by a bet encreasing the wager, I know not. The etymology might belong to biban, to abide by, full as well as to beꞇan; and perhaps the Goth. beita, to strive against, may not be disregarded. But see WAGER.] A wager; something laid to be won upon certain conditions.

The hoary fool, who many days,
Has struggled with continu'd sorrow,
Renews his hope, and blindly lays
The desp'rate bet upon to-morrow. Prior.

His pride was in piquette,
Newmarket fame, and judgement at a bet. Pope.

To BET. v. a. [from the noun.] To wager; to stake at a wager.

He drew a good bow: and dead? John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much upon his head. Shakspeare.

He flies the court for want of clothes,
Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet.
B. Jonson.

The god, unhappily engag'd,
Complain'd, and sigh'd, and cry'd, and fretted,
Lost every earthly thing he betted. Prior.

BET. The old preterite of beat.

He staid for a better hour, till the hammer had wrought and bet the party more pliant. Bacon.

To BETA'KE.† v. a. [preter. I betook; part. pass. betaken. [Sax. beꞇæcan.]

1. To commit, or entrust, or deliver. This is the meaning of the Sax. word, is so given in our old lexicography, and is what Spenser intends (as he elsewhere repeatedly intends) in the following passage, which Dr. Johnson has cited to illustrate his erroneous definition of betake in the first instance, viz. to take or seize. The sense of deliver, or commit, is of the highest authority in our language. See Chaucer, Canterb. Tales, ver. 3748. Wicliffe, S. Matt. xxvi. "What wolen ye give to me, and I schal bitake him to you?" See also Barret's Alv. 1580.

Then to his handes that writt he did betake,
Which he disclosing read.
Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 25.

Give them the threefold charity, which thou once demandest of Peter, what time thou didst betake unto him the charge of thy sleep.
Wh. Duty of Man, Pr. for the Peace of the Ch.

2. To have recourse to; with the reciprocal pronoun.

The adverse party betaking itself to such practices as men embrace, when they behold things brought to desperate extremities. Hooker.

Thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. Shakspeare.

The rest, in imitation, to like arms
Betook them, and the neighbouring hills up tore.
Milton.

3. To apply; with the reciprocal pronoun.

With ease such fond chimeras we pursue,
As fancy frames for fancy to subdue;
But when ourselves to action we betake,
It shuns the mint, like gold that chymists make.
Dryden.

As my observations have been the light whereby I have steered my course, so I betake myself to them again. Woodward.

4. To move; to remove. With the pronoun; understood in Spenser.

Then to her iron waggon she betakes,
And with her bears the foul well-favour'd witch.
Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 28.

Soft she withdrew; and, like a wood nymph light,
Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
Betook her to the groves. Milton, P. L.

They both betook them several ways;
Both to destroy. Milton, P. L.

I observed to the windward of me a black cloud falling to the earth in long trails of rain, which made me betake myself for shelter to a house.
Tatler, No. 218.

BETA'UGHT.* pret. of betake, in the sense of commit or entrust. [Sax. beꞇæchꞇe.] Obsolete.

In Hope I wool comfortid be;
For Love when he betaught her me,
Said that Hope, where so I go,
Should aie be relese to my wo.
Chaucer, Rom. of the R. 4438.

That is, when Love committed or gave her to me. Spenser uses betake in the same way, omitting to.

Into those theevish dens he went,
And thence did all the spoyles and threasures take,
— Of which the best he did his Love betake.
F. Q. vi. xi. 51.

That is, did give to his Love.

To BETE'EM. v. a. [from teem.] To bring forth; to bestow; to give.

So would I, said th' enchaunter, glad and fain
Beteem to you this sword, you to defend; —
But that this weapon's powre I well have kend,
To be contrary to the work that ye intend.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 19.

Rain, which I could well
Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

BE'TEL.* n. s. An Indian shrub, growing like a vine, of great celebrity in the East; the leaf of which long has been, and is to this day, highly prized by the natives and others. The betel-nut is the produce of a different tree. See BETLE.

Opium, coffee, the root of betel, tears of poppy, and tobacco, condense the spirits.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 312.

To BETHI'NK.† v. a. I bethought; I have bethought. [Goth. bithagkan, Sax. beðencan, beðohꞇ.] To recal to reflection, to bring back to consideration, or recollection. It is generally used with the reciprocal pronoun, and of before the subject of thought.

They were sooner in danger than they could almost bethink themselves of change. Sidney.

I have bethought me of another fault. Shaksp.

I, better bethinking myself, and misliking his determination, gave him this order. Ralegh.

He himself,
Insatiable of glory, had lost all:
Yet of another plea bethought him soon.
Milton, P. R.

The nets were laid, yet the birds could never bethink themselves, till hamper'd and past recovery.
L'Estrange.

Cherippus, then in time yourself bethink,
And what your rags will yield by auction sink.
Dryden.

A little consideration may allay his heat, and make him bethink himself, whether this attempt be worth the venture. Locke.

To BETHI'NK.* v. n. To consider.

Cease then, my tongue! and lend unto my mynd
Leave to bethinke how great that beautie is,
Whose utmost parts so beautifull I fynd.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.

BE'THLEHEM. n. s. [See BEDLAM.] An hospital for lunaticks.

BE'THLEHEMITE.† n. s. [See BEDLAMITE.] A lunatick; an inhabitant of a madhouse; also one of an order of friars so called.

BETHOUGHT. particip. [from bethink; which see.]

To BETHRA'L. v. a. [from thrall.] To enslave; to conquer; to bring into subjection.

Ne let that wicked woman 'scape away,
For she it is that did my lord bethrall.
Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 28.

To BETHU'MP. v. a. [from thump.] To beat; to lay blows upon: a ludicrous word.

I was never so bethumpt with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad.
Shakspeare.

To BETI'DE.* v. a. pret. It betided, or betid; part. pass. betid, and betight, [from tiδ, Sax. See TIDE.] Dr. Johnson had not noticed the active verb, but had given both the following definitions, with their examples, (excepting that which gives betight, and was unknown to him), as belonging to the verb neuter.

1. To happen to; to befal; to bechance, whether good or bad: with the person.

Said he then to the palmer, reverend sire,
What great misfortune hath betid this knight?
Spenser, F. Q.

Let them tell thee tales
Of woful ages, long ago betid. Shakspeare.

But say, if our deliverer up to heav'n
Must re-ascend, what will betide the few,
His faithful, left among the unfaithful herd,
The enemies of truth? Milton, P. L.

2. Sometimes it has to.

Why wearie we the gods with plaintes,
As if some evill were to her betight?
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov. v. 174.

Neither know I,
What is betid to Cloten; but remain
Perplext in all. Shakspeare.

To BETI'DE.† v. n.

1. To come to pass; to fall out; to happen: without the person.

She, when her turn was come her tale to tell,
Told of a strange adventure that betided,
Betwixt the fox and th' ape by him misguided.
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

Let me hear from thee by letters,
Of thy success in love; and what news else
Betideth here in absence of thy friend. Shakspeare.

2. To become; to be the fate: with of.

If he were dead, what would betide of thee?
Shakspeare.

BETI'ME. } adv. [from by and time; that
BETI'MES. } is, by the proper time.]

1. Seasonably; early; before it is late.

Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime.
Shakspeare.

To measure life, learn thou betimes, and know
Toward solid good what leads the nearest way,
Milton, P. R.

2. Soon; before long time has passed.

Whiles they are weak, betimes with them contend;
For when they once to perfect strength do grow,
Strong wars they make. Spenser, F. Q.

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes.
Shakspeare.

There be some have an over early ripeness in their years, which fadeth betimes: these are first, such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned. Bacon.

Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth; that is, enter upon a religious course betimes.
Tillotson.

Short is the date, alas! of modern rhymes:
And 'tis but just to let them live betimes. Pope.

3. Early in the day.

He that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder next day.
Shakspeare.

They rose betimes in the morning, and offered sacrifice. 1 Macc. iv. 52.

BE'TLE. } n. s. [Piper adulterinum.] An BE'TRE. } Indian plant, called water pepper. Dict.

To BETO'KEN. v. a. [from token.]

1. To signify; to mark; to represent.

We know not wherefore churches should be the worse, if, at this time, when they are delivered into God's own possession, ceremonies fit to betoken such intents, and to accompany such actions, be usual. Hooker.

A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow,
Conspicuous with three listed colours gay,
Betokening peace from God. Milton, P. L.

2. To foreshew; to presignify.

The kindling azure, and the mountain's brow,
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach
Betoken glad. Thomson, Summer.

BE'TONY. n. s. [betonica, Lat.] A plant, greatly esteemed as a vulnerary herb. Miller.

BETOO'K. [irreg. pret. from betake; which see.]

BETO'RN.* part. adj. [from torn. See To TEAR.] Violently separated.

Could none in Britain land,
Whose heart betorn out of his panting breast
With thine own hand, or work what death thou would'st,
Suffice to make a sacrifice to' appease
That deadly mind and murderous thought in thee?
Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc.

To BETO'SS.† v. a. [from toss.]

1. To disturb; to agitate; to put into violent motion.

What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? Shakspeare.

2. Literally to toss into the air.

The outcries of the miserable betossed squire were so many, and so loud, as they arrived at last to his lord's hearing.
Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. iii. 3.

To BETRA'P.* v. a. [betrappen, Germ. ᵹeppan, Sax.] To ensnare. Not now in use.

This clerke, this subtill sly Ovide,
And many an othir discevid have be
Of women, as is known full wide —
And othir mo, that coudin full wel preche,
Betrapped were, for aught that they coud reche.
Occleve, Letter of Cupide, ver. 252.

To BETRA'Y.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson merely gives the Fr. trahir. But we must seek the etymology elsewhere. Goth. wrohjan, to accuse; Sax. bewᵹan, to accuse, to ensnare; Germ. betrugen, triegen, from trug, deceit. Of similar application are ᵹeppan, Sax. betrappen, Germ.]

1. To give into the hands of enemies by treachery, or breach of trust: with to before the person, otherwise into.

If ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.
1 Chronicles, xii. 17.

Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men. St. Matth. xvii. 22.

For fear is nothing else but a betraying of the succours which reason offereth. Wisdom, xvii. 12.

He was not to be won, either by promise or reward, to betray the city. Knolles.

2. To discover that which has been entrusted to secrecy.

3. To expose to evil by revealing something entrusted.

How [would'st thou] again betray me,
Bearing my words and doings to the lords!
Milton, S. A.

4. To make known something that were better concealed.

Be swift to hear, but be cautious of your tongue, lest you betray your ignorance. Watts.

5. To make liable to fall into something inconvenient.

His abilities created him great confidence; and this was like enough to betray him to great errours.
King Charles.

The bright genius is ready to be so forward, as often betrays itself into great errours in judgement.
Watts.

6. To shew; to discover.

Ire, envy, and despair,
Which marr'd his borrow'd visage, and betray'd
Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld. Milton, P. L.

The Veian and the Gabian tow'rs shall fall,
And one promiscuous ruin cover all;
Nor, after length of years, a stone betray
The place where once the very ruins lay.
Addison on Italy.

BETRA'YER, n. s. [from betray.] One that betrays; a traitor.

The wise man doth so say of fear, that it is a betrayer of the forces of reasonable understanding.
Hooker.

You cast down your courage through fear, the betrayer of all succours which reason can afford.
Sir J. Hayward.

They are only a few betrayers of their country; they are to purchase coin, perhaps, at half price, and vend it among us to the ruin of the publick.
Swift.

To BETRI'M. v. a. [from trim.] To deck; to dress; to grace; to adorn; to embellish; to beautify; to decorate.

To make cold nymphs chaste crowns. Shaksp.

To BETRO'TH. v. a. [from troth; betrowen, Dutch.]

1. To contract to any one, in order to marriage; to affiance: used either of men or women.

He, in the first flower of my freshest age,
Betrothed me unto the only heir
Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage.
Spenser, F. Q.

To her, my lord,
Was I betrothed, ere I Hermia saw. Shakspeare.

My soul's publick promise she
Was sold then, and betroth'd to Victory. Cowley.

2. To have as affianced by promise of marriage.

And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return into his house. Deut. xx. 7.

3. To nominate to a bishoprick, in order to consecration.

If any person be consecrated a bishop to that church, whereunto he was not before betrothed, he shall not receive the habit of consecration, as not being canonically promoted. Ayliffe.

BETRO'THMENT.* n. s. [from betroth.] The act of betrothing.

Sometimes setting out the speeches that pass between them, making as it were thereby the betrothment; otherwhiles declaring the mutual duties, one of them towards another, but specially that same great love of the bridegroom to his spouse.

Exposition of the Canticles, (1585,) p. 5.

To BETRU'ST.† v. a. [from trust.] To entrust; to put into the power of another, in confidence of fidelity.

He who is betrusted with the cure of our souls, should, besides other witnesses, be both present and active in and at our domestick contracts of matrimony. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Betrust him with all the good, which our own capacity will allow us, or his sufficiency encourage us to hope for, either in this life, or that to come. Grew.

Whatsoever you would betrust to your memory, let it be disposed in a proper method. Watts.

BETT.* adv. [Sax. bet, Teut. bet, better.] The old English word for better.

Bet is to dien than have indigence.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

The dapper ditties, that I wont devise
To feede youth's fancy and the flocking fry,
Delighten much; what I the bett thereby?

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

BE'TTER. adj. The comparative of good. [bet, good, betepa, better, Sax.] Having good qualities in a greater degree than something else. See GOOD.

He has a horse better than the Neapolitan's; a better bad habit of frowning than the Count Palatine. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stand on any shoulders that I see
Before me at this instant. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Having a desire to depart, and be with Christ; which is far better. Philippians, i. 23.

The BE'TTER.

1. The superiority; the advantage: with the particle of before him, or that, over which the advantage is gained.

The Corinthians that morning, as the days before, had the better. Sidney.

The voyage of Drake and Hawkins was unfortunate; yet, in such sort, as doth not break our prescription, to have had the better of the Spaniards. Bacon.

Dionysius, his countryman, in an epistle to Pompey, after an express comparison, affords him the better of Thucydides. Brown, Vulg. Err.

You think fit
To get the better of me, and you shall;
Since you will have it so — I will be yours.

Southerne.

The gentleman had always so much the better of the satyrist, that the persons touched did not know where to fix their resentment. Prior.

2. Improvement; as for the better, so as to improve it.

If I have altered him any where for the better, I must at the same time acknowledge, that I could have done nothing without him. Dryden.

BE'TTER.† adv. [comparative of well.]

1. Well, in a greater degree.

Then was it better with me than now. Hosea, ii. 7.

Better a mechanick rule were stretched or broken, than a great beauty were omitted. Dryd.

The better to understand the extent of our knowledge, one thing is to be observed. Locke.

He that would know the idea of infinity, cannot do better, than by considering to what infinity is attributed. Locke.

2. More; in greater degree or quantity; "It is true and better true, vero verius est," Vulg. Hormanni, 1530. sign O. iiii.

often used in familiar discourse; as, I gave better than ten pounds for it; it is better than half past twelve o'clock.

The pearle of price which Englishmen have sought
So farre abrode, and cost them there so deare,
Is now found out within our country here,
And better cheap amongst us may be bought.

Gascoigne to Hollyband, The Frenche Littelton, (1581,) p. 7.

To teach us this lesson at the dearest rate, if we will not learn it better cheap.

Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 130.

To BE'TTER.† v. a. [Sax. betpian.]

1. To improve; to meliorate.

The cause of his taking upon him our nature, was to better the quality, and to advance the condition thereof. Hooker.

He is furnished with my opinion, which is bettered with his own learning. Shakspeare.

Heir to all his lands and goods,
Which I have better'd, rather than decreased.

Shakspeare.

But Jonathan, to whom both hearts were known,
With well-tim'd zeal, and with an artful care,
Restor'd, and better'd soon, the nice affair.

Cowley.

The church of England, the purest and best reformed church in the world; so well reformed, that it will be found easier to alter than better its constitution. South.

2. To surpass; to exceed.

The works of nature do always aim at that which cannot be bettered. Hooker.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you. Shakspeare.

What you do
Still betters what is done; when you speak sweet,
I'd have you do it ever. Shakspeare.

3. To advance; to support.

The king thought his honour would suffer, during a treaty, to better a party. Bacon, Henry VII.

BE'TTER. n. s. [from the adjective.] Superiour; one to whom precedence is to be given.

Their betters would be hardly found, if they did not live among men, but in a wilderness by themselves. Hooker.

The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born. Shakspeare.

That ye thus hospitably live,
Is mighty grateful to your betters,
And makes e'en gods themselves your debtors.

Prior.

I have some gold and silver by me, and shall be able to make a shift, when many of my betters are starving. Swift.

BE'TTERING.* n. s. [Sax. betpung.] The act of meliorating or improving.

The Romans took pains to hew out a passage for these lakes to discharge themselves for the bettering of the air. Addison.

BE'TTERMENT.* n. s. [from better.] Improvement.

In thy good days be mindful of the evil; and in the evil forget not the good: by which practice our health shall not be in danger of the surprise of sickness, nor our sickness liable to the despair of betterment and melioration.

W. Montagu, Ess. P. II. 1654, p. 221.

BE'TTERNESS.* n. s. [from better.] Superiority.

All betterness or pre-eminency of virtue.

Dr. Tooker, Fabr. of the Church, 1604, p. 94.

BE'TTING.* n. s. [from To bet.] The act of betting, or proposing a wager. Sherwood.

BE'TTOR. n. s. [from To bet.] One that lays bets or wagers.

I observed a stranger among them of a genteeler behaviour than ordinary; but notwithstanding he was a very fair bettor, nobody would take him up. Addison, Spect.

BE'TTY.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson says, this is "probably a cant word, signifying an instrument which does what is too often done by a maid within." It is certainly a cant word, called also a Bess in the Canting Dictionary of 1725, without reflecting, however, on the poor maids! Dr. Johnson was not aware that a jenny is another instrument of plunder, or he would have backed his unkind etymology by a reference also to Jane.] A small engine to force open the doors of houses. Canting Dict.

Record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalades of needy heroes, describing the powerful betty, or the artful picklock. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

BETU'MBLED.* part. adj. [from tumble.] Disordered; rolled about.

From her betumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BETWA'TTLED.* part. adj. [from twattle, which see.] Confounded; overpowered; stupefied. Still used in the north of England. And it occurs in a ludicrous book of the early part of the last century.

He bounc'd — like mad:
They were all 'stounded and affrighted,
That one, they counted so wise-noddled,
Should look so featly and betwattled.

Gabriel John, p. 75.

BETWE'EN.† prep. [betpeonan, betpinan, Saxon; from the original word tpa, two, or tpezen, twain.]

1. In the intermediate space.

What modes
Of smell the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green? Pope.

2. From one to another; noting intercourse.

He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Belonging to two in partnership.

I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons? Locke.

4. Bearing relation to two.

If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased. Bacon, Atlantis.

Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends. South.

5. Noting difference, or distinction of one from the other.

Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master. Locke.

Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not. Locke.

6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.

7. Between, as well as betwixt, is sometimes used to denote participation; as, the colour is between green and yellow.

BETWI'XT.† prep. [betpýx, Saxon, from the Goth. twos, two. It has the same signification with between, and is indifferently used for it.]

1. In the midst of two.

Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
From betwixt two aged oaks. Milton, L'Al.
Methinks, like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and your Indians stand;
This only place betwirt the clouds is clear.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.
If contradicting interests could be mixt,
Nature herself has cast a bar betwixt.
Dryden, Aurengz.

2. From one to another.

Five years since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt myself and her. Shakspeare.

BE'VEL. } n. s. In masonry and joinery,
BE'VIL. } a kind of square, one leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevil angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle. Builder's Dict.

Their houses are very ill built, their walls bevil, without one right angle in any apartment. Swift.

To BE'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to a bevel angle.

These rabbets are ground square; but the rabbets on the groundsel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

BE'VER. See BEAVER.

BE'VER.* n. s. [Ital. bevere, to drink; old French beivre. In the Prompt. Parv. bever is called drynkynge time, Lat. biberium. Huloet, in his old dictionary, calls it "a drinking or potation." Others, "a drinking between dinner and supper." It is still used, among workmen, for their repast, between dinner and the time of ending work.] A collation or refreshment between meals.

Ar. What, at your bever, gallants?
Mor. Will't please your ladyship to drink? 'tis of the new fountain water.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

The bever being ended, and the table-cloths taken away. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, 1. 4. 11.

The French, as well men as women, besides dinner and supper, use breakfasts and bevers.
Moryson's Itinerary.

To BE'VER.* v. n. [Ital. bevere.] To partake of a bever.

Your gallants never sup, breakfast, or bever without me, [appetite.] Brewer's Lingua, ii. i.

BE'VERAGE.† n. s. [from bevere, to drink, Ital. or rather from the old Fr. beuvrage.]

1. Drink; liquour to be drunk in general.

I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant. Shakspeare.

Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all.
Brown, Vulgar Err.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd. Dryden, Fab.
The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides,
Scarce dewy beverage for the bees provides.
Dryden, Virg.

2. Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a fat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty-eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, tun it up immediately. Mortimer.

3. A treat upon wearing a new suit of clothes.

4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also garnish.

BE'VY.† n. s. [beva, Ital.]

1. A flock of birds.

They say, a bevy of larks, even as a covey of partridges, or an eye of pheasants.
E. K. on Spenser's Ship. Cal. April.
Bevy [is] a troop of ladies, quails, or of deer.
Cockeram.

2. A company; an assembly; Dr. Johnson says. But it seems to be applied exclusively to the fair sex.

And in the midst thereof upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Courted of many a jolly paramour. Spenser, F. Q.
O, but to satisfy this bevy of ladies,
Of which a brace, here, long'd to bid you welcome.
B. Jonson, New Inn.

A bevy of young lasses.
Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.
A heavenly bevey of sweet English dames.
Browne, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 2.
A bevie of nimble Dryads.
Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.
They on the plain
Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold,
A bevy of fair women. Milton, P. L.
Nor rode the nymph alone,
Around a bevy of bright damsels shone. Pope.

To BEWA'IL. v. a. [from wail.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for.

In this city he
Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspeare.
Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all
His friends, not to bewail his funeral.
Sir J. Denham.

I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children.
Addison.

To BEWA'IL. v. n. To express grief.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law. Shaks.

BEWA'ILABLE.* adj. [from bewail.] That may be lamented. Sherwood.

BEWA'ILER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who laments or bewails.

He was a great bewailer of the late troublesome and calamitous times.
Ward's Life of Dr. Hen. Moore, 1710. p. 186.

BEWA'ILING.* n. s. [from bewail.] Lamentation.

As if he had also heard the sorrowings and bewailings of every surviving soul.
Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

To BEWA'KE.* v. a. [from wake.] To keep awake.

I wote that night was well bewaked,
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

To BEWA'RE.† v. n. [from be and ware, or wary; that is, cautious: thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware, Dr. Johnson says. He might have added, 2 Tim. iv. 15. "of whom be thou ware also. See WARY. Sax. bepapian, beppapnian; Germ. bewaren.]

1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from; generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds, and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.

Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Locke.
Warn'd by the sylph, oh, pious maid, beware!
This to disclose is all thy guardian can;
Beware of all, but most beware of man.
Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, he will beware; but, not he did beware, or he has been ware. The following example from Ben Jonson, as Mr. Mason has also noticed, invalidates the preceding remark of Dr. Johnson.

These studies alter now in one, grown man:
His better'd mind seeks wealth and friendship; then
Looks after honours, and bewares to act
What straightway he must labour to retract.
B. Jonson, Art of Poetry.

To BEWE'EP.† v. a. [Sax. bepepan.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.

They — did bringe women unto the funeralles, to lamente and bewepe the dead.
Hunting of Purgatory, 1561, fol. 43. b.
Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Larded all with sweet flowers,
Which bewept to the grave did go,
With true love showers. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Lo! how my hurts afresh beweep this wanted wight. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 485.

To BEWE'EP.* v. n. To weep; to make lamentation.

I do beweep to many simple gulls.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

To BEWE'T. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.

His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
Titus Andronicus.

To BEWHO'RE.* v. a. [from whore.]

1. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

Were your's the loss,
Had you a daughter, [and] perhaps bewhor'd,
(For to what other end would come the thief?)
You'd play the miller then, be loud, and high.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

2. To pronounce a whore.

Alas! Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her.
Shakspeare, Othello.

To BEWI'LDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.
We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, not direct the mind.
Blackmore.
Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search.
Addison.

It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

To BEWI'NTER.* v. a. [from winter.] To make like winter.

Tears that bewinter all my year. Cowley.

To BEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakspeare.
I have forsworn his company hourly this twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd!

Shakspeare.

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dams,
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs?
Dryden, Virg.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney, B. ii.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;
The curse of writing is an endless itch.
Dryden, Juv.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison, Spect. No. 223.

BEWI'TCHER.* n. s. [from bewitch.] One who enchants or bewitches.

Were it not that I should be a bar to those bewitchers of beautie, I would wish ladies to be niggards of their countenances to those who are prodigal of their words and profane praises.
Stafford's Niobe dissolved into a Nilus, p. 117.

BEWI'TCHERY.† n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of.
South, Serm. ii. 333.

The pinch of any present pain, or the bewitchery of some present pleasure. South, Serm. vi. 327.

BEWI'TCHFUL.* adj. [from bewitch and full.] Alluring; bewitching.

There is, on the other side, ill more bewitchful to entice away. Milton, Lett.

BEWI'TCHING.* n. s. [from bewitch.] The act of bewitching. Sherwood.

BEWI'TCHINGLY.* adv. [from bewitch.] In an alluring manner.

All that time that his brains are turgid and full of this humour, he is wonderful eloquent, and bewitchingly taking.
Hallywell's Account of Familism, p. 106.

BEWI'TCHMENT. n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers.
Shakspeare.

BEWO'NDERED.* part. adj. [from wonder.] Amazed; filled with much wonder.

The other seeing his astonishment,
How he bewondered was. Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRA'P.* v. a. [from wrap.] To cover over; to wrap round.

O wretched wight, bewrapt in webs of woe,
That still in dread wast tost from place to place!
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 32.

His sword that many a pagan stout had shent,
Bewrapt with flowers hung idly by his side.
Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRA'Y.† v. a. [ꝑpeȝan, beꝑpeȝan, Saxon.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.

Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,
And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain
To tempt the cause itself for to bewray.
Spenser, F. Q.

Hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth. Isaiah, xvi. 3.

2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use, Dr. Johnson says. But this is the original meaning of the word; and I confirm this simple usage of it by examples added to those given by Dr. Johnson.

She saw a pretty blush in Philodea's cheeks bewray a modest discontentment. Sidney.

Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to confess they are hardly drawn. Hooker, l. § 7.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,
Whose silver locks bewray his store of days.
Fairfax.

Thy speech bewrayeth thee. S. Matt. xxvi. 73.

Look as a sweet rose fairly budding forth
Bewrays her beauties to the enamour'd morn.
Brown, Shepherd's Pipe. Ecl. 4.

BEWRA'YER. n. s. [from bewray.] Betrayer; discoverer; divulger.

When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend.
Addison, Spectator, No. 225.

To BEWRE'CK.* v. a. [from wreck.] Figuratively, from a wreck at sea, to ruin; to destroy.

Yet was I, or I parted thence, bewreckt.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 120.

BEWRO'UGHT.* part. [from wrought.] Worked.

Their maids and their makes,
At dancings and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses,
And their smocks all bewrought
With his thread which they bought.
B. Jonson, Masques.

BEY.* n. s. [Turkish, beg.] A governour of a Turkish province.

The several beglerbegs having under their jurisdiction many provinces, beys, agas, and others.
Rycaut.

BEYO'ND.† prep. [beȝeonð, beȝeondan, of be and ȝan, to go: of which, ȝeonð is the participle passive; corresponding with our begone.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,
A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death:
Just what you hear, you have. Pope, Ess. on Man.

2. On the farther side of.

Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us? Deut. xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life; for we are beyond the old world and the new. Bacon.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing. Locke.

3. Farther onward than.

He that sees a dark and shady grove,
Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky. Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou did'st this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakspeare, K. John.

Yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.
Milton, P. L.

The just, wise, and good God, neither does, nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do. South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute.
Bentley.

5. Above; proceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country. Sidney.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder. Wotton.

To his expences, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected. Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming. Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear:
Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden, Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry.
Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud, his brother in any matter. 1 Thess. iv. 6.

BEYO'ND.* adv. At a distance; yonder.

Lo! where beyond he lyeth languishing,
Deadly engored of a great wilde boar.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 38.

BE'ZANT, or BE'SANT.* n. s. [Fr. besant.] The current coin of old Byzantium, which was gold. Wicliffe uses besaunt for a piece of silver, St. Luke, xv. 8. But see BIZANTINE. Also the heraldick term for a roundlet, and supposed to have been adopted as an armorial bearing by those who were in the holy war.

BE'ZEL. } n. s. That part of a ring in which BE'ZIL. } the stone is fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. s. [from pa, against, and zahar, poison, Persick.] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. The peculiar manner of its formation, is now supposed to be fabulous. The name of this stone is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezoars.
Savary and Chambers.

BEZOA'RDICK.* adj. [from bezoar.] Composed of bezoar.

When the disease [the plague] was young, it was mitigated with rob of elder; with crabs eyes; spirits of hartshorn; theriac and vinegar; bezoardick vinegar. Student, ii. 344.

BEZOA'RDICKS.† n. s. pl. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrified particles. Floyer.

BEZOA'RTICAL.* adj. [from bezoar.] Having the quality of an antidote.

The healing bezoartical virtue of grace.
Chillingworth's Works, ed. 1704, p. 378.

To BE'ZZLE.* v. a. [old Fr. besler; beselé, besléez, embezzled, Kelham, Norm. Dict. This is the parent of our modern word embezzle, which Dr. Johnson strangely thinks to be a corruption of imbecil.] To waste in riot.

They that spend their youth in loitering, bezzling, and harloting. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

I have laid up a little for my younger son Michael, and thou think'st to bezzle that, but thou shalt never be able to do it.
Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pestle.
That divine part is soak'd away in sin,
In sensual lust, and midnight bezeling.
Marston, Scourge of Villainy.
Time will come,
When wonder of thy errour will strike dumb
Thy bezel'd sense. Marston, Malcontent.

BIA'NGULATED. } adj. [from binus and an-
BIA'NGULOUS. } gulus, Lat.] Having two corners or angles. Dict.

BI'AS.† n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bihay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart, Dr. Johnson says; but may it not, with as much probability, be referred to the Gr. βίᾳ, impetus?]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.
Madam, we'll play at bowls ——
—— 'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shaks.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.
You have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakspeare.
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryd.
Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.
Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Raillery under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison, Freeholder.
Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill.
Pope, Ess. on Man.

3. Propension; inclination.
As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff.
Dryden, Fab. Pref.

To BI'AS.† v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.
O powerful Love! which Heaven or Nature
Writ in the heart of every creature!
Whose amiable violence,
And pleasing rapture of the sense,
Doth bias all things to that good,
Which we desire not understood.
Sir R. Fanshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 40.
Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biassed by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.
A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgement strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.
Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.
Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biassed side. This is not used.
Blow, villain, till thy sphered bias cheek
Outswell the colick of puft Aquilon.
Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.

BI'AS-DRAWING.* n. s. [from bias and draw.] Partiality.
In this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome!
Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.

BI'ASNESS.* n. s. [from bias; old Fr. biaiseure.] An inclination or tendency to some side. Sherwood.

BIB.† n. s. [from bibere, to drink; because the bib doth receive the drink that the child slavers from the mouth, Minsheu.] A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.
We'll have a bib, for spoiling of your doublet.
Beaum. and Fl. The Captain.
I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging sleeves, as on the bulla and prætexta.
Addison on Medals.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.
He playeth with bibbing mother Meroë, as though so named, because she would drink mere wine without water. Camden.
To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in twenty-four hours than I did. Locke.

BIBA'CIOUS. adj. [bibax, Lat.] Addicted to drinking. Dict.

BIBA'CITY. n. s. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

BI'BBER.† n. s. [from To bib; old Fr. biberon.] A tippler; a man that drinks often.
Be not amongst wine-bibbers; amongst riotous eaters of flesh. Prov. xxiii. 20.

BI'BBLE-BABBLE.* n. s. [A low expression, adopted from babble, and yet used in some places.] Prating; idle talk.
Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble-babble. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

BI'BLE.† n. s. [from βιβλιον, a book; called, by way of excellence, The Book.]

1. The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.
If we pass from the apostolick to the next ages of the church, the primitive Christians looked on their Bibles as their most important treasure.
Government of the Tongue.
We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy Bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion. Tillotson.
In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings by the divine assistance of the Bible. Watts.

2. Any great book. Obsolete. It is so used by Chaucer, and said by Mr. Tyrwhitt to be adopted from the French; but I am obliged to agree with Dr. Jamieson, in admitting that no such direct usage of the word offers itself.
To tellen all, wold passen any bible,
That o wher is. Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.
All these armis that there yweren.
That they thus on their cotis weren ——
Men might make of 'hem a bible.
Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 244.

BI'BLICAL.* adj. [from bible.] Relating to the Bible.
To make a biblical version faithful and exact, so that it may represent the true text of the original in the best manner, is very different from giving it "a shewy and modernized" appearance.
Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Transl. of the Bible, p. 220.
Augustine and Jerome corresponded upon biblical subjects infinitely less important.
Porson to Travis, p. 305.

BIBLIO'GRAPHER. n. s. [from βιβλος, and γράφω, to write.] A man skilled in literary history, and in the knowledge of books; a transcriber. Dict.

BIBLIOGRA'PHICAL.* } adj. [from biblio-
BIBLIOGRA'PHICK. } graphy.] Relating to the knowledge of books.

BIBLIO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and γράφω, Fr. bibliographie.] The science of a bibliographer; the knowledge of literary history.

*BIBLIOMA'NIA. n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and μανία, Fr. bibliomanie.] The rage of possessing books; book-madness. The word, both in French and English, is modern; but the malady, if it may so be called, is increasing; and he who wishes to notice the gradations of this rage, in order that he may avoid admission into a literary bedlam, or may know how to manage, without a keeper, his "willing chains and sweet captivity," cannot do better than consult the Reverend Mr. Dibdin's treatise, entitled Bibliomania.

BIBLIOMA'NIACK.* n. s. [from bibliomania. The French, determining not to be behind-hand with us in this contest for insanity, have also the modern substantive, bibliomane. V. Morin, Gr. and Fr. Dict. Etymolog.] He who is smitten with a rage for books.

BIBLIO'POLIST.* n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and πωλεῖν, Fr. bibliopole.] A bookseller.

BIBLIOTHE'CAL. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library. Dict.

BIBLIO'THECARY.* n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and θήκη, Fr. bibliothécaire.] A librarian. This is no modern word.
Master Doctor James, the incomparably industrious and learned bibliothecary of Oxford.
Bp. Hall's Honour of the Married Clergy, i. 28.

BIBLIOTHE'KE.* n. s. [Fr. bibliothèque.] A library. This is a very old word in our language.
He [Alcuinus] muche commendeth a biblyotheke or lybrary in Yorke.
Bale's Conclus. Leland's Journey.
We being present, the king asking him how many thousand volumes he had gotten together in his bibliotheke? he answered, that for the present he had no more than two hundred thousand.
Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633,) p. 16.

BI'BULOUS. adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That has the quality of drinking moisture; spungy.
Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, and gutter'd rocks.
Thomson, Autumn.

BICA'PSULAR. adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] Having the seed vessel divided into two parts.

BICE. n. s. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.
Take green bice, and order it as you do your blue bice, you may diaper upon it with the water of deep green. Peacham.

BICI'PITAL. } adj. [biceps, bicipitis, Lat.]
BICI'PITOUS. } 1. Having two heads.

While men believe bicipitous conformation in any species, they admit a gemination of principal parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. It is applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

A piece of flesh it exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either party's arm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To BI'CKER.† v. n. [bicre, Welsh, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on. This is a very old Eng. verb, and is noticed in the Prompt. Parv. "bickerynge or fightinge, pugno, dimico."

Nor is it to be considered to the breaches of confederate nations, whose mutual interest is of such high consequence, though their merchants bicker in the East Indies. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward.

And from about him fierce effusion rowl'd
Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire.
Milton, P. L.

An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool,
Breathes a blue film, and, in its mid career,
Arrests the bickering stream. Thomson, Winter.

BI'CKERER.† n. s. [from the verb.] A skirmisher. Sherwood.

BI'CKERING.* n. s. [from bicker. This is an old Eng. substantive; two examples of which had been hitherto admitted among the illustrations of the verb.] Quarrel; skirmish.

They fell to such a bickering that he got a halting, and lost his picture. Sidney.

After many bickerings betwixt the English and Scottish, a truce first, and afterwards a peace was concluded betwixt our king and king James.
Ld. Herbert, Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 376.

In thy face
I see thy fury; if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakspeare.

A champion, fitter for a troop of pigmies, to trail a reed in their bickerings with cranes, than to be committed with any reasonable or scholar-like antagonist.
Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, iii. 18.

The bickering was doubtful and intricate, part on the water, part on the sands; not without loss of some eminent men on the English side.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

Then was the war shivered, as it were, into small frays and bickerings. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

BI'CKERMENT.* n. s. [from bicker.] Quarrel.

Artegall, arriving happily,
Did stay awhile their greedy bickerment,
Till he had questioned the cause of their dissent.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 6.

BI'CKERN. n. s. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.] An iron ending in a point.

A blacksmith's anvil is sometimes made with a pike or bickern, or beakiron, at one end. Moxon.

BICO'RNE. } adj. [bicornis, Lat.] Having BICO'RNOUS. } two horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equal. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BICO'RPORAL. adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

To BID.† v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden. [Goth. biudan, anabiudan, to bid, to command; bibban, Sax.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite.

I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;
There are my keys. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage. Matt. xxii. 9.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand.
Hakewill.

2. To command; to order: before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the nightmare, and her ninefold,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,
Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,
Prepare a dream. Dryden, Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.
— Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Dryden, All for Love.

Thames heard the numbers, as he flowed along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song. Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden. Watts.

3. To offer; to propose: as, to bid a price; [Dutch, bieden, to bid money for;] to promise.

Come, and be true. —
— Thou bidst me to my loss: for true to thee
Were to prove false. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests.
Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side.
Granville.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some publick voice.

Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away. Gay, What d'ye call it.

5. To pronounce, to declare.

You are retir'd
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to's welcome. Shakspeare.

Divers as we passed by them, put their arms a little abroad; which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions?
A. Philips.

6. To denounce.

Thyself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

She bid war to all that durst supply
The place of those her cruelty made die. Waller.

The captive cannibal, opprest with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,
And, spent at last, and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.
Granville.

7. To pray. [Goth. bida, prayer. See BEAD.]

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. 2 St. John, 10.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell.
Acts, xviii. 21.

8. To bid beads, is to distinguish each bead by a prayer.

By some haycock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn.
Dryden.

BI'DALE. n. s. [from bid and ale.] An invitation of friends to drink at a poor man's house, and there to contribute charity. Dict.

BI'DDEN. part. pass. [from To bid.]

1. Invited.

There were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family. Bacon.

Madam, the bidden guests are come. A. Philips.

2. Commanded.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
Teach infants' cheeks a bidden blush to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a beau.
Pope, Rape of the Lock.

BI'DDER.† n. s. [Sax. bibbep.] One who offers or proposes a price, Dr. Johnson says. But it formerly meant a commander, a prescriber of laws to others. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there, exposed to the purchase of the best bidder.
Addison, Spect.

BI'DDING.† n. s. [from bid.]

1. Command; order.

How, sayst thou, that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding? Shakspeare, Macb.

At his second bidding, darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.
Milton, P. L.

2. Invitation to a funeral: perhaps from bid in the sense of pray, and meaning the offering of prayers for the soul of the deceased. Used in Cheshire.
Wilbraham.

3. [In commercial language.] The proposal of price for what is to be sold.

To BIDE.† v. a. [Goth beidan, Saxon, bidan.] To endure; to suffer: commonly to abide.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm. Shaks.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,
And durst not bide it on the English coast.
Dryden.

To BIDE. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All knees to Thee shall bow of them that bide
In heaven, or earth, or under earth in hell.
Milton, P. L.

2. To remain in a place.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head,
The least a death to nature. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To continue in a state.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in. Romans, xi. 23.

4. It has probably all the significations of the word abide; which see: but it being grown somewhat obsolete, the examples of its various meanings are not easily found.

BIDE'NTAL. adj. [bidens, Lat.] Having two teeth.

Ill management of forks is not to be helped when they are only bidental. Swift.

BIDE'T.* n. s. [Fr.] Menage calls it a little horse, but says, the etymology is difficult to be found.

I will return to myself, mount my bidet in a dance; and curvet upon my curtal.
B. Jonson, Masques.

BI'DING. n. s. [from bide.] Residence; habitation.

At Antwerp has my constant biding been.
Rowe.

BIE'NNIALLY.* adv. [from biennial.] At the return of two years.

BIER.† n. s. [from To bear, as feretrum, in Latin, from fero, Sax. bæpe, old Fr. biere, a coffin.] A carriage or frame of wood, on which the dead are carried to the grave.

And now the prey of fowls he lies,
Nor wail'd of friends, nor laid on groaning bier.
Spenser, F. Q.

They bore him barefac'd on the bier,
And on his grave rain'd many a tear.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept. Milton, Lycidas.

Griefs always green, a household still in tears:
Sad pomps, a threshold throng'd with daily biers,
And liveries of black. Dryden, Juv.

Make as if you hanged yourself, they will convey your body out of prison in a bier.
Arbuthnot, John Bull.

BI'ER-BALK.* n. s. [from bier and balk. See BALK.] The church-road for burials, along which the corpse is carried.

Where their ancestors left, of their land, a broad and sufficient bier-balk to carry the corps to the Christian sepulture; how men pinch at such bier-balks, which, by long use and custom, ought to be inviolably kept for that purpose. Homilies, B. ii. 237.

BI'ESTING.† n. s. [biest, Flemish; biest-melck.] The first milk given by a cow after calving. Written also beestning, and beesting.

So may the first of all our fells be thine,
And both the beestning of our goats and kine.
B. Jonson, Masques.

And twice besides, her biestings never fail
To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden.

BIFA'RIOUS. adj. [bifarius, Lat.] Twofold; what may be understood two ways.
Dict.

BI'FEROUS. adj. [biferens, Lat.] Bearing fruit twice a-year.

BI'FID. } adj. [bifidus, Latin, a bo-
BI'FIDATED. } tanical term.] Divided into two; split into two; opening with a cleft.

BI'FOLD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.] Twofold; double.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she; O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shakspeare, Troilus and Cres.

BI'FORM.* adj. [Lat. biformis, old Fr. biforme.] Having a double form.

From whose monster-teeming womb the Earth
Receiv'd, what much it mourn'd, a biform birth.
Croxall, Transl. of Ovid, Metam. 8.

BIFO'RMED.† adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms or bodies. Coles.

A biformed body. Bacon.

BIFO'RMITY.* n. s. [old Fr. biformité.] A double form; a twofold shape.
Cotgrave.

Strange things he spake of the biformity
Of the Dizoïans; what mongrel sort
Of living wights; how monstrous-shap'd they be;
And how that man and beast in one consort.
More, Song of the Soul, P. 1. C. 3. st. 70.

BIFRO'NTED.* adj. [Lat. bifrons.] Having two fronts.

Put a case of vizards o'er his head,
That he may look bifronted as he speaks.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 3.

BIFU'RCATED. adj. [from binus, two, and furca, a fork, Lat.] Shooting out, by a division, into two heads,

A small white piece, bifurcated, or branching into two, and finely reticulated all over.
Woodward.

BIFURCA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. biforcation.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first catachrestical and far derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

BIFU'RCOUS.* adj. [binus and furca, Lat. See BIFURCATED.] Two-forked. Coles.

BIG.† adj. [This word Junius derives from βαγαῖος; Skinner from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly. Minsheu says, it is contracted from the Dutch buyckigh, i. e. great-bellied. "He looks very bug of it," i. e. big of it, is an old Eng. phrase. See Etym. Dict. 1691. V. BIG. "A bog fellow" is also a bold, sawcy fellow. See Ray's Eng. Words.]

1. Having comparative bulk, greater, or less.

A troubled ocean, to a man who sails in it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion.
Spectator.

2. Great in bulk; large.

Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small, its precise bulk becomes obscure and confused. Locke.

3. Teeming; pregnant; great with young: with the particle with.

A bear big with young hath seldom been seen.
Bacon.

Lately on yonder swelling bush,
Big with many a common rose,
This early bud began to blush. Waller.

4. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

His gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
As he was born. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

5. Without any particle.

Like a big wife at sight of loathsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.
Pope, Satire of Donne Versified.

6. Full of something; and desirous, or about to give it vent.

The great, th' important day,
Big with the fate of Cato and of Rome. Addison.

Now big with knowledge of approaching woes,
The prince of augurs, Halithreses, rose. Pope.

7. Distended; swoln; ready to burst: used often of the effects of passion, as grief, rage.

Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.
Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

8. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tumid; haughty; surly.

How else, said he, but with a good bold face,
And with big words, and with a stately pace?
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

To the meaner man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

If you had looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

In his prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clarendon.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,
Or wear a huger periwig,
Than our own native lunaticks. Hudibras.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name.
South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,
Whose power extends no further than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.
Dryden.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phormio sense,
Should indignation give, at least offence. Garth.

9. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words I grant, are bigger: for I wear not
My dagger in my mouth. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BIG.* n. s. [Su-Goth. biugg. Icel. bygg.] A particular kind of barley; a common word in Yorkshire and Cumberland.

To BIG.* v. a. [Sax. byzzan, Su-Goth. byggia.] To build. See BIGGIN.

BI'GAM.* n. s. [old Fr. bigame, Lat. bigamus, one twice married, Cotgrave. Lat. bis, and Gr. γαμεῖν.]

Some parts thereof teach us ordinances of some apostle, as the law of bigamy, or St. Paul's ordaining, that a bigam should not be a deacon or priest.
Bp. Peacock, in the Life of him by Lewis, p. 286.

No bigami, that is, none that had been twice married, or such as married widows, were capable of it, [the benefit of clergy,] because such could not receive orders. Burnet, Hist. Reform. ii. 323.

BI'GAMIST.† n. s. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice, according to that law. Ayliffe.

And so it shall appear plainly, that their false god Vulcan is not very hard to unmask, that he was a mortal man, and one of the sons of the other Lamech, the prime bigamist and corrupter of marriage. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 202.

BI'GAMY.† n. s. [bigamia, low Lat.] See BIGAM.

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin, for bigamy and incest.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. [In the canon law.] The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.

We have spoken of bigamie or twise marrying, that they also are excluded from the ministerie, whiche have maried a widowe. Martin on the Marriage of Priests, (1554,) sign. C. iii. b.

3. The state of being twice married. Dr. Johnson had confounded the following passage of Shakspeare with the first definition of bigamy, where it means polygamy, a crime; when it here means only marrying either two virgins successively, or once marrying a widow. It is called "loathed bigamy" by the poet, because it was esteemed, and had been pronounced, by a canon, infamous.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow —
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and loath'd bigamy.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

The duke being in years, and without heir, though as now unmarried, by his old wife's decease of late: But the Jesuits labour hard that he so remain; persuading him that bigamy is not so acceptable an estate to God.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

My nurse, for I had one, because I'm cold,
Divorc'd herself, the cause being in me,
That I can take no new in bigamy.
Donne's Poems, p. 172.

BIGBE'LLIED.† adj. [from big and belly.]

1. Pregnant; with child; great with young.

When we had laught to see the sails conceive,
And grow bigbellied with the wanton wind. Shaks.

Children and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate. Harvey.

So many well-shaped innocent virgins are blocked up, and waddle up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.

We pursued our march, to the terror of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen bigbellied women. Addison.

2. Having a large belly, or protuberance.

Now shalt thou never see the salt beset
With a bigbellied gallon flagonet.
Bp. Hall's Satires, B. 6. S. 1.

He [William Rufus] was in stature somewhat below the usual size, and bigbellied.
Swift, Hist. of Eng. Reign of W. II.

BI'GBONED.* adj. [from big and bone.] Having large bones; stout; very strong.

Seven bigboned villains — armed with bloody minds and deadly bow-strings.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 180.

Big-bon'd, and large of limbs, with sinews strong.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

BI'GCORNED.* adj. [from big and corn.] Having large grains.

The strength of big-corn'd powder.
Dryden, Ann. Mirab. st. 149.

To BI'GGEN.* v. n. [I know not the etymology.] To recover after lying-in; the gossips regularly wish the lady a good biggening. Brocket's N. Country Words, 1825. Coles in his Dict. of 1685, thus calls biggening "the uprising of women."

BI'GGIN.† n. s. [beguin, Fr. from the cap worn by the nuns, called beguins, as some assert; though others think that the nuns were so called from wearing this kind of cap.]

1. A cap like one of those worn by children.

Sleep now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

A biggin he had got about his braine,
For in his headpiece he felt a sore paine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.. May, v. 241.

You that have been a courtier from the biggin to the night-cap. B. Jonson, Epicœne.

2. A building. [Sax. byȝȝan, to build, Sued. byggia; whence the old verb, to bigge, in Chaucer and Wicliffe.] This is yet a common word in the north of England: the town of Newbiggin signifies newbuilt or newbuilding.

BIGHT.† n. s.

1. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope. Dr. Johnson.

2. A projection in a river; a projecting or receding corner. It is commonly used in sea voyages: The bight of Benin on the coast of Africa.
Wilbraham, Chesh. Gloss.

3. An old word for the elbow. [bȳȝan, Sax. flectere.] Wilbraham.

BI'GLY. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughtily; with a blustering manner.

Would'st thou not rather choose a small renown,
To be the may'r of some poor paltry town;
Bigly to look, and barbarously to speak;
To pound false weights, and scanty measures break? Dryden.

BI'GNAMED.* adj. [from big and name.] Having a great or famous name.

Go, take physick; doat upon
Some big-nam'd composition;
The oraculous doctor's mystick bills,
Certain hard words made into pills.
Crashaw's Poems, p. 108.

BI'GNESS. n. s. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

If panicum be laid below, and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

People were surprized at the bignes and uncouth deformity of the camel. L'Estrange's Fables.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxen's brains. Ray on the Creation.

2. Size; whether greater or smaller; comparative bulk.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

BI'GOT.† n. s. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase, Dr. Johnson says. Bullokar, in his old English Expositor, says, that "the word came into England out of Normandy, where it continues to this day in the sense of an hypocrite, and also a scrupulous or superstitious person." Cotgrave likewise gives bigot as an old Norman word, signifying as much as the French expression de par Dieu, and the English for God's sake; made good French, he adds, and meaning exactly what Bullokar has stated. Barbazan thinks it a corruption of Visigoth. Mr. Malone is of the same opinion, and produces the word by the process of Visigot, Bisigot, Bigot; the v and b being a common change in old French. It appears that Bigots mean a barbarous people, in an old French romance, cited by Roquefort in his Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. But Roquefort seems to side with those who pretend that the word is from the Germ. by Gott, i. e. by the Deity. It is to be traced, in my opinion, to the low Lat. begutta, one of the appellations of the nuns called beguins. V. du Cange in V. Beguini. The abbreviation into bigot is easy; and the application of devoted, which has been given to bigot, certainly belongs to the beguin. It looks as if Speght, the old editor of Chaucer, considered beguin and bigot as synonymous; for he explains them as superstitious hypocrites. Nor has Francis Thynne, in his remarks on Speght in 1599, disjoined these words, but has considered them together. See Illustr. of Gower and Chaucer, 1810, p. 42.] A man unreasonably devoted to a certain party; prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Who ever is so impertinent a bigot, as to find fault, when the hills and dales of crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet without a miracle by some iron bodies, or some benign bolsterings?
Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handsom. p. 60.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first
This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurst. Tate.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive. Watts.

BI'GOT.* adj. [from the substantive.] Bigoted.

The same fortune once happened to Moliere, on the occasion of his Tartuffe, which notwithstanding afterwards has been the light in a country more bigot than our's, and is accounted amongst the best pieces of that poet.
Dryden, Dedic. of Limberham.

BI'GOTED.† adj. [old Fr. bigotté, from bigotter, to make superstitious. Cotgrave.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous: with to.

Bigoted to this idol, we disclaim
Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.
Garth.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigoted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

BI'GOTEDLY.* adv. [from bigoted.] In the manner of a bigot; pertinaciously; superstitiously.

BI'GOTRY. n. s. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions: with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BIGSO'UNDING.* adj. [from big and sound.] Having a pompous sound.

Big-sounding sentences, and words of state.
Bp. Hall's Satires, B. 1. S. 9.

BI'GSWOLN.† adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Scarce can I refrain
The execution of my big-swoln heart
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

The big-swoln waves in the Iberian stream.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 1.

Might my bigswoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow.
Addison, Cato.

BIG-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now driv'n before him, through the arching rock,
Came, tumbling heaps on heaps, the unnumber'd flock,
Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind.
Pope, Odyssey.

BI'LANDER. n. s. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals. Savary and Trevoux.

Like bilanders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep.
Dryden.

BI'LBERRY.† n. s. [from bilig, Sax. a bladder, and berry; according to Skinner; vitis idæa. Or from the Su. blabaer, a blackberry, or whortleberry.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub; whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap;
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shaksp.

BI'LBO.† n. s. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head.
Shakspeare,

And in their country's right, at Cressy, those that stood,
And that at Poitiers bath'd their bilboes in French blood. Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 16.

A bilboa-blade that bends
With every pass he makes.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

BI'LBOES.† n. s. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea. Dr. Johnson might have added, that they are so called from being fabricated at Bilboa. Great quantities of them were shipped on board the Spanish Armada; and some of them are yet to be seen in the Tower of London.

Methought I lay,
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakspeare.

BILBOQUET. n. s.* [Fr.] The toy called a cup and ball.

BILE. n. s. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquour, separated in the liver, collected into the gall bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle; because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams. Blackmore.

BILE.† n. s. [bile, Sax. a sore, perhaps from bilis, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly, Dr. Johnson says. Our old dictionaries give it byle, and bile. See Huloet, Barret, &c.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Those biles did run — say so — did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore? Shaksp.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wiseman.

BILGE.† n. s. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. See To BULGE.
Skinner.

To ply the pump, and no means slack,
May clear her bilge, and keep from wrack.
Otia Sacra, (1648,) p. 162.

To BILGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bulge.
Skinner.

BI'LIARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus.
Arbuthnot.

BI'LINGSGATE. n. s. [A cant word, borrowed from Billingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground,
And shameful billingsgate her robes adorn.
Pope, Dunciad.

BILI'NGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

BI'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundance of a bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

BILI'VE.* adv. [In our old language.] The same as belive, which see.

To BILK.† v. a. [derived by Lye and Serenius from the Gothick bilaikan, which is from the old Goth. bila, to fail.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment; to deceive; to leave in the lurch.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd.
Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden, Fab.

Antonius Campanus's fortune was no less capricious than his genius: an unknown country-girl was delivered of him under a tree, where she bilkt him: he was found by a sexton priest of the church, &c. Spence, Transl. of the Sec. Hist. of the House of Medici, (1686,) p. 249.

BILL. n. s. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign!
Milton, P. L.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day.
Dryden, Fab.

BILL. n. s. [bille, Sax. ypibille, a two-edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants arm'd, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy seat both young and old rebel.
Shakspeare.

BILL.† n. s. [old Fr. bille. Formerly all long writings, whether letters or not, were called bills; and shorter ones billets.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive
Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad.
Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury to Pope.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.

The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill.
L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.
Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.] 1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong, that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or, else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress.
Cowel.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased.
Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryd.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the foremention suppers.
Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

11. A bill of lading. An account of goods delivered on board a ship.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.
Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. B. Jonson, Catiline.
Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.
They bill, they tread; Alcyone compress'd,
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest.
Dryden.
He that bears th' artillery of Jove.
The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove.
Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.
His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote.
L'Estrange.

BI'LLET. n. s. [billet, French.]
1. A small paper; a note.
When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Cæsar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.
2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.
3. Billet doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.
'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux. Pope.
4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.
Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.
Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To BI'LLET.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.
Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say. Shakspeare, Othello.
2. To quarter soldiers, or to lodge other persons.
They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.
Some thousands of the Irish papists were in several parts billeted upon us.
Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 10.
The countries throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.
3. Simply, to dispose; to lodge.
The violence of the storm on St. John's night threw down the battlements over the room where your Grace's Manuscripts are billeted, but did no more hurt. Laud, (Letter to him,) ii. 183.

To BI'LLET.* v. n. To be quartered as soldiers; to lodge.
He billets in my lodgings; hath three fellow-pupils; all very civil, studious, &c.
Dr. Prideaux to Abp. Usher, in 1628, Parr's Lett. p. 400.

BI'LLIARDS.† n. s. Without a singular. Dr. Johnson. And yet in billiard-table, billiard-ball, and billiard-stick, the singular number is obvious. See the examples. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser: "Balyards much unfit, and shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit," M. Hubberd's Tale. Such is Dr. Johnson's observation on this word. But his remark on the Fr. etymology, in the first place, is erroneous; for billard is from bille, a ball, just as campagnard is from campagne, and as many more French words are formed. In this determination Mr. Malone agrees with me. Balyard, in the next place, is not the genuine reading of Spenser; it is balliards, as Burton and other old authors write the word; and therefore the application of yard is forced. See BALLIARDS.] A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.
Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakspeare.
Even nose and cheek, withal,
Smooth as is the billiard-ball.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.
Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard-table.
Boyle.
When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard-stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BI'LLION.* n. s. [Fr.] A million of millions. Cotgrave.

BI'LLOW.† n. s. [bilge, Germ. bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilg, Sax. a bladder; which is the Goth. balgs.] A wave swoln, and hollow.
From whence the river Dee, as silver cleen,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle rore.
Spenser, F. Q.
Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.
Chafing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.
But when loud billows lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar. Pope.

To BI'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.
The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BI'LLOW-BEATEN.* adj. [from billow and beat.] Tossed by billows: a fine and forcible compound.
He, — sitting in his own sublimed height,
Surveys and weighs the billow-beaten fate
Of towering statists.
Jordan's Divinity and Morality in Poetry,* 3. b.

BI'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.
And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson, Spring.

BI'LMAN.* n. s. [from bill and man.] He who uses a bill: Huloet calls the billman "a mower." Formerly applied to troops carrying this weapon. See BILL.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BI'NARY.† adj. [old Fr. binaire, from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BI'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese, four thousand years ago.
Chambers.

BI'NARY.* n. s. The constitution of two.
To make two or a binary, which is the first number, add but one unto one.
Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 307.
In nature are two supreme principles,
As namely, unity and binary.
Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, G. 4. b.
The union of the passive and active principle in the creation of this material heaven, is the second day's work; and the binary denotes the nature thereof. More, Conject. Cabbal. p. 26.

Pope.
8. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to.
Shakspeare.
Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred.
Watts.
9. To oblige by kindness.
10. To confine; to hinder; with in, if the restraint be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.
Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. Shakspeare.
You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations: parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

12. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.

13. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakspeare.

Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

14. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

15. To bind to. To contract with any body.

Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. 1 Cor. vii. 27.

16. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.

Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions. Addison, Spectator.

To BIND. v. n.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears. Pope.

BIRD. n. s. [bird, or brid, a chicken, Sax.] A general term for the feathered kind; a fowl. In common talk, fowl is used for the larger, and bird for the smaller kind of feathered animals.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shaks.

Sh' had all the regal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.
Milton, P. L.

Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,
And birds of air and monsters of the main. Dryd.

There are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes', and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish days. Locke.

To BIRD. v. n. [from the noun.] To catch birds.

I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house, to breakfast; after we'll a birding together. Shakspeare.

BI'RDLIKE.* adj. [from bird and like.] Resembling a bird.

For when I see, how they do mount on high,
Waving their out-stretch'd wings at liberty;
Then do I think how bird-like in a cage
My life I lead, and grief can never suage.
Niccols, Mir. for Magistrates, p. 653.

BI'RDLIME. n. s. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly; they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantone, or way-faring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

With stores of gather'd glue contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden.

I 'm ensnar'd;
Heaven's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings. Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Grew.

BI'RDLIMED.* adj. [from birdlime.] Figuratively, spread to ensnare.

I love not those "viscosa beneficia," those birdlimed kindnesses which Pliny speaks of. Howell, Letters, i. v. 18.

BIRTH.† n. s. [beopð, Sax. from beran, to bear. The Icelandick byrthur is, in like manner, from bera. It is pronounced, in some places, as if written bearth.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great.
Shakspeare, King John.

In Spain, our springs like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.

Most virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth.
Spenser, F. Q.

All truth I shall relate; nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth. Shaks.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.

5. Thing born; production; used of vegetables as well as animals.

The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature.
Shakspeare.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. B. Johnson, Epigrams.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join: and by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births of body or mind.
Milton, P. L.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care,
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heaven, a fugitive o'er earth.
Prior.

The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace.
Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess,
Who after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;
And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs fled to felicity. Milton, Ode.

7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place aboard for the mess to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that mess. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

BI'RTHDAY. n. s. [from birth and day.]

1. The day on which any one is born.

Orient light,
Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld
Birthday of heaven and earth. Milton, P. L.

2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birthday; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Shakspeare.

They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it
With double pomp of sadness:
'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me breath.
Dryden.

Your country dames,
Whose cloaths returning birthday claims. Prior.

BI'RTHDOM, n. s. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare, birthdoom. It is derived from birth and dom. See DOM; as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
Bestride our downfaln birthdom. Shakspeare.

BI'RTHNIGHT. n. s. [from birth and night.]

1. The night on which any one is born.

The angelick song in Bethlehem field,
On thy birthnight, that sung the Saviour born.
Milton, P. R.

2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.

A youth more glittering than a birthnight beau.
Pope.

BI'RTHPLACE. n. s. [from birth and place.] Place where any one is born.

My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy's town. Shakspeare.

A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift.

BI'RTHRIGHT. n. s. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first born.

Thy blood and virtue
Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness
Shares with thy birthright. Shakspeare.

Thou hast been found
By merit, more than birthright, Son of God. Milton.

I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,
But will preserve the birthright of my passion.
Otway.

While no baseness in this breast I find,
I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryd.

To say, that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments.
Addison.

BI'RTHSONG.* n. s. [from birth and song.] A song sung at the nativity of a person.

An host of heavenly quiristers do sing
A joyfull birth-song to heaven's late-born king.
Fitz-geffry, Blessed Birthday, (1634) p. 45.

BI'SHOP. n. s. [from episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biꝛcop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendant, of religious matters in the Christian church.
Ayliffe, Parerg.

You shall find him well accompany'd
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.
Shakspeare.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops.
K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remains still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office, and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them. Watts, Log.

BI'SHOP. n. s. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,
Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,
They'll make a sweet bishop when gentle folks sup.
Swift.

To BI'SHOP.† v. a. [Sax. biꝛceopoð, confirmed by the bishop.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.

They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,
To be counted children of poetry,
Except confirm'd and bishopped by thee.
Donne, Poems, p. 172.

BI'SHOPLIKE.* } adj. [from bishop. Both
BI'SHOPLY. } old words in our language.] Belonging to or becoming a bishop.

He hath nothing directly to prove that Peter did excel the other apostles in bishoplike authority.
Fulke's Retentive, p. 249.

To you I commit this business, that both by bishoply censure, and kingly authority, filthy livers may be cast out of the church.
Weever, Fun. Monuments.

BI'SHOPRICK.† n. s. [biꝛcoppice, Saxon; literally, as Mr. Malone also observes, the kingdom of a bishop; the Sax. pice signifying a kingdom. The appurtenances of a bishop are all of princely denomination; his diocese is his kingdom; his mansion, his palace; his seat, his throne; and he has also his chancellor.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop, and bishoprick of this realm.
Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Addison, Spectator.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferments in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves.
Swift, Sent. of a Ch. of Eng. Man.

BI'SHOPSWEED. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

A prince, who in a forest rides astray,
And, weary, to some cottage finds the way,
Talks of no pyramids, or fowls, or bisks of fish,
But hungry sups his cream, serv'd up in earthen dish. King.

BI'SKET. See BISCUIT.

BI'SMUTH. n. s. The same as marcasite; a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature, found at Misnia; supposed to be a recrementitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin. Some esteem it a metal sui generis; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin. Quincy.

BI'SON.* n. s. [Fr. bison, Gr. βίσων.] The bison; a kind of hulch-backt, rough-maned, broad-faced, and great-eyed, wild ox; that will not be taken as long as he can stand, nor be tamed after he is taken. Cotgrave.

The bison seems to be inaccurately placed for the pygarg, in the margin of the Bible, Deut. xiv. 5.

BISSE'XTILE.* n. s. [from bis, and sextilis, Lat.] Leap year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute; and this was the occasion of bissextile, or leap year. Brown.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile or intercular day: called bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Holder on Time.

BI'SSON.† adj. [derived by Skinner from by, for besides, and Teut. sinn, sight. In our old lexicography, it is beasom. "Blind or beasom-born, cœcigenus." Huloet. So it is, in the old copies of Shakspeare, "beesom conspicuities," Coriolanus; which Theobald changed to bisson; for which other commentators also rightly contend. For though beezen, or beesen is still in use, in some parts of the north of England, for blind; it is only a corruption of the Sax. biꝛen, blind, which however they have not noticed.] Blind.

But who, oh! who hath seen the mobled queen,
Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
With bisson rheum? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of this character? Shakspeare, Coriol.

BI'STOURY. n. s. [bistouri, Fr.] A surgeon's instrument, used in making incisions, of which there are three sorts; the blade of the first turns like that of a lancet; but the straight bistoury has the blade fixed in the handle; the crooked bistoury is shaped like a half moon, having the edge on the inside.
Chambers.

BISU'LCOUS. adj. [bisulcus, Lat.] Cloven-footed.

For the swine, although multiparus, yet being bisulcous, and only cloven-footed, are farrowed with open eyes, as other bisulcous animals.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

BIT. n. s. [biꝛol, Saxon.] Signifies the whole machine of all the iron appurtenances of a bridle, as the bit-mouth, the branches, the curb, the sevil holes, the tranchefil, and the cross-chains; but sometimes it is used to signify only the bit-mouth in particular.
Farrier's Dict.

They light from their horses, pulling off their bit, that they might something refresh their mouths upon the grass. Sidney.

We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,
The needful bits and curbs of headstrong steeds.
Shakspeare.

He hath the bit between his teeth, and away he runs. Stilling fleet.

Unus'd to the restraint
Of curbs and bits, and fleeter than the winds.
Addison.

The BITS.* [Fr. bittes.] In naval language, two main pieces of timber, to which the cable is fastened when the ship rides at anchor.

BIT.† n. s. [from bite, Sax. bita, a morsel.]

1. As much meat as is put into the mouth at once.

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted! Shakspeare.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits. Shakspeare.

The mice found it troublesome to be still climbing the oak for every bit they put in their bellies. L'Estrange.

John was the darling; he had all the good bits, was crammed with good pullet, chicken, and capon. Arbuthnot.

2. A small piece of any thing.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smoaking lard,
A sav'ry bit that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

He bought at thousands, what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit. Pope.

His majesty has power to grant a patent for stamping round bits of copper, to every subject he hath. Swift.

3. A Spanish West Indian silver coin, valued at seven-pence halfpenny.

4. A bit the better or worse. In the smallest degree.

There are few that know all the tricks of these lawyers; for aught I can see, your case is not a bit clearer than it was seven years ago. Arbuthnot.

To BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put the bridle upon a horse.

BITCH. n. s. [bicca, bicce, Sax.]

1. The female of the canine kind; as, the wolf, the dog, the fox, the otter.

And at his feet, a bitch wolf suck did yield
To two young babes. Spenser.

I have been credibly informed, that a bitch will nurse, play with, and be fond of young foxes, as much as, and in place of her puppies. Locke.

2. A name of reproach for a woman.

Him you'll call a dog, and her a bitch. Pope.

John had not run a madding so long, had it not been for an extravagant bitch of a wife. Arbuthnot.

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.

My very enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire. Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate t' unloose. Shakspeare.

These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples. Shakspeare.

The winning way we'll follow;
We'll bait that men may bite fair.
Beaum. and Fl. Wildgoose Chace.

He falls; his arms upon his body sound,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground. Dryden.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who has now indeed recovered. Tatler, No. 62.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a falsity; though they have shewed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shaks.

Full fifty years harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe, Amb. Stepm.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a different talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites. Roscommon.

4. To cut; to wound.

I've seen the day, with my good biting faulchion,
I would have made them skip. Shakspeare.

5. To make the mouth smart with an acrid taste, from the old usage of it, in the general sense, to cause to smart.

No ointment that would cleanse or bite. Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 633.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting. Bacon.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away:
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit. Pope.

If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady. Pope.

BITE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm? South.

Nor dogdays parching heat, that splits the rocks,
Are half so harmful as the greedy flocks;
Their venom'd bite, and scars indented on the stocks. Dryden, Virgil's Georgicks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite. Walton's Angler.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud; in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be ne'er so wise,
He may be caught with sober lies;
For take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite. Swift.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

BITTER.† adj. [biter, Saxon, from the Goth. baitrs.]

1. Having a hot acrid, biting, taste, like wormwood.

Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Though a man in a fever should, from sugar, have a bitter taste, which at another time produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall. Locke.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.

Friends now fast sworn,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Colossians, iii. 19.

The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal. Spratt.

3. Calamitous; miserable.

I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day. Amos, viii. 10.

Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to me, only dying;
Go with me, like good angels, to my end. Shaks.

A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shaks.

And shun the bitter consequence: for know,
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgrest, inevitably thou shalt die. Milton, P. L.

Tell him, that if I bear my bitter fate,
'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son. Dryd.

4. Painful; inclement.

The fowl the borders fly,
And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky. Dryden.

5. Sharp; reproachful; satirical.

Go with me,
And, in the breath of bitter words, let's smother
My damned son. Shakspeare.

6. Mournful; afflicted.

Wherefore is light given unto him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul? Job, iii. 20.

7. In any manner, unpleasing or hurtful.

Bitter is an equivocal word; there is bitter wormwood, there are bitter words, there are bitter enemies, and a bitter cold morning. Watts, Logick.

BI'TTER.* n. s.

1. Any thing bitter.

A little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulpht,
To shake the sounding marsh. Thomson.

BI'TTERN. n. s. [from bitter.] A very bitter liquour, which drains off in making of common salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt. Quincy.

BI'TTERNESS.† n. s. [Sax. biteprepe. Not often used in the plural number. Bishop Hall affords an example: "the word is in the original with bitternesses." Rem. p. 186.]

1. A bitter taste.

The idea of whiteness, or bitterness, is in the mind, exactly answering that power which is in any body to produce it there. Locke.

2. Malice; grudge; hatred; implacability.

The bitterness and animosity between the commanders was such, that a great part of the army was marched. Clarendon.

3. Sharpness; severity of temper.

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shaks.

Pierpoint and Crew appeared now to have contracted more bitterness and sourness than formerly, and were more reserved towards the king's commissioners. Clarendon.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.

Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness. Bacon.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.

There appears much joy in him, even so much that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. Zech. xii. 10.

Most pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of their natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness. Wake, Prep. for Death.

I oft, in bitterness of soul, deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Pope, Odyssey.

BI'TTERSWEET. n. s. [from bitter and sweet.] The name of an apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.

It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting. South.

When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean. Watts.

BI'TTERVETCH. n. s. [ervum, Lat.] A plant.

BI'TTERWORT. n. s. [gentiana, Lat.] An herb.

BI'TTOUR.† n. s. [butour, Fr. bittore, Ital. from the Lat. bootaurus, Minsheu thinks, because "boat ut taurus," he makes a noise like a bull.] The name of a bird, commonly called the bittern; but perhaps as properly bittour. It is, in some places, called a butter-bump. See BITTERN.

Then to the waters brink she laid her head;
And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said, I tell. Dryden.

BITU'ME. n. s. [from bitumen.] Bitumen. See BITUMEN.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabberen, Teut.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret; it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,
Is crept ino the bosom of the sea. Shakspeare.

Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton, Comus.

Nature has made man's breast no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Dryd.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing so great a truth. Stilling fleet.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
The blackest of all female deeds;
Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo sits, and list'ning mocks. Swift.

2. To tell; in a good sense: not used.

That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage. Shaks.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.

Your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakspeare.

BLAB. n. s. [from the verb.] A telltale: a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous betrayer of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler? Bacon.

To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton, S. A.

Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. L'Estrange.

I should have gone about shewing my letters, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my acquaintance. Swift.

BLA'BBER.† n. s. [from blab.] A tatler; a telltale. Sherwood.

To BLA'BBER.† v. n.

1. To whistle to a horse. Skinner.
2. To falter; to fib; to tell tales; Minsheu and Cotgrave; both of whom derive it from the old Fr. baboyer; but it is from the Teut. blabberen, to talk foolishly.

Now you may see, how easie it is to speak right, and not to blabber like boors in any speech. Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. 1623, p. 126.

BLA'BBERLIPPED. Skinner. See BLOBBERLIPPED.

BLACK.† adj. [blac, Sax.]

1. Of the colour of night.

In the twilight in the evening, in the black and dark night. Proverbs, vii. 9.

Aristotle has problems which enquire why the sun makes man black, and not the fire; why it whitens wax, yet blacks the skin? Brown.

2. Dark.

The heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings, xviii. 45.

3. Cloudy of countenance; sullen.

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me. Shakspeare.

Horrible; wicked; atrocious.

Either my country never must be freed,
Or I consenting to so black a deed. Dryden

5. Obscure; mysterious. To this definition of black belongs the application of it to necromancy, as Minsheu terms "the black art;" which is yet an expression not omitted in enumerating the many things which a conjurer is supposed to know!

Deceitful magick told the Earl of Gowry, the Earl of Gowry should be king of Scotland;—the enigmatical black art bears Fairfax in hand, that the Viscount of ——— shall be king of England. Archdeacon Arnway's Tab. of Moderation, p. 107.

6. Dismal; mournful.

A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shaks.

7. Black and Blue. The colour of a bruise; a stripe.

Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

And, wing'd with speed and fury, flew
To rescue knight from black and blue. Hudibras.

BLACK-BROWED. adj. [from black and brow.] Having black eyebrows; gloomy; dismal; threatening.

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,
Give me my Romeo. Shakspeare.

Thus when a black-brow'd gust begins to rise,
White foam at first on the curl'd ocean fries,
Then roars the main, the billows mount the skies. Dryden.

BLACK-BRYONY. n. s. [tamnus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLACK-CATTLE. Oxen, bulls, and cows.

The other part of the grazier's business is what we call black-cattle, produces hides, tallow, and beef, for exportation. Swift.

BLACK-EARTH. n. s. It is every where obvious on the surface of the ground, and what we call mould. Woodward.

BLACK-EYED.* adj. [from black and eye.] Having black eyes.

I must resign
My black-ey'd maid, to please the powers divine. Dryden, Iliad 1.

BLACK-FACED.* adj. [from black and face.] Having a dark or black face.

This black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse. Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLACK-GUARD.† adj. [from black and guard.] A cant word amongst the vulgar; by which is implied a dirty fellow, of the meanest kind, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites only the modern authority of Swift. But the introduction of this word into our language belongs not to the vulgar, and is more than a century prior to the time of Swift. Mr. Malone agrees with me, in exhibiting the two first of the following examples. The black guard is evidently designed to imply a fit attendant on the devil. Mr. Gifford, however, in his late edition of Ben Jonson's Works, assigns an origin of the name, different from what the old examples, which I have cited, seem to countenance. It has been formed, he says, from those "mean and dirty dependants, in great houses, who were selected to carry coals to the kitchen, halls, &c. To this smutty regiment, who attended the progresses, and rode in the carts with the pots and kettles, which, with every other article of furniture, were then moved from palace to palace, the people, in derision, gave the name of black guards, a term since become sufficiently familiar, and never properly explained." Ben Jonson, ii. 169. vii. 250.

They are taken for no better than rakehells or the devil's blacke guarde.

Stanihurst's Descript. of Ireland, ch. 8.

As the blessed angels are ministering spirits, so the devil and his blacke guard are the meanes and instruments which God hath used and employed in all times — eyther for the tryal of the godly, or chastisement of the wicked.

H. Howard's Defensative, &c. (1583.)

A lamentable case, that the devil's black guard should be God's soldiers.

Fuller's Holy War, p. 18.

One o' the black guard had his hand in my vestry, and was groping of me as nimbly as the Christmas cut-purse. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

I was alone among a coachfull of women, and those of the electors duchesse chamber forsoothe, which you would have said to have been of the blacke guard. Moryson's Itinerary, part 1. p. 13.

Let a black-guard boy be always about the house, to send on your errands, and go to market for you on rainy days. Swift.

BLACK-GUARD.* n. s. A mean, contemptible fellow.

From the black-guard to the grim sir in office, there are few hold other tenets. Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

One of those black-guards of usurpation, who could give his voice for the horridest murder. Gent's Hist. of Ripon, 1733. p. 118.

BLACK-JACK.* n. s. The leathern cup of elder times. See JACK.

He runs to the black-jack, fills his flaggon, spreads the table, and serves up dinner. Milton, Colasterion.

I drink my porter out of a eathern black-jack. Student, ii. 258.

BLACK-LEAD. n. s. [from black and lead.] A mineral found in the lead mines, much used for pencils; it is not fusible; or not without a very great heat.

You must first get your black-lead sharpened finely, and put fast into quills, for your rude and first draught. Peacham.

BLACK-MAIL. n. s. A certain rate of money, corn, cattle, or other consideration, paid to men allied with robbers, to be by them protected from the danger of such as usually rob or steal. Cowel.

BLACK-MOUTHED.* adj. [from black and mouth.] Using foul language; scurrilous.

He will readily grant, that if the dead rise not, then his preaching is vain, and their faith is also vain; then Christian religion is all artifice and delusion; the dream of enthusiasts, the project of politicians, the craft of priests, or whatever else the most black-mouth'd atheists charged it with. Killingbeck's Serm. p. 118.

BLACK-MONDAY.* n. s. A day recorded in the history of this country by that name.

Black-Monday is Easter-Monday, and was so called on this occasion: In the 34th of Edw. III. the 14th of April, and the morrow after Easter-day, king Edward, with his host, lay before the city of Paris, which day was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold, that many men died on their horses' backs with the cold. Wherefore, unto this day, it hath been called the Black-Monday. Stowe, Hist. of Eng.

It was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-Monday last. Shaks. Mer. of Venice.

BLACK-PEOPLED.* adj. [from black and people.] Having people of a black colour.

The admiring queen, wing'd with thy fame,
From her black-peopled empire came. Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 23.

BLACK-PUDDING. n. s. [from black and pudding.] A kind of food made of blood and grain.

Through they were lin'd with many a piece
Of ammunition bread and cheese,
And fat blackpuddings, proper food
For warriours that delight in blood. Hudibras.

BLACK-ROD. n. s. [from black and rod.] The usher belonging to the order of the garter; so called from the black-rod he carries in his hand. He is of the king's chamber, and likewise usher of the parliament. Cowel.

BLACK-VISAGED.* adj. [from black and visage.] Having a black appearance.

Hurry amain from our black-visag'd shows;
We shall affright their eyes. Marston's Antonio and Mellida, Prol.

BLACK.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A black colour.

Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dungeons, and the scowl of night. Shakspeare.

For the production of black, the corpuscles must be less than any of those which exhibit colours. Newton.

2. Mourning.

We never bethink ourselves, or consult of moderate diet but in blacks and mourning, when our folly and intemperance hath cast us into some disease. Hales's Sermons, at the Close of his Remains, p. 21.

How like a silent stream shaded with night,
And gliding softly with our windy sighs,
Moves the whole frame of this solemnity!
Tears, sighs, and blacks, filling the similie. Massinger's and Field's Fatal Dowry.

Rise, wretched widow, rise; nor, undeplor'd,
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

3. A blackamoor.

4. That part of the eye which is black.

It suffices that it be in every part of the air, which is as big as the black or sight of the eye. Digby.

5. A stain.

Defiling her white lawn of chastity
With ugly blacks of lust. Rowley, All's Lost by Lust.

To BLACK.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.] To make black; to blacken.

Blacking over the paper with ink, not only the ink would be quickly dried up, but the paper, that I could not burn before, we quickly set on fire. Boyle.

Then in his fury black'd the raven o'er,
And bid him prate in his white plumes no more. Addison.

BLA'CKAMOOR. n. s. [from black and Moor.] A man by nature of a black complexion; a negro.

They are no more afraid of a blackamoor, or a lion, than of a nurse, or a cat. Locke.

BLA'CKBERRIED Heath. [empetrum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'CK-BERRY.† n. s. [Sax. blacbeꝛian.] The fruit of the bramble.

The policy of these crafty sneering rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten cheese Nestor, and that same dogfox Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry. Shakspeare.

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood;
How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild,
And fearless at the glittering fauchion smil'd.
Gay.

BLA'CKBERRY Bush. n. s. [rubus, Lat.] A species of bramble.

BLA'CKBIRD. n s. [from black and bird.] The name of a bird.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

The crib was down, the blackbird caught. Swift.

BLA'CKCOCK.* n. s. The heath-cock; the black game, common in the north of England and in Scotland.

After dinner, we went out with guns, to try if we could find any blackcock.
Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

To BLA'CKEN.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.]

1. To make of a black colour.

Bless'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand
Blacken'd by crowds. Prior.

While the long fun'rals blacken all the way.
Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.

That little cloud that appear'd at first to Elijah's servant, no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame; or make infamous.

Let us blacken him, let us blacken him, what we can, said that miscreant Harrison, of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.

The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.

To BLA'CKEN. v. n. To grow black or dark.

The hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.

BLA'CKNER.* n. s. [from blacken.] One who blackens any thing. Sherwood.

BLA'CKISH.† adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.

As the stream of brooks they pass away; which are blackish by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid. Job, vi. 16.

Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish oil. Boyle.

BLA'CKLY.* adv. [from black.]

1. Darkly, in colour.

Lastly stood War, in glittering arms yclad,
With visage grim, stern looks, and blackly hued.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

2. Atrociously.

Deeds so blackly grim and horrid.
Feltham's Resolves, B. ii. R. 31.

BLA'CKMOOR. n. s. [from black and Moor.] A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa; nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony. Brown, Vulg. Err.

More to West
The realm of Bacchus to the blackmoor sea.
Milton, P. R.

BLA'CKNESS. n. s. [from black.]

1. Black colour.

Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or stifle, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an intenser blackness. Newton.

His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite,
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darkness.

His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,
More fiery by night's blackness. Shakspeare.

3. Atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.

BLA'CKSMITH. n. s. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases.
Howel.

Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whoremaster will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLA'CKTAIL. n. s. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Dict.

BLA'CKTHORN.† n. s. [from black and thorn.] The same with the sloe. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

Love shall, in that tempestuous shower,
Her brightest blossoms like the blackthorn show:
Weak friendship prospers by the power
Of fortune's sun: I'll in her winter grow.
Habington's Castara, p. 98.

BLA'DDER. n. s. [bladdpe, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatable for receiving and containing the urine, till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was.
Spenser, F. Q.

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers, in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLA'DDER-SENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'DDERED.* adj. [from bladder.] Swoln like a bladder.

They affect greatness in all they write, but it is a bladdered greatness, like that of the vain man whom Seneca describes; — an ill habit of body, full of humours, and swelled with dropsy. Dryden, Dedic. of the Æneid.

BLADE.† n s. [blæd, bleb, Sax. part. from blepan, or blopan: French, bled, low Lat. bladus.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round.
Thomson.

BLADE.† n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy.
Spenser, F. Q.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage. Fuller puns upon the word, always fond of an opportunity to be facetious.

Sure I am, however at this time they might turn edge, they had been formerly true blades for his holiness [the pope].
Fuller, Hist. of the Holy War, p. 234.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade.
Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder. } n. s. The bone
BLADEBONE. } called by anatomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relicks of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

To BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish, or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass.
Shakspeare.

As where the light'ning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds.
Dryden.

BLA'DESMITH.* n. s. [from blade and smith, faber gladiorum.] A sword cutler.
Huloet.

BLAIN.† n. s. [blezene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch, from the Iceland. blina, a pustule.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

It shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and beast. Exod. ix. 9.

Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton, P. L.

Whene'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;

Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLAKE.* adj. [Teut. bleeck, pale.] Yellow: a northern word: "as blake as a paigle," i. e. as a cowslip. Grose. Still in use. See Craven Gloss. and Brocket's N. Country Words.

BLA'MABLE.† adj. [old Fr. blasmable.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS.† n. s. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

Scripture — mentioneth its sometimes freer use, than at other, without the least blameableness.
Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 505.

If he had not freedom of will to determine himself towards good and evil, as he pleased, he must then be under a fatal necessity of doing whatsoever he should happen to do; and then as he could give no proof of his temper and inclination, so there could be no such thing as acceptableness to God when he did well, nor blamableness when he did otherwise.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. III.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME.† v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame.
Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend.
Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomoreus he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

4. To blemish; to bring reproach upon.

When he saw his faire Priscilla by,
He deeply sigh'd, and groaned inwardly,
To think of this ill state in which she stood;
To which she for his sake had weetingly
Now brought herself, and blam'd her noble blood.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 11.

BLAME.† n. s. [old Fr. blasme.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction: here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakspeare.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Spenser, F. Q.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun, Dr. Johnson says: To blame, in French, à tort; culpable; worthy of censure. But it is an adverbial mode of speech; so, to seek means without knowledge; and thus, to blame means without excuse. See To SEEK, adv.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.
Shakspeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner?
Stilling fleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL.† adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakspeare.

Thy blameful lines, bespotted so with sin,
Mine eyes would cleanse, ere they to read begin.
Drayton, Epist. Matilda to K. John.

BLA'MELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r.
Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath.
Joshua, ii. 17.

BLA'MELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLA'MELESSNESS.† n. s. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferiour agent.
Hammond.

A man of the primitive sort of Christians for humility, love, blamelessness, meekness.
Baxter's Life and Times, 1696. P. 3. p. 17.

BLA'MER. n. s. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denizon'd a stranger, who, mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought
Virtues in corners. Donne, Poems, p. 159.

BLA'MEWORTHY.† adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Or esteemeth such an one blame-worthie.
Martin on the Marriage of Priests, (1554,) sign. Kk. iii. 6.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forborne to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

That the sending of a divorce to her husband was not blameworthy, he affirms because the man was heinously vicious.
Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Div. ii. 22.

The disturbance and fear, which often follow upon a man's having done an injury, arise from a sense of his being blameworthy.
Butler, Anal. of Rel. P. 1. ch. 3.

BLA'MEWORTHINESS.* n. s. [from blameworthy.] What is deserving blame.

Praise and blame express what actually are; praiseworthiness and blameworthiness, what naturally ought to be the sentiments of other people with regard to our character and conduct.
A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sent. P. 3. ch. 3.

To BLANCH.† v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear. Shaks. Macbeth.

A way of whiting wax cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun, and a few blanched almonds. Wiseman.

3. To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not now in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Bacon. Other good authors use it; and probably the modern vulgar expression "to blink (i. e. to evade) the question," is a corruption of to blanch the question.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness.
Bacon, Holy War.

The doctors of that church have their colourable pretences, wherewith to blanch over these errours.
Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, p. 242.

I suppose you will not blanch Paris in your way.
Sir H. Wotton, Lett. to Milton.

A man horribly cheats his own soul, who upon any pretence, or under any temptation whatsoever, forsakes or blanches the true principles of religion.
Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 3.

To BLANCH. v. n. To evade; to shift; to speak soft.

Optimi consiliarii mortui; books will speak plain, when counsellors blanch. Bacon.

BLA'NCHER. n. s. [from blanch.] A whitener. Dict.

BLAND. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse
Came prologue, and apology to prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd.
Milton, P. L.

An even calm
Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

To BLAND.* [Mr. Mason introduces this word as a verb from the adjective; but the word, in the example, is the adjective itself used adverbially. Mr. Mason has garbled the passage, by giving only the line in which bland occurs. Such a verb, however, would be useful, as meaning to soothe.]

Loath that foul blot, that hellish fierbrand,
Disloiall lust, fair Beauty's foulest blame,

That base affection, which your ears would bland
Commend to you by love's abused name.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

BLANDA'TION.* n. s. [from blanditiæ, Lat.] A piece of flattery.

One had flattered Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, with this blandation. Camden, Remains.

BLANDI'LOQUENCE.* n. s. [Lat. blandiloquentia. This word is found in our lexicography of a century since, and is admitted into foreign dictionaries which illustrate our language.] Fair and flattering speech; courteous language; compliment.

Gloss. Anglicana Nova (1707).

BLA'NDIMENT.* n. s. [Lat. blandimentum.] Allurement; enticement. An elegant and old word.

That they entice nor allure no man with suasions and blandiments to take the religion upon him.
Injunctions to the Monast. temp. Hen. VIII. Burnet, vol. i. App.

To BLA'NDISH.† v. a. [blandir, Fr. from blandior, Lat.] To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage than that of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He might have found it, however, in our old lexicography. Bullokar's and Sherwood's dictionaries both give it: It is indeed one of our most ancient verbs.

Thou wert wont to hurtelen and dispisen her with many words, whan she was blandishyng and present, &c. Chaucer, Boeth. l. 2. pros. prima.

In this psalme he spekith of Christ and his follewris blandishyng to us.
Lewis, Hist. Tr. of the Bible, p. 18.

She, blandishing, by Dunsmore drives along.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. xiii.

Must'ring all her wiles,
With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd, and weary'd out.
Milton, S. A.

BLA'NDISHER.* n. s. [old Fr. blandisseur.] One who blandishes.

Cotgrave and Sherwood.

BLA'NDISHING.* n. s. [from blandish.] Expression of kindness; blandishment.

Flat enemies are honest harmless things,
Because they tell us what we have to fear;
But double-hearted friends, whose blandishings
Tickle our ears but sting our bosoms, are
Those dangerous Syrens, whose sweet maiden face
Is only mortal treason's burnish'd glass.
Beaumont's Psyche, C. 6. st. 3.

BLA'NDISHMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. blandissement.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he hent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,
'Gan smile. Spenser, F. Q.

Each bird and beast, behold
Approaching two and two; these cow'ring low
With blandishment. Milton, P. L.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryd.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandishments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK.† adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Menage from Albianus, thus: Albianus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, blanicus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blancker, to shine, Dr. Johnson says; and they have also the adjective blanc, white; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, bleach, to whiten.]

1. White.

To the blanc moon
Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five
Their planetary motions. Milton, P. L.

2. Without writing; unwritten; empty of all marks.

Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters,
Whereto, when they know that men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold.
Shakspeare.

Upon the debtor side, I find innumerable articles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper. Addison.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton, P. L.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood, and blank, while horrour chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.
Milton, P. L.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanched, or missed. See To BLANCH, to balk.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it. Shakspeare.

Long have your ears been fill'd with tragick parts;
Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts.
Addison, Prol. to the Drummer.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue.
Addison on Italy.

BLANK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you. Swift.

A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears. Shakspeare.

In fortune's lottery lies
A heap of blanks, like this, for one small prize.
Dryden.

The world the coward will despise,
When life's a blank, who pulls not for a prize.
Dryden.

3. A paper from which the writing is effaced.

She has left him
The blank of what he was;
I tell thee, eunuch, she has quite unmann'd him.
Dryden.

4. A paper unwritten; any thing without marks or characters.

For him, I think not on him; for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me.
Shakspeare.

Omission to do what is necessary,
Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Shaksp.

For the book of knowledge fair,
Presented with an universal blank
Of nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd.
Milton, P. L.

Life may be one great blank, which, though not blotted with sin, is yet without any characters of grace or virtue. Rogers.

5. The point to which an arrow is directed; so called, because, to be more visible, it was marked with white. Now disused.

Slander,
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports its poison'd shot. Shakspeare.

6. Aim; shot. Not used.

The harlot king
Is quite beyond my aim; out of the blank
And level of my brain. Shakspeare.

I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,
For my free speech. Shakspeare.

7. Object to which any thing is directed.

See better, Lear, and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye. Shakspeare.

To BLANK. v. a. [from blank; blanchir, Fr.]

1. To damp; to confuse; to dispirit.

Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy.
Shakspeare.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshippers.
Milton, S. A.

If the atheist, when he dies, should find that his soul remains, how will this man be amazed and blanked? Tillotson.

2. To efface; to annul.

All former purposes were blanked, the governour at a bay, and all that charge lost and cancelled. Spenser on Ireland.

BLA'NKET.† n. s. [blanchette, modern Fr. blanket, old Fr. Vid. Roquefort, Suppl. Gloss. Rom.]

1. A woollen cover, soft, and loosely woven, spread commonly upon a bed, over the linen sheet, for the procurement of warmth.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold! hold! Shakspeare.

The abilities of man must fall short on one side or other, like too scanty a blanket when you are a-bed; if you pull it upon your shoulders, you leave your feet bare; if you thrust it down upon your feet, your shoulders are uncovered. Temple.

Himself among the storied chiefs he spies,
As from the blanket high in air he flies. Pope.

2. A kind of pear, sometimes written blanquet.

To BLA'NKET.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a blanket.

My face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my loins; tie all my hair in knots. Shaks.

2. To toss in a blanket, by way of penalty or contempt.

I'll send for him to my lodging, and have him blanketed when thou wilt, man.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. Rom. ii. 24.

2. To speak evil of.

The truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd
And does blaspheme his breed. Shakspeare.

Those who from our labours heap their board,
Blaspheme their feeder, and forget their lord. Pope.

To BLASPHE'ME. v. n. To speak blasphemy.

Liver of blaspheming Jew. Shakspeare.

I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme. Acts, xxvi. 11.

BLASPHE'MER. n. s. [from blaspheme.] A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy, i. 13.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHE'MING.* n. s. [from blaspheme.] The act of blasphemy.

Those desperate atheisms, those Spanish renouncings, and Italian blasphemings, have now so prevailed in our Christian camps, that, if any restrain them, he shall be upbraided as no soldier. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BLA'SPHEMOUS.† adj. [from blaspheme. It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second, Dr. Johnson says. Milton adopted the accent from the elder poets; for Sidney and Spenser both use it on the second syllable; or it might be the common accent in Milton's time. Sherwood, his contemporary, gives the adjective, in his dictionary, thus; blasphemous or blasphematory. Spenser also accents blasphemy on the second syllable.]

1. Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods dost move,
To cause full wrath, which thou can'st not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney, B. ii.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous? Milton, P. R.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South.

2. Irreverent with regard to men: not now in use.

Stone, the fool, was well whipped in Bridewell, for a blasphemous speech, "that there went sixty fools into Spaine besides my lord admiral and his two sons."

Sir D. Carleton to Mr. Winwood (1604) Winwood's Mem. ii. 52.

BLA'SPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift.

BLA'SPHEMY. n. s. [from blaspheme.] Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury unto God himself, either by words or writing. Ayliffe.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must. Shakspeare.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST.† n. s. [from blæſt, Sax. blasen, Germ., to blow. "Blas procul dubio, apud Celticas gentes propè omnes, flandi significationem habuit: inde est blasen, et Su. blæsa, &c." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 91.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakspeare.

Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakspeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
And on the secret shelves with fury cast. Dryden.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tyger. Shakspeare.

He blew his trumpet — the angelick blast
Fill'd all the regions. Milton, P. L.

The Veline fountains, the sulphureous Nar,
Shake at the baleful blast, the signal of the war. Dryden.

Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess sounding two different trumpets, it is certain, villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former. Swift.

3. The stroke of a malignant planet; the infection of any thing pestilential: from the verb To blast.

By the blast of God they perish. Job, iv. 9.

To BLAST.† v. a. [Sax. blæſtan, pret. blæſt.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakspeare.

Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the store of heaven,
Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man,
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin! Addison.

2. To make to wither.

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way. Shakspeare.

And behold seven thin ears, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them. Genesis.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to day;
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play? Pope.

3. To lose blood medicinally; as, he bled for a fever.

4. To drop as blood. It is applied to any thing that drops from somebody on incision, as blood from an animal.

For me the balm shall bleed and amber flow,
The coral redden, and the ruby glow. Pope.

5. To yield or produce well: the corn bleeds well. Grose and Brockett's N. Country Words.

To BLEED. v. a. To let blood; to take blood from.

That from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote. Pope.

BLEIT. } adj. Bashful. It is used in Scot-
BLATE. } land, and the bordering counties.

To BLE'MISH.† v. a. [from blame, Junius; from bleme, white, Fr. Skinner; or rather from an old Fr. verb blesmer. See BLEMISH, in Kelham, Norm. Dict. blesmys, v. a. broken.]

1. To mark with any deformity.

Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemished. Sidney.

2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.

Not that my verse would blemish all the fair;
But yet if some be bad, 'tis wisdom to beware.
Dryden.

Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury. Addison.

BLE'MISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.

As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. Leviticus, xxiv. 20.

Open it so from the eyelid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remediless blemish. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you. Hooker.

And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us, some reflection on our negligence? Sprat.

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character. Addison.

3. A soil; turpitude; taint; deformity.

First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish,
Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize. Sidney.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,
That clear she died from blemish criminal.
Spenser, F. Q.

Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament? Hooker.

Not a hair perish'd:
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before. Shakspeare.

Evadne's husband! 'tis a fault
To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller.

That your duty may no blemish take,
I will myself your father's captive make. Dryden.

Such a mirth as this is capable of making a beauty, as well as a blemish, the subject of derision. Addison.

BLE'MISHLESS.* adj. [from blemish and less.] Without blemish or spot.

A life in all so blemishless.
Feltham's Lusoria, xxxvii.

BLE'MISHMENT.* n. s. [old Fr. blemissement, Kelham's Norm. Dict.] Disgrace.

The one seeketh the reformation of him, whom he impeacheth; the other worketh, as much as may be, his ignominy and blemishment.

Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 193.

For dread of blame, and honour's blemishment.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 36.

To BLENCH.† v. n. To shrink; to start back; to give way: not used, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Shakspeare. It is not, however, peculiar to him; and an excellent writer of modern times authorises its present use. Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It resembles to blink so nearly, as to shew that it is a corruption of that word. Iceland. blinka, Germ. blinkeln, Dan. blincken, to twinkle with the eye; hence to blink, and in our northern language blenk; whence to blench, to start as quickly as the twinkle of an eye. Teut. blencke. See BLENCH.

I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blench,
I know my course. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Patience herself, what goddess ere she be,
Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Hold you ever to our special drift;
Though sometimes you do blench from this to that,
As cause doth minister. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

I know his people
Are of his own choice men, that will not totter,
Nor blench much at a bullet.
Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

[They] were not afraid steadily to look in the face of that glaring and dazzling influence, at which the eyes of eagles have blenched.
Burke, Speech on American Taxation.

To BLENCH. v. a. To hinder; to obstruct. Not used.

The rebels besieged them, winning the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to blench the defendants' sight, and dead their shot. Carew.

BLENCH.* n. s. [Teut. blencke.] A start.

These blenches gave my heart another youth.
Shakspeare, Son. 110.

BLE'NCHER.* n. s. [from blench.] That which may frighten, or cause to start.

The good husbande, when he hath sowen his grounde, setting up cloughtes, or thredes, which some call shayles, same blenchars, or other like shews, to feare away birdes.

Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 73.

I feel the old man's master'd by much passion,
And too high rackt, which makes him o'ershoot all
His valour should direct at, and hurt those
That stand by but as blenchers.
Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 1.

To BLEND.† v. a. preter. I blended; anciently, blent. [blenban, Saxon.]

1. To mingle together.

'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand hath laid on.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The mistion taught by the ancients is too slight or gross; for bodies mixed according to their hypothesis, would not appear such to the acute eyes of a lynx, who would discern the elements, if they were no otherwise mingled, than but blended but not united.
Boyle.

He had his calmer influence, and his mien
Did love and majesty together blend.
Dryden.

The grave, where even the great find rest,
And blended lie the oppressor and the oppress'd.
Pope.

2. To confound.

The moon should wander from her beaten way,
the times and seasons of the year blend themselves by disordered and confused mixture.
Hooker.

Then shall the new year's joy forth freshly send,
Into the glooming world, his gladsome ray;
And all these storms, which now his beauty blend,
Shall turne to calms, and tymely cleare away.
Spenser, Sonn. lxii.

3. To pollute; to spoil; to corrupt. This signification was anciently much in use, but is now wholly obsolete.

Regard of worldly muck doth foully blend,
And low abase, the high heroick spirit.
Spenser, F. Q.

The whilst thy kingdom from thy head is rent,
And thy throne royal with dishonour blent.
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

4. To blind. [Sax. blenbian.] The first of the following examples has been given by Dr. Johnson under the preceding definition; but it clearly belongs to this; of which definition, however, no notice occurs in Dr. Johnson's work.

Which when he saw, he burnt with jealous fire;
The eye of reason was with rage yblent.
Spenser, F. Q.

O horrible enchantment, that did him so blend.
Spenser, F. Q.

What hath thy eye-sight blent?
Fairfax, Tasso.

BLE'NDER.† n. s. [from To blend.] The person that mingles.
Sherwood.

BLENT. The obsolete participle of blend. See BLEND.

To BLESS.† v. a. preterite and participle, blessed or blest. [bleꝑian, Saxon.]

1. To make happy; to prosper; to make successful.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain of heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes.
Shakspeare.

Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time: for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality.
Shakspeare.

This kingdom enjoyed the greatest calm, and the fullest measure of felicity, that any people, in any age, for so long time together, have been blessed with.
Clarendon.

Happy this isle, with such a hero blest;
What virtue dwells not in his loyal breast?
Waller.

In vain with folding arms the youth assay'd
To stop her flight, and strain the flying shade;
But she return'd no more, to bless his longing eyes.
Dryden.

O hospitable Jove! we thus invoke,
Bless to both nations this auspicious hour.
Dryd.

2. To wish happiness to another; to pronounce a blessing upon him.

And this is the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death.
Deut. xxxiii. 1.

3. To consecrate by a prayer.

He blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves.
St. Matt. xiv. 19.

4. To praise; to glorify for benefits received; to celebrate.

Unto us there is one only guide of all agents natural, and he both the creator and worker of all in all, alone to be blessed, adored, and honoured by all for ever.
Hooker, i. § 3.

But bless'd be that great pow'r, that hath us bless'd
With longer life than earth and heav'n can have.
Davies.

5. It seems, in one place of Spenser, to signify the same, as to wave; to brandish; to flourish. This signification is taken from an old rite of our Romish ancestors, who blessing a field directed their hands in quick succession to all parts of it, Dr. Johnson says. But this is certainly a mistaken account here. Spenser means by the verb bless, to blaze, from the Goth. blys. See BLAZE and BRAND. The ancients formed their swords in imitation of a flaming fire. Milton describes Hell as illuminated by the sudden blaze of the drawn and brandished swords of the fallen angels. See also G. Douglas, Gloss. blesis for blazes.

Whom when the prince to battle new addrest,
And threat'ning high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee.
Spenser, F. Q.

BLESS *us. interj. An exclamation of surprise.

Cries the stall-reader, Bless us! what a word on
A title-page is this.
Milton, Sonn. xi.

BLE'SSED.† particip. adj. [from To bless.]

1. Happy; enjoying felicity.

Blessed are the barren.
St. Luke, xxiii. 29.

2. Holy and happy; happy in the favour of God.

All generations shall call me blessed.
St. Luke, i. 48.

3. Happy in the joys of heaven.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.
Revelation, xiv. 13.

4. Having received the benediction of another.

All parts perform'd, and all her children bless'd.
Pope, Epil. to Satires.

BLE'SSED Thistle. [cnicus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLE'SSEDLY. adv. [from blessed.] Happily.

This accident of Clitophon's taking, had so blessedly procured their meeting.
Sidney.

BLE'SSEDNESS.† n. s. [from blessed.]

1. Happiness; felicity.

Many times have I, leaning to yonder palm, admired the blessedness of it, that it could bear love without the sense of pain.
Sidney.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shaksp.

2. Sanctity.

Earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that, which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness.
Shakspeare.

3. Heavenly felicity.

It is such an one, as, being begun in grace, passes into glory, blessedness, and immortality.
South.

4. Divine favour.

Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also.
Rom. iv. 8, 9.

BLE'SSER. n. s. [from bless.] He that blesses, or gives a blessing; he that makes any thing prosper.

When thou receivest praise, take it indifferently, and return it to God, the giver of the gift, or blesser of the action.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

BLE'SSING.† n. s. [Sax. bleꝑung.]

1. Benediction; a prayer by which happiness is implored for any one.

Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but, contrariwise, blessing.
1 Pet. iii. 9.

2. A declaration by which happiness is promised in a prophetick and authoritative manner.

The person that is called, kneeleth down before the chair, and the father layeth his hand upon his head, or her head, and giveth the blessing.
Bacon.

3. Any of the means of happiness: a gift; an advantage; a benefit.

In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land.
Isaiah, xix. 24.

Nor are his blessings to his banks confin'd,
But free, and common, as the sea and wind.
Denham.

Political jealousy is very reasonable in persons persuaded of the excellency of their constitution, who believe that they derive from it the most valuable blessings of society.
Addison.

A just and wise magistrate is a blessing as extensive as the community to which he belongs: a blessing which includes all other blessings whatsoever, that relate to this life.
Atterbury.

4. Divine favour.

My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!
Shakspeare.

I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stuck in my throat.
Shakspeare.

Honour thy father and mother, both in word and deed, that a blessing may come upon thee from them.
Ecclus. iii. 8.

He shall receive the blessings from the Lord.
Psalm xxix. 5.

5. The Hebrews, under this name, often understood the presents which friends make to one another; in all probability, because they are generally attended with blessings and compliments both from those who give, and those who receive.
Calmet.

And Jacob said, receive my present at my hand; take, I pray thee, my blessing that is brought to thee.
Genesis, xxxiii. 10.

BLEST. preterite and participle. [from bless.] See BLESSED.

Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest!
Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest!
Pope.

BLEW. The preterite from blow.

The rest fled into a strong tower, where, seeing no remedy, they desperately blew up themselves, with a great part of the castle, with gunpowder.
Knolles.

BLEYME. n. s. An inflammation in the foot of a horse, between the sole and the bone.
Farrier's Dict.

BLIGHT.† n. s. [The etymology unknown, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Sax. blæȝtan, to blow, blæȝt, a blast, and, by corruption, blight. In the dictionary of Coles a blight is defined a blast.]

1. Mildew; according to Skinner; but it seems taken by most writers, in a general sense, for any cause of the failure of fruits.

I complained to the oldest and best gardeners, who often fell into the same misfortune, and esteemed it some blight of the spring. Temple.

2. Any thing nipping, or blasting.

When you come to the proof once, the first blight of frost shall most infallibly strip you of all your glory. L'Estrange.

To BLIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To corrupt with mildew.

This vapour bears up along with it any noxious mineral steams; it then blasts vegetables, blights corn and fruit, and is sometimes injurious even to men. Woodward.

2. In general, to blast; to hinder from fertility.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse they have, or their blighted corn, till they have run over in their minds all beings. Locke.

But let harsh care the lover's peace destroy,
And roughly blight the tender buds of joy,
Let reason teach. Lyttelton.

To BLIN.* v. a. [Sax. blinnan, to stop, or leave off; Welsh blin, tired, weary, from blino, to tire. This word is yet in use, in the north of England. And B. Jonson, in his Sad Shepherd, uses it as a substantive, "withouten blin," i. e. without ceasing, A. ii. S. 6. This old verb is supposed by some to be the parent of our word blind.] To cease, or stop. Obsolete.

For nathëmore for that spectacle bad
Did th' other two their cruel vengeance blin.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 80.

BLIND.† adj. [Goth. blinda, blinds; Sax. blind. Supposed by Mr. Horne Tooke to be the past part. of the old Eng. verb blin, to stop. But blind is also an old German word. See also Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 92. "Blind, blinda, et blindi, Gothis, Anglo-Saxonicis, Francis, Scandis, et Germanis, diutissimè, cæcum significavit."]

1. Deprived of sight; wanting the sense of seeing; dark.

The blind man that governs his steps by feeling, in defect of eyes, receives advertisement of things through a staff. Digby.

Those other two equall'd with me in fate,
So were I equall'd with them in renown!
Blind Thamyris, and blind Mæonides;
And Teresias, and Phineas, prophets old.
Milton, P. L.

2. Intellectually dark; unable to judge; ignorant: with to before that which is unseen.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou, but Janus like, a face behind,
To see the people, what splay mouths they make;
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back.
Dryden.

3. Sometimes of.

Blind of the future, and by rage misled,
He pulls his crimes upon his people's head.
Dryden.

4. Unseen; out of the publick view; private: generally with some tendency to some contempt or censure.

To grievous and scandalous inconveniencies they make themselves subject, with whom any blind or secret corner is judged a fit house of common prayer. Hooker.

5. Not easily discernible; hard to find; dark; obscure; unseen.

There be also blind fires under stone, which flame not out; but oil being poured upon them, they flame out. Bacon.

Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangl'd wood?
Milton, Com.

How have we wander'd a long dismal night,
Led through blind paths by each deluding light.
Rosconmon.

Part creeping under ground, their journey blind,
And climbing from below, their fellows meet.
Dryden.

So mariners mistake the promis'd gust,
And with full sails, on the blind rocks are lost.
Dryden.

A postern door, yet unobserv'd and free,
Join'd by the length of a blind gallery,
To the king's closet led. Dryden.

6. Blind Vessels. [with chymists.] Such as have no opening but on one side.

To BLIND.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make blind; to deprive of sight.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames,
Into her scornful eyes! Shakspeare.

Of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it.
1 Samuel, xii. 3.

A blind guide is certainly a great mischief; but a guide that blinds those whom he should lead, is undoubtedly a much greater. South.

2. To darken; to obscure to the eye.

So whirl the seas, such darkness blinds the sky,
That the black night receives a deeper dye.
Dryden.

3. To darken the understanding.

This my long suffering and my day of grace
They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste,
But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more.
Milton, P. L.

4. To obscure to the understanding.

The state of the controversy between us he endeavoured, with all his art, to blind and confound. Stillingfleet.

5. To eclipse.

Thirsil her beauty all the rest did blind,
That she alone seem'd worthy of my love.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eclog. 6.

BLIND.† n. s.

1. Something to hinder the sight.

Hardly any thing in our conversation is pure and genuine; civility casts a blind over the duty, under some customary words. L'Estrange.

2. Something to mislead the eye, or the understanding.

These discourses set an opposition between his commands and decrees; making the one a blind for the execution of the other. Decay of Piety.

3. A hiding place.

So, when the watchful shepherd, from the blind,
Wounds with a random shaft the careless hind.
Dryden, Æneid, 4.

To BLI'NDFOLD. v. a. [from blind and fold.] To hinder from seeing, by blinding the eyes.

When they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face. Luke.

BLI'NDFOLD. adj. [from the verb.] Having the eyes covered.

And oft himself he chanc'd to hurt unwares,
Whilst reason, blent through passion, nought descried,
But, as a blindfold bull, at random fares,
And where he hits, nought knows, and where he hurts, nought cares. Spenser, F. Q.

Who blindfold walks upon a river's brim,
When he should see, has he deserv'd to swim?
Dryden.

When lots are shuffled together, or a man blindfold casts a dye, what reason can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black. South.

The women will look into the state of the nation with their own eyes, and be no longer led blindfold by a male legislature.
Addison, Freeholder.

BLI'NDLY.† adv. [Sax. blindlice.]

1. Without sight.

Avarice, pride, falsehood, lie undiscerned and blindly in us, even to the age of blindness.
Browne, Chr. Mor. P. 2. sect. 15.

2. Implicitly; without examination.

The old king, after a long debate,
By his imperious mistress blindly led,
Has given Cydaria to Orbellan's bed. Dryden.

How ready zeal for interest and party, is to charge atheism on those, who will not, without examining, submit, and blindly swallow their nonsense. Locke.

3. Without judgement or direction.

How seas and earth, and air, and active flame,
Fell through the mighty void; and in their fall,
Were blindly gather'd in this goodly ball. Dryden.

BLI'NDMAN'S BUFF.† n. s. A play in which some one is to have his eyes covered, and hunt out the rest of the company. Originally written blindmanbuff.

I am led up and down like a tame ass; my light's out,
And I grope up and down like blind-man-buff.
Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

Disguis'd in all the mask of night,
We left our champion on his flight;
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day. Hudibras.

He imagines I shut my eyes again; but surely he fancies I play at blindman's buff with him; for he thinks I never have my eyes open. Stillingfleet.

BLI'NDNESS.† n. s. [Sax. blindnerre.]

1. Want of sight.

I will smite every house of the people with blindness. Zechariah, xii. 4.

2. Ignorance; intellectual darkness.

BLI'NDWORM. n. s. [cæcilia, from blind and worm.] A small viper, called likewise a slow worm; believed now not to be venemous.

You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blindworms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen. Shakspeare.

The greater slow worm, called also the blindworm, is commonly thought to be blind, because of the littleness of his eyes. Grew.

To BLINK.† v. n. [blincken, Danish; blinka, Iceland, to twinkle. See To BLENCH.]

1. To wink, or twinkle with the eyes.

So politick, as if one eye
Upon the other were a spy;
That to trepan the one to think
The other blind, both strove to blink. Hudibras.

2. To see obscurely.

What's here! the portrait of a blinking idiot.
Shakspeare.

Sweet and lovely wall,
Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eyne. Shaksp. Midsum. N. Dream.

His figure such as might his soul proclaim;
One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame.
Pope.

BLINK.* n. s. [Dan. blink, a glance. See To BLINK. A glimpse; a twinkle; a slight view: a glance.

The amorous blyncks flee to and fro,
With sugred words that make a show.
Turberville's Songs and Sonets, (1570.)

This is the first blink that ever I had of him: I have heard fame of his wonderfull works, and held it happiness enough for me to have seen his face; and doth he take notice of my person, of my name? Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 108.

BLI'NKARD.† n. s. from blink.]

1. One that has bad eyes.

He that hath such eies that the liddes cover a great parte of the apple; as a blinkard, or he that looketh asquint. Barret's Alvearie.

Brainless blinkards that blow at the cole.
Skelton's Poems, p. 28.

2. Something twinkling.

In some parts we see many glorious and eminent stars, in others few of any remarkable greatness, and, in some, none but blinkards and obscure ones. Hakewill's Apology, p. 237.

BLISS. n. s. [blyrre, Sax. from blíðian, to rejoice.

1. The highest degree of happiness; blessedness; felicity: generally used of the happiness of blessed souls.

A mighty Saviour hath witnessed of himself, I am the way; the way that leadeth us from misery into bliss. Hooker.

Dim sadness did not spare
That time celestial visages; yet, mix'd
With pity, violated not their bliss. Milton, P. L.

With me
All my redeem'd may dwell, in joy and bliss.
Milton, P. L.

2. Felicity in general.

Condition, circumstance is not the thing; Bliss is the same in subject or in king. Pope.

BLI'SSFUL. adj. [from bliss and full.] Full of joy; happy in the highest degree.

Yet swimming in that sea of blissful joy,
He nought forgot. Spenser, F. Q.

The two saddest ingredients in hell, are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face.
Hammond.

Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,
Uninterrupted joy, unrivall'd love,
In blissful solitude. Milton, P. L.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

First in these fields I try the silvan strains,
Nor blush to sport in Windsor's blissful plains.

Barren the earth, and blissless whosoever
Imagines not to keep it unmanur'd!
Hawkins, Old Eng. Dram. ii. 109.

To BLI'SSOM.† v. a. To tup as a ram.
Coles.

BLIST.* In our old language used for blessed, or blest.

BLIST.* pret. Used for wounded, [from the Fr. blesser, to cut, wound, or hurt,] by Spenser; and altered from bless, Mr. Mason thinks; asserting, however, at the same time, that neither bless nor bliss occur in this sense. Spenser, however, is supported in the usage of blist by a writer soon after his time, which seems to shew that blist is the true word. Obsolete.

The villain ——
— With his club him all about so blist,
That he which way to turne him scarcely wist.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 13.

They blist my shoulders with their pines in such sort, as they wholly depriv'd me of my sight and the force of my feet together.
Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote, i. iii. 1.

BLI'STER. n. s. [bluyster, Dutch.]

1. A pustule formed by raising the cuticle from the cutis, and filled with serous blood.

In this state she gallops night by night,
O'er ladies lips, who straight on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.
Shakspeare.

I found a great blister drawn by the garlick, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night. Temple.

2. Any swelling made by the separation of a film or skin from the other parts.

Upon the leaves there riseth a tumour like a blister. Bacon.

To BLI'STER. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in blisters.

If I prove honeymouth, let my tongue blister,
And never to my red look'd anger be
The trumpet any more. Shakspeare.

Embrace thy knees with loathing hands,
Which blister when they touch thee. Dryden.

To BLI'STER. v. a.

1. To raise blisters by some hurt, as by a burn, or rubbing.

Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report. Shakspeare.

In a theme so bloody-fac'd as this,
Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

BLO'ODY-FLUX. n. s. The dysentery; a disease in which the excrements are mixed with blood.

Cold, by retarding the motion of the blood, and suppressing perspiration, produces giddiness, sleepiness, pains in the bowels, looseness, and bloody-fluxes. Arbuthnot on Air.

BLO'ODY-FLUXED.* adj. [from bloody and flux.] Afflicted with the bloody-flux.

Who touched me? saith our Saviour, when the bloody-fluxed woman fingered but the hem of his garment. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 90.

BLO'ODY-HUNTING.* part. adj. [from bloody and hunt.] Hunting for blood.

Mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

BLO'ODY-MINDED. adj. [from bloody and mind.] Cruel; inclined to bloodshed.

I think you'll make me mad: truth has been at my tongue's end this half hour, and I have not the power to bring it out, for fear of this bloody-minded colonel. Dryden, Span. Fryar.

BLO'ODY-RED.* adj. [from bloody and red.] Having the colour of blood.

These flowers are supported by small pedunculi, or flower-stalks, of a bloody-red colour, which swell into seed vessels, having at their base an acute denticle. Philos. Trans. liii. 81.

BLO'ODY-SCEPTERED.* part. adj. [from bloody and scepter.] Having a bloody scepter; wearing a crown obtained wholly by blood.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholsome days again?
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

BLOOM.† n. s. [Goth. bloma a flower; blum, Germ. bloem, Dutch.]

1. A blossom; the flower which precedes the fruit.

How nature paints her colours, how the bee
Sits on her bloom, extracting liquid sweet.
Milton, P. L.

A medlar tree was planted by;
The spreading branches made a goodly show,
And full of opening blooms was ev'ry bough.
Dryden.

Haste to yonder woodbine bowers;
The turf with rural dainties shall be crown'd,
While opening blooms diffuse their sweets around.
Pope.

2. The state of immaturity; the state of any thing improving, and ripening to higher perfection.

Were I no queen, did you my beauty weigh,
My youth in bloom, your age in its decay.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

3. The blue colour upon plums and grapes newly gathered.
4. [In the iron works.] A piece of iron wrought into a mass, two feet square, [Sax. bloma.]

To BLOOM.† v. a. [from the noun. This is an old verb active, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed; although in his illustration of the verb neuter, the examples from the Bible, and from Hooker, evidently belong to the verb active; and are therefore brought hither.]

1. To produce the blossom.

The rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds. Numbers, xvii. 8.

2. To produce, as blossoms.

In prime of youthly years, when first the flowre
Of beauty gan to bud, and bloosme delight.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 20.

Rites and customs now superstitious, when the strength of virtuous, devout, or charitable affection bloomed them, no man could justly have condemned as evil. Hooker.

To BLOOM. v. n.

1. To bring or yield blossoms.

It is a common experience, that if you do not pull off some blossoms the first time a tree bloometh, it will blossom itself to death.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To be in a state of youth and improvement.

Beauty, frail flower, that every season fears,
Blooms in thy colours for a thousand years.
Pope, Epist.

O greatly blest with every blooming grace!
With equal steps the paths of glory trace.
Pope, Odyss.

BLO'OMINGLY.* adv. [from bloom.] In a blooming or flourishing manner.

BLO'OMY. adj. [from bloom.] Full of blooms; flowery.

O nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still.
Milton, Sonn.

Departing spring could only stay to shed
Her bloomy beauties on the genial bed,
But left the manly summer in her stead. Dryden.

Hear how the birds on every bloomy spray,
With joyous musick wake the dawning day. Pope.

BLORE.† n. s. [from blow.] Act of blowing; blast; an expressive word, but not used.

Out rusht, with an unmeasur'd roar,
Those two winds, tumbling clouds in heaps, ushers to either's blore. Chapman, Iliad.

Five [ships] again thefurious billow batters,
Being hurried headlong with the southwest blore.
Mir. for Mag. p. 838.

BLO'SSOM. n. s. [blopme, Sax.] The flower that grows on any plant, previous to the seed or fruit. We generally call those flowers blossoms, which are not much regarded in themselves, but as a token of some following production.

Cold news for me:
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.
Shakspeare, Temp.

The pulling off many of the blossoms of the fruit-tree, doth make the fruit fairer.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To his green ears your censure you would suit,
Not blast the blossom, but expect the fruit. Dryden.

To BLO'SSOM.† v. n. [Sax. blopman.] To put forth blossoms.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Although the figtree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, yet will I rejoice in the Lord. Hab. iii. 17.

When I was new blossom'd, I did fear
Myself unworthy of Miranda's spring.
Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

The want of rain at blossoming time, often occasions the dropping off of the blossoms for want of sap. Mortimer.

BLO'SSOMY.* adj. [formerly written blosmy, as blossometh was blosmeth. Spenser retains the s in the kindred word bloom.] Full of blossoms.

The blosmy tree n' is neither drie ne dead.
Chaucer, March. Tale.

To BLOT.† v. a. [Fr. blotter, to stain, blemish, or defile, Cotgrave. But the word is of northern origin; Goth. blautjan, to wipe out; Su. blotta.]

1. To obliterate; to make writing invisible, by covering it with ink.

You that are king
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Even copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

A man of the most understanding will find it impossible to make the best use of it, while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions. Swift.

2. To efface; to erase.

O Bertram, oh! no more my foe but brother:
One act like this blots out a thousand crimes.
Dryden.

These simple ideas, offered to the mind, the understanding can no more refuse, nor alter, nor blot out, than a mirrour can refuse, alter, or obliterate, the images which the objects produce. Locke.

3. To make black spots on a paper; to blur.

Heads overfull of matter, be like pens overfull of ink, which will sooner blot than make any fair letter. Ascham.

O sweet Portia!
Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

4. To disgrace; to disfigure.

Unknit that threatening unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, as frost bites the meads,
Confounds thy fame. Shaksp. Tam. of the Shrew.

He hath been blotted by some to be an epitomist.
Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy unblemish'd name.
Dryden, Æn.

For mercy's sake restrain thy hand,
Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood. Rowe.

5. To darken.

He sung how earth blots the moon's gilded wane,
Whilst foolish men beat sounding brass in vain.
Cowley.

BLOT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An obliteration of something written.

Let flames on your unlucky papers prey,
Your wars, your loves, your praises, be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot. Dryden, Juvenal.

2. An extinction of light.

The dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air.
Milton, Com. v. 133.

3. A blur; a spot upon paper.

4. A spot in reputation; a stain; a disgrace; a reproach.

Make known,
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
That hath deprived me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A lie is a foul blot in a man; yet it is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Ecclus. xx. 24.

A disappointed hope, a blot of honour, a strain of conscience, an unfortunate love, will serve the turn. Temple.

5. [At backgammon.] When a single man lies open to be taken up; whence to hit a blot.

He is too great a master of his art, to make a blot which may so easily be hit.
Dryden, Ded. Æneid.

BLOTCH. n. s. [from blot.] A spot or pustule upon the skin.

Spots and blotches, of several colours and figures, straggling over the body: some are red, others yellow, or black. Harvey.

To BLOTCH, or BLATCH.* v. a. [perhaps from blot. Blatchy, in Gloucestershire, is black or dirty.] To blacken.

If no man can like to be smutted and blatched in his face, let us learn much more to detest the spots and blots of the soule.
Harmar, Trans. of Beza's Sermons, p. 195.

To BLOTE.† v. a. To smoke, or dry by the smoke; as bloted herrings, or red herrings. Sherwood.

BLO'TTER.* n. s. [from blot.] One that effaces; one that disfigures.

Thou tookest the blotting of Thine image in Paradise as a blemish to Thyself; and Thou saidst to the blotter, Because thou hast done it, on thy belly shalt thou creep.
Abp. Harsnet, Serm. with Stuart's Serm. 1656, p. 131.

BLO'TTING.* n. s. [from blot.] The making spots or marks on paper.

The most accurate pencils were but blottings, which presumed to mend Zeuxis' or Apelles' works. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 35.

BLOUSE. See BLOWZE.

BLOW.† n. s. [blowe, Dutch, from blaeuwen, or blouwen, Teut. to strike.]

1. The act of striking.

2. A stroke.

A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,
As will a chesnut. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Words of great contempt, commonly finding a return of equal scorn, blows were fastened upon the most pragmatical of the crew. Clarendon.

3. The fatal stroke; the stroke of death.

Assuage your thirst of blood, and strike the blow.
Dryden.

4. An act of hostility; blows are used for combat or war.

Be most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows. Shakspeare.

Unarm'd if I should go,
What hope of mercy from this dreadful foe,
But woman-like to fall, and fall without a blow.
Pope.

5. A sudden calamity; an unexpected evil.

The virgin daughter of my people is broken with a very grievous blow. Jerem. xiv. 17.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnel.

6. A single action; a sudden event.

Every year they gain a victory, and a town; but if they are once defeated, they lose a province at a blow. Dryden.

7. The act of a fly, by which she lodges eggs in flesh.

I much fear, lest with the blows of flies,
His brass inflicted wounds are fill'd. Chapman, Il.

BLOW.* n. s. [from the Sax. blopan, to bloom.] Bloom; and sometimes figuratively used; as, in the full bloom of honour.

He believed he could shew me such a blow of tulips, as was not to be matched in the whole country. Tatler, No. 218.

To BLOW.† v. n. pret. blew; particip. pass. blown. [Sax. blapan, blopian, to blow as the wind blows.]

1. To make a current of air.

At his sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclus. xliii. 16.

Fruits, for long keeping, gather before they are full ripe, and in a dry day, towards noon, and when the wind bloweth not south; and when the moon is in decrease. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flowers. Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. This word is used sometimes impersonally with it.

It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying. L'Estrange.

If it blows a happy gale, we must set up all our sails, though it sometimes happens, that our natural heat is more powerful than our care and correctness. Dryden.

3. To pant; to puff; to be breathless.

Each aking nerve refuse the lance to throw,
And each spent courser at the chariot blow. Pope.

4. To breathe.

Says the satyr, if you have gotten a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I've e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.

5. To sound with being blown.

Nor with less dread the loud
Ethereal trumpet from on high 'gan blow.
Milton, P. L.

There let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below. Milton, Il Pens.

6. To sound, or play musically by wind.

The priests shall blow with the trumpets.
Joshua, vi. 4.

7. To blow over. To pass away without effect.

Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last. Bacon, Essays.

When the storm is blown over,
How blest is the swain,
Who begins to discover
An end of his pain. Granville.

But those clouds being now happily blown over, and our sun clearly shining out again, I have recovered the relapse. Denham.

8. To blow up. To fly into the air by the force of gunpowder.

On the next day, some of the enemy's magazines blew up; and it is thought they were destroyed on purpose by some of their men.
Tatler, No. 59.

To BLOW. v. a.

1. To drive by the force of the wind; with a particle to fix the meaning.

Though you unty the winds,
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders' heads.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Fair daughter, blow away those mists and clouds,
And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre.
Denham.

These primitive heirs of the Christian church, could not so easily blow off the doctrine of passive obedience. South.

2. To inflame with wind.

I have created the smith that bloweth the coals.
Isaiah, liv. 16.

A fire not blown shall consume him. Job, xx. 26.

3. To swell; to puff into size.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But, love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. To form into shape by the breath.

Spherical bubbles, that boys sometimes blow with water, to which soap hath given a tenacity. Boyle.

5. To sound an instrument of wind musick.

Blow the trumpet among the nations. Jer. li. 27.

Where the bright seraphim, in burning row,
Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow. Mill. Ode.

6. To warm with the breath.

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail. Shakspeare.

7. To spread by report.

But never was there man of his degree,
So much esteem'd, so well belov'd as he:
So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden.

8. To blow out. To extinguish by wind or the breath.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of war.
And brought in matter, that should feed this fire:

And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out,
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
Shakspeare.

Moon, slip behind some cloud, some tempest rise,
And blow out all the stars that light the skies.
Dryden.

9. To blow up. To raise or swell with breath.

A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. Shakspeare.

Before we had exhausted the receiver, the bladder appeared as full as if blown up with a quill. Boyle.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope. Shaksp.

An empty bladder gravitates no more than when blown up, but somewhat less; yet descends more easily, because with less resistance. Grew.

10. To blow up. To inflate with pride.

Blown up with the conceit of his merit, he did not think he had received good measure from the king. Bacon.

11. To blow up. To kindle.

His presence soon blows up the unkindly fight,
And his loud guns speak thick like angry men.
Dryden.

12. To blow up. To move by afflatus.

When the mind finds herself very much inflamed with devotion, she is too much inclined to think that it is blown up with something divine within herself. Addison.

13. To blow up. To burst with gunpowder; to raise into the air.

The captains hoping by a mine, to gain the city, approached with soldiers ready to enter upon blowing up of the mine. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Their chief blown up in air, not waves expir'd,
To which his pride presum'd to give the law.
Dryden.

Not far from the said well, blowing up a rock, he formerly observed some of these. Woodward.

14. To infect with the eggs of flies. I know not how this sense belongs to the word.

I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Shakspeare.

Rather at Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring. Shakspeare.

15. To blow upon. To make stale.

I am wonderfully pleased, when I meet with any passage in an old Greek or Latin author, that is not blown upon, and which I have never met with in any quotation. Addison.

He will whisper an intrigue that is not yet blown upon by common fame. Addison.

To BLOW. v. n. [blopan, Saxon.] To bloom; to blossom.

We lose the prime to mark how spring
Our tended plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed.
Milton, P. L.

This royal fair
Shall, when the blossom of her beauty's blown,
See her great brother on the British throne.
Waller.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay, Past.

For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow.
Pope.

To BLOW.* v. a. To cause to blossom.

For these Favonius here shall blow
New flowers. B. Jonson, Mask at Highgate.

Iris there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purfled scarf can shew.
Milton, Com. v. 993.

BLO'WER.† n. s. [from blow.]

1. A melter of tin.

*

Add his care and cost in buying wood, and in fetching the same to the blowing-house, together with the blowers, two or three months extreme and encreasing labour. Carew.

2. One that bloweth what produces sound; as an organ-blower.

An instrument over-winded is tuned wrong,
Blame none but the blower, on him it is long.
Skelton's Poems, p. 291.

3. That which draws up the fire in a stove or chimney; usually made of iron or tin.

4. One which storms or blows up; a military phrase.

Underminers and blowers up.
Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.

BLO'WING.* n. s. [Sax. blapung.] The act of blowing; as, the blowing of the wind.

BLOWN. The participle passive of blow.

All the sparks of virtue, which nature had kindled in them, were so blown to give forth their uttermost heat, that justly it may be affirmed, they inflamed the affections of all that knew them.
Sidney.

The trumpets sleep, while cheerful horns are blown,
And arms employ'd on birds and beasts alone.
Pope.

BLO'WBALL.* n. s. The herb dandelion in seed, so called from its round head of down, which children often endeavour to blow away at one puff.

Her treading would not bend a blade of grass,
Or shake the downy blow-ball from its stalk.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepb. i. 1.

BLO'WPIPE.* n. s. [from blow and pipe.] A tube used by glassmen, jewellers, and other artificers.

BLOW'POINT. n. s. A child's play, perhaps like pushpin.

Shortly boys shall not play
At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay
Toll to some courtier. Donne.

BLOWTH.† n. s. [from blow, that which bloweth.] Bloom or blossom.

Ambition and covetousness being but green, and newly grown up, the seeds and effects were as yet but potential, and in the blowth and bud.
Ralegh.

BLOWZE.† n. s. A ruddy fat-faced wench, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Hall, in his Satires, writes the word blowesse, and the author of Titus Andronicus connects it with blossom; which may direct us for the etymology to blow; either in the sense applied to Shakspeare's Mrs. Page, on an accidental occasion, "sweating and blowing, and looking wildly;" or in the meaning of to swell out, like a blossom. Mock pastoral has adopted Blowzilindas and Blowzabels, in modern times, as its heroines.

Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,
To paint some blowesse with a borrow'd grace.
Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 1.

Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom sure!
Tit. Andron. iv. 2.

I had rather marry a fair one, and put it to the hazard, than be troubled with a blowse.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 631.

Being such a blouze herself, a gipsy should not mock a Jew. Dr. Clerke's Serm. 1637, p. 371.

BLO'WZY.† adj. [from blowze.]

1. Sun-burnt; high coloured. See the last of the examples in BLOWZE.

2. Looking wildly; confused. See the etymology of BLOWZE. In this meaning of disordered, it is common in many places.

To BLUB.* v. a. [This is another variation of the old word bleb, which we also find in blob. See BLEB.] To swell.

My face was blown and blub'd with dropsy wan.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 112.

BLU'BBER.† n. s. The part of a whale that contains the oil. Dr. Johnson. The fat of wales. Brockett's N. Country Words.

BLU'BBER.* n. s. [from blub. See BLEB, and BLOBBER. The swollen appearance of the animal accounts for the name.] A denomination given by our navigators to the urtica marina, or sea-nettle. Philos. Trans. No. 349. In blobber, the example from Carew shews the word to be very old in our language.

To BLU'BBER. v. n. [from the noun.] To weep in such a manner as to swell the cheeks.

Even so lies she,
Blubb'ring and weeping, weeping and blubb'ring.
Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

A thief came to a boy that was blubbering by the side of a well, and asked what he cried for.
L'Estrange.

Soon as Glumdalclitch miss'd her pleasing care,
She wept, she blubber'd, and she tore her hair. Swift.

To BLU'BBER. v. a. To swell the cheeks with weeping.

Fair streams represent unto me my blubber'd face; let tears procure your stay. Sidney.

The wild wood gods arriv'd in the place,
There find the virgin doleful, desolate,
With ruffled raiment, and fair blubber'd face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late.
Spenser, F. Q.

Tir'd with the search, not finding what she seeks,
With cruel blows she pounds her blubber'd cheeks.
Dryden.

BLU'BBERED. particip. adj. [from To blubber.] Swelled; big; applied commonly to the lip.

Thou sing with him, thou booby! never pipe
Was so profan'd, to touch that blubber'd lip.
Dryden.

BLU'DGEON. n. s. A short stick, with one end loaded, used as an offensive weapon.

BLUE.† adj. [blæp, Sax. bleu, Fr. old Fr. bloi, blou; low Lat. bloius, blutum.] One of the seven original colours.

There's gold, and here,
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lipt and trembled kissing. Shakspeare.

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shaks.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me?
The lights burn blue. — Is it not dead midnight!
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
Shakspeare.

Why does one climate, and one soil endue
The blushing poppy with a crimson hue;
Yet leave the lily pale, and tinge the violet blue?
Prior.

There was scarce any other colour sensible, besides red and blue; only the blues, and principally the second blue, inclined a little to green. Newton.

BLU'EBOTTLE. n. s. [cyanus; from blue and bottle.]

1. A flower of the bell shape; a species of bottle-flower.

If you put bluebottles, or other blue flowers, into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red: because the ants thrust their stings, and instil into them their stinging liquour. Ray.

2. A fly with a large blue belly.

Say, sire of insects, mighty Sol,
A fly upon the chariot-pole
Cries out, What blue-bottle alive
Did ever with such fury drive? Prior.

BLUE-EYED. adj. [from blue and eye.] Having blue eyes.

Rise then, fair blue-ey'd maid, rise and discover
Thy silver brow, and meet thy golden lover. Crashaw.

Nor to the temple was she gone to move,
With prayers, the blue-ey'd progeny of Jove. Dryden.

BLU'EHAIRED. adj. [from blue and hair.] Having blue hair.

This place,
The greatest and the best of all the main,
He quarters to his blue-hair'd deities. Milton, Com.

BLU'ELY.† adv. [from blue.] With a blue colour.

Their colours' changeable variety,
First clear and white, then yellow, after red,
Then bluely pale, then duller still, till after dead. More, Infinity of Worlds, st. 94.

This squire he dropp'd his pen full soon,
While as the light burnt bluely. Swift.

BLU'ENESS.† n. s. [from blue.]

1. The quality of being blue.

In a moment our liquour may be deprived of its blueness, and restored to it again, by the affusion of a few drops of liquours. Boyle on Colours.

2. Applied to a wound or bruise, means the livid appearance of it.

The blueness of a wound cleanseth away evil. Prov. xx. 30.

Nothing but the blueness of our wounds to boast on. Feltham, Serm. on Eccl. ii. 11.

BLUE-VEINED.* adj. [from blue and vein.] Having blue streaks or veins.

These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean. Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLUFF.† adj.

1. Big; surly; blustering.

Like those whom stature did to crowns prefer,
Black-brow'd and bluff, like Homer's Jupiter. Dryden.

2. Not pointed; obtuse. So a bluff-headed ship, in our naval language, is opposed to one that is sharp-headed.

There is also at Cabo Corso a publick Fetish, the guardian of them all; and that is the rock Tabra, a bluff peninsular prominence that juts out from the bottom of the clift the castle stands on, making a sort of cover for landing, but so unsafe, as frequently to expose the boats and people to danger, the sea breaking over with great force. Atkins, Voyage, p. 102.

BLU'FFNESS.* n. s. [from bluff.] Surliness; bloatedness, as with conceit.

A remarkable bluffness of face, a loud voice, and a masculine air. The World, No. 188.

BLU'ISH. adj. [from blue.] Blue in a small degree.

Side sleeves and skirts, round underborne, with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

At last, as far as I could cast my eyes
Upon the sea, somewhat, methought, did rise
Like bluish mists. Dryden.

Here, in full light, the russet plains extend,
There, wrapt in clouds, the bluish hills ascend. Pope.

BLU'ISHNESS. n. s. [from blue.] A small degree of blue colour.

I could make, with crude copper, a solution without the bluishness, that is wont to accompany its vulgar solutions. Boyle.

To BLU'NDER.† v. n. [blunderen, Dutch; perhaps from blind. Serenius gives the old Goth. blundur, sleep.]

1. To mistake grossly; to err very widely; to mistake stupidly. It is a word implying contempt.

It is one thing to forget matter of fact, and another to blunder upon the reason of it. L'Estrange.

The grandees and giants in knowledge, who laughed at all besides themselves, as barbarous and insignificant, yet blundered, and stumbled, about their principal concern. South.

2. To flounder; to stumble.

He who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning. Pope.

To BLU'NDER.† v. a.

1. To mix foolishly or blindly.

He seems to understand no difference between titles of respect and acts of worship; between expressions of esteem and devotion; between religious and civil worship; for he blunders and confounds all these together; and whatever proves one, he thinks, proves all the rest. Stillingfleet.

2. To make to blunder or confound.

To shuffle and digress so as by any means whatsoever to blunder an adversary. Ditton on the Resurrect. p. 63.

To darken or blunder the cause. Ibid. p. 211.

BLU'NDER. n. s. [from the verb.] A gross or shameful mistake.

It was the advice of Schomberg to an historian, that he should avoid being particular in the drawing up of an army, and other circumstances in the day of battle; for that he had observed notorious blunders and absurdities committed by writers not conversant in the art of war. Addison.

It is our own ignorance that makes us charge those works of the Almighty, as defects or blunders, as ill-contrived or ill-made. Derham, Phys. Theol.

BLU'NDERBUSS. n. s. [from blunder.] A gun that is charged with many bullets, so that, without any exact aim, there is a chance of hitting the mark.

There are blunderbusses in every loop-hole, that go off on their own accord, at the squeaking of a fiddle. Dryden.

BLU'NDERER. n. s. [from blunder.] A man apt to commit blunders; a blockhead.

Another sort of judges will decide in favour of an author, or will pronounce him a mere blunderer, according to the company they have kept. Watts.

BLU'NDERHEAD. n. s. [from blunder and head.] A stupid fellow.

At the rate of this thick-skulled blunderhead, every plow-jobber shall take upon him to read upon divinity. L'Estrange.

BLU'NDERINGLY.* adv. [from blunder.] In a blundering manner.

You observe of the Easterns, that they have done what they did in that kind rather ignorantly, supinely, or blunderingly, than out of a premeditated design to cover falsehood. Lewis, Dissert. prefix. Hist. of E. Bibles, p. ix.

BLUNT.† adj. [etymology uncertain, Dr. Johnson says. But Kilian, in his Teut. Dict. in plomp, asserts that word to be the parent of our blunt. The Teut. word means dull, stupid, leaden. Minsheu mentions also the Dutch plomb, from the Lat. plumbeus, leaden. The Swedes use plump in the same way.]

1. Dull on the edge or point; not sharp.

Thanks to that beauty, which can give an edge to the bluntest swords. Sidney, b. i.

If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. Ecclesiastes, x. 10.

2. Dull in understanding; not quick.

Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross,
By some sly trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding. Shakspeare.

3. Rough; not delicate; not civil.

Whitehead, a grave divine, was of a blunt stoical nature: one day the queen happened to say, I like thee the better, because thou livest unmarried. He answered; Madam, I like you the worse. Bacon.

The mayor of the town came to seize them in a blunt manner, alledging a warrant to stop them. Wotton.

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do. Pope.

4. Abrupt; not elegant.

To use too many circumstances, ere one come to the matter, is wearisome; to use none at all, is blunt. Bacon.

5. Hard to penetrate. This use is improper.

I find my heart hardened and blunt to new impressions; it will scarce receive or retain affections of yesterday. Pope.

To BLUNT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dull the edge or point.

So sicken waining moons too near the sun,
And blunt their crescents on the edge of day. Dryden.

Earthly limbs, and gross allay,
Blunt not the beams of heav'n, and edge of day. Dryden.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,
And dastardize my courage. Dryden.

2. To repress, or weaken any appetite, desire, or power of the mind.

Blunt not his love;
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,
By seeming cold. Shakspeare.

BLU'NTING.* n. s. [from blunt.] Restraint.

Not impediments or bluntings, but rather as whetstones, to set an edge on our desires after higher and more permanent beauty. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 73.

BLU'NTLY. adv. [from blunt.]

1. In a blunt manner; without sharpness.

2. Coarsely; plainly; roughly.

I can keep honest counsels, marr a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly. Shakspeare.

A man of honest blood,
Who to his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind. Dryden.

BLU'NTNESS. n. s. [from blunt.]

1. Want of edge or point; dulness; obtuseness; want of sharpness.

The crafty boy, that had full oft essay'd
To pierce my stubborn and resisting breast,
But still the bluntness of his darts betray'd. Suckling.

2. Coarseness; roughness of manners; rude sincerity.

His silence grew wit, his bluntness integrity, his beastly ignorance, virtuous simplicity. Sidney.

Manage disputes with civility: whence some readers will be assisted to discern a difference betwixt bluntness of speech and strength of reason. Boyle.

False friends, his deadliest foes, could find no way,
But shows of honest bluntness to betray. Dryden.

BLU'NTWITTED. adj. [from blunt and wit.] Dull; stupid.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour. Shaks.

BLUR. n. s. [borra, Span. a blot, Skinner.] A blot; a stain; a spot.

Man, once fallen, was nothing but a great blur; a total universal pollution. South.

To BLUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blot; to obscure; without quite effacing.

Such an act,
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,
Calls virtue hypocrite. Shakspeare.

Long is it since I saw him;
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour,
Which then he wore. Shakspeare.

Concerning innate principles, I desire these men to say, whether they can, or cannot, by education and custom, be blurred and blotted out! Locke.

2. To blot; to stain; to sully.

Sarcasms may eclipse thine own,
But cannot blur my lost renown. Hudibras, i. 3.

To BLURT.† v. a. [without etymology.] To speak inadvertently; to let fly without thinking: commonly with out intensive, Dr. Johnson says; and sometimes, he might have added, with at. Blurt was, in former times, an interjection of contempt. Blurt, pish! Sherwood.

None would look on her
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin,
Not worth the time of day. Shakspeare, Pericles.

Others cast out bloody and deadly speeches at random, and cannot hold, but blurt out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewill.

They had some belief of a Deity, which they, upon surprizal, thus blurt out. Government of the Tongue.

They blush if they blurt out, ere well aware,
A swan is white, or Queensbury is fair. Young.

To BLUSH.† v. n. [blosen, Dutch, or perhaps from the Sax. ablıȝan, to blush, ablȳȝunȝ, a blush.]

1. To betray shame or confusion, by a red colour on the cheek or forehead.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames,
In angel whiteness, bear away these blushes. Shakspeare.

I will go wash:
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush or no. Shakspeare.

All these things are graceful in a friend's mouth, which are blushing in a man's own. Bacon.

Shame causeth blushing; blushing is the resort of the blood to the face; although blushing will be seen in the whole breast, yet that is but in passage to the face. Bacon.

Blush then, but blush for your destructive silence,
That tears your soul. Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

2. To carry a red colour, or any soft and bright colour.

To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him. Shakspeare.

But here the roses blush so rare,
Here the mornings smile so fair,
As if neither cloud, nor wind,
But would be courteous, would be kind. Crashaw.

Along those blushing borders, bright with dew. Thomson.

3. It has at before the cause of shame.

He whin'd, and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him; and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring at each other. Shakspeare.

You have not yet lost all your natural modesty, but blush at your vices. Calamy, Sermons.

To BLUSH.† v. a. To make red. Not much used.

Pale and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart,
Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth
To blush and beautify the cheek again. Shaks.

Old doting Tithon, hold Aurora fast,
And though she blush the day-break from her cheeks,
Conceal her still. Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.

BLUSH.† n. s. [from the verb, Sax. ablȳȝunȝ.]

Stratonice entering, moved a blushy colour in his face; but deserting him, he relapsed into paleness and languour. Harvey on Consumptions.

To BLU'STER.† v. n. [supposed from blast, Sax. blæȝt, bloeȝt.]

1. To roar as a storm; to be violent and loud.

Earth his uncouth mother was,
And blustering Æolus his boasted sire.
Spenser, F. Q.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure;
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour.
Spenser, F. Q.

Can man such follies utter, and be wise;
Which bluster from the tempest of thy mind,
As if thy breast enclos'd the eastern wind.
Sandys, Job, p. 23.

2. To bully; to puff; to swagger; to be tumultuous.

My heart's too big to bear this, says a blustering fellow: I'll destroy myself. Sir, says the gentleman, here's a dagger at your service: so the humour went off. L'Estrange.

Either he must sink to a downright confession, or must huff and bluster, till perhaps he raise a counter-storm. Government of the Tongue.

Virgil had the majesty of a lawful prince, and Statius only the blustering of a tyrant. Dryden.

There let him reign the jailor of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden.

To BLU'STER.* v. a. To blow down.

Do the Chaldeans and Sabeans feloniously drive away the herds of Job; doth the devil, by a tempestuous gust bluster down the house, and rob him of his children? Seasonable Serm. p. 26.

BLU'STER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Roar of storms; tempest.

For being benign, and not blusterous. Hudibras.

B-MI. n. s. A note in musick. See A-LA-MI-RE.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
B-mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord. Shakspeare.

Bo.† interj. A word formerly of terrour; from Bo, an old northern captain, of such fame, that his name was used to terrify the enemy. Temple. It is now used as a word only to scare children. The northern captain will suffer no great loss, if the etymology be transferred from his redoubted name to the Dutch bauw, a spectre; or the Welsh bo.

I'll rather put on my flashing red nose, and my flaming face, and come wrapped in a calf's-skin, and cry bo, bo! I'll fray the scholar, I warrant thee. Robin Goodfellow, in Wily Beguiled.

BO'AR.† n. s. [bap, Sax; beer, Dutch.] The male swine; the wild boar.

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,
Were to incense the boar to follow us. Shakspeare.

The boar out of the wood doth waste it. Psalm lxxx. 13.

She sped the boar away;
His eyeballs glare with fire, suffus'd with blood;
His neck shuts up a thickest thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears. Dryd.

BO'AR-SPEAR.† n. s. [Sax. bap-ſpere.] A spear used in hunting the boar.

And in her hand a sharp boar-spear she held,
And at her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts. Spenser, F. Q.
Echion threw the first, but miss'd his mark,
And struck his boar-spear on a maple bark. Dryd.

BOARD.† n. s. [baurd, Goth. bopð, Sax. so written by Gower, viz. bord.]

Bacon.

6. The deck or floor of a ship; on board signifies in a ship.

Now board to board the rival vessels row,
The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below.
Dryden.
Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin, who was on board. Addison.
He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling, which held the mainyard to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, rowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To BOARD.† v. a. [from the noun. Written also boord and bord.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,
Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement. Shakspeare.
He not inclin'd the English ship to board,
More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;
It miss'd the duke, but his great heart it griev'd.
Waller.
Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board
With our's his fleet, and carry fire and sword.
Denham.

2. To attack, accost, or make the first address to another; aborder quelqu'un, Fr. See To ABORD.

Psalm xcvii. 7.

BOAST.† n. s. [Welsh bôst, a boast.]

1. An expression of ostentation; a proud speech.

Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God.
Rom. ii. 23.
The world is more apt to find fault than to commend; the boast will probably be censured, when the great action that occasioned it, is forgotten.
Spectator, No. 255.

2. A cause of boasting; an occasion of pride; the thing boasted.

Not Tyro, nor Mycene, match her name,
Nor great Alcmena, the proud boasts of fame.
Pope, Odyss.

BO'ASTER. n. s. [from boast.] A bragger; one that vaunts any thing ostentatiously.

Complaints the more candid and judicious of the chymists themselves are wont to make of those boasters, that confidently pretend, that they have extracted the salt or sulphur of quicksilver, when they have disguised it by additaments, wherewith it resembles the concretes. Boyle.
No more delays, vain boaster! but begin;
I prophesy beforehand I shall win:
I'll teach you how to brag another time. Dryden.
He the proud boasters sent, with stern assault,
Down to the realms of night. Philips.

BO'ASTFUL.† adj. [from boast and full.] Ostentatious; inclined to brag.

Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
Piercing the night's dull ear. Shaksp. K. Hen. V.
Boastful, and rough, your first son is a 'squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar.
Pope.

BO'ASTIVE.* adj. [from boast.] Presumptuous; assuming.

Should the sedgy Power,
Vain-glorious, empty his penurious urn
O'er the rough rock, how must his fellow streams
Deride the tinklings of the boastive rill!
Shenstone, Economy, P. I.

Bo'ASTLESS.* adj. [from boast and less.] Simple; without ostentation; not desirous to be talked of.

But to the generous, still improving mind,
That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,
Diffusing kind beneficence around,
Boastless, as now descends the silent dew,
To him the long review of order'd life,
Is inward rapture, only to be felt. Thomson, Sum.

BOAT.† n. s. [bat, Saxon, bât, Su.-Goth. bâtur, Icel.]

1. A vessel to pass the water in. It is usually distinguished from other vessels, by being smaller and uncovered, and commonly moved by rowing.

I do not think that any one nation, the Syrian excepted, to whom the knowledge of the ark came, did find out at once the device of either ship or boat, in which they durst venture themselves upon the seas. Ralegh, Essays.

An effeminate scoundrel multitude!
Whose utmost daring is to cross the Nile,
In painted boats, to fright the crocodile. Tate, Juv.

2. A ship of a small size; as, a passage boat, pacquet boat, advice boat, fly boat.

BOA'TION. n. s. [from boare, Lat.] Roar; noise; loud sound.

3. To cheat; to gain by fraud.

I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones. Shakspeare.

Live, Roderigo!
He calls me to a restitution large,
Of gold and jewels, that I bobb'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona. Shakspeare.

Was ever man so paid for being curious,
Ever so bobb'd for searching out adventures?
Beaum. and Fl. Chances.

Here we have been worrying one another, who should have the booty, till this cursed fox has bobbed us both on't. L'Estrange.

4. To touch gently, especially at the elbow.

To BOB. v. n. [Gibson defines it to bow often, to sink low; to bob, or bob down, being so used in the West of England. Thus, the quill bobs in fishing.]

1. To play backward and forward; to play loosely against any thing.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
Midsummer N. Dr.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
A birthday jewel bobbing at their ear. Dryden.

You may tell her,
I'm rich in jewels, rings, and bobbing pearls,
Pluck'd from Moors ears. Dryden.

Great Birnam wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him ——
—— That will never be:
Sweet bodements, good. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To BODGE.† v. n. [a word in Shakspeare, which is perhaps corrupted from boggle, Dr. Johnson says. But our old lexicography considers bodge and botch as synonymous. V. Huloet in bodge, who adds bodger also as a botcher. If we take bodge therefore, as botch is taken, in the sense of bungle, there will appear no corruption of the poet.] To boggle; to stop; to fail.

With this we charg'd again; but out! alas,
We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

BODGE.* n. s. A botch.

Because it followeth in the same place, nor will it be a bodge in this, I cannot omit the consequence of this disheartening leveller.

Each bring his love a bog-land captive home.
Dryden, Prol. to the Prophetess.

Bog-trotter.† n. s. [from bog and trot.] One that lives in a boggy country; said to have been formerly applied to Scottish or northern troopers or robbers, probably the borderers; applied since to Irishmen.
I am sure his muse, for all his fine flights is but a bog-trotter still. Answ. to Congreve's Anim. on Collier, (1698.)

BO'GLE, or BOGGLE.* n. s. [Celt. bwg, a goblin; Welsh bogelu, to affright; bugul, fear. It is sometimes written bugle or bogill, with bo, added to it; whence the corrupt vulgar word a bug-aboo. A bogle or boggle is, to this day, a common word in the North of England for a ghost. In Westmoreland and Yorkshire it is also boggart, and bog-gard.] A bugbear; a spectre; a goblin.

To Bo'GGLE.† v. n. [from bogil, Dutch, a spectre; a bugbear; a phantom, Dr. Johnson says. But it does not appear that the Dutch have the word bogil. It is from the Celtick. See the substantive Bogle.

1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.
You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you.
Shakspeare.
We start and boggle at every unusual appearance, and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear.
Glanville.
Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,
Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;
Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,
Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn.
Dryden.

2. To hesitate; to be in doubt.
And never boggle to restore
The members you deliver o'er,
Upon demand. Hudibras.
The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you. Make the ears a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle.
Locke.

3. To play fast and loose; to dissemble.
When summoned to his last end, it was no time for him to boggle with the world. Howell.

Bo'GGLER.† n. s. [from boggle.] One who stumbles; one who starts from the right path, as Mr. Nares has observed, in the example from Shakspeare addressed to Cleopatra.
You have been a boggler ever. Shakspeare.

Bo'GGLISH.* adj. [from boggle.] Doubtful; wavering.
What wise man or woman doth not know, that nothing is more sly, touchy, and bogglish, nothing more violent, rash, and various, than that opinion, prejudice, passion, and superstition, of the many, or common people.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 172.

Bo'GGY.† adj. [from bog.] Marshy; swampy.
That fury staid,
Quench'd in a boggy Syrtis, neither sea,
Nor good dry land. Milton, P. L. ii. 939.
Their country was very narrow, low, and boggy, and, by great industry and expences, defended from the sea. Arbuthnot.

Bo'GHOUSE. n. s. [from bog and house.] A house of office.

Bohe'a. n. s. [an Indian word.] A species of tea, of higher colour, and more astringent taste, than green tea.
Coarse pewter, consisting chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China. Woodward.
As some frail cup of China's fairest mold,
The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,
And holds secure the coffee's sable waves. Tickell.
She went from op'ra, park, assembly, play,
To morning walks, and pray'rs three hours a-day;
To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
To muse and spill her solitary tea. Pope.

To BOIL. v. n. [bouiller. Fr. bullio, Lat.]

1. To be agitated by heat; to fluctuate with heat.
He saw there boil the fiery whirlpools.
Chapman.

2. To be hot; to be fervent, or effervescent.
That strength with which my boiling youth was fraught,
When in the vale of Balasor I fought. Dryden.
Well I knew,
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
That boiling blood would carry thee too far. Dryd.

3. To move with an agitation like that of boiling water.
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide,
The trembling fins the boiling waves divide. Gay.

4. To be in hot liquor, in order to be made tender by the heat.
Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaksp., Macbeth.

5. To cook by boiling.
If you live in a rich family, roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office, and which it becomes you to be ignorant of. Swift.

6. To boil over. To run over the vessel with heat.
A few soft words and a kiss, and the good man melts; see how nature works and boils over in him. Congreve.
This hollow was a vast cauldron, filled with melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain.
Addison on Italy.

To Boil. v. a. To heat, by putting into boiling water; to seeth.
To try whether seeds be old or new, the sense cannot inform; but if you boil them in water, the new seeds will sprout sooner. Bacon.
In eggs boiled and roasted, into which the water entereth not at all, there is scarce any difference to be discerned. Bacon.

Boil. n. s. See Bile.

Bo'iler. n. s. [from boil.]

1. The person that boils any thing.
That such alterations of terrestrial matter are not impossible, seems evident from that notable practice of the boilers of saltpetre. Boyle.

2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.
This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

Bo'ilery. n. s. [from To boil.] A place at the salt works where the salt is boiled

Boi'ling.* n. s. [from boil.] Ebullition.
God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boilings of a furious, overflowing appetite, and the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh the physick and restorative of the spirit.
South, Serm. vol. ii. S. 10.

BO'ISTEROUS.† adj. [Dutch byster, furious; Dr. Johnson says. It belongs etymologically perhaps to the Welsh bwyst, bwystus, fierce, savage; and our word was formerly boistous. Wicliffe and Chaucer both use boistous for boisterous. The latter has also the adverb boistously.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.
By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger; as by proof we see
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shaks.
As when loud winds a well grown oak would rend
Up by the roots, this way and that they bend
His reeling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound
Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground.
Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.
Spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Shakspeare.
His sweetness won a more regard
Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods
That ignorant greatness practiseth. B. Jonson.
God, into the hands of their deliverer,
Puts invincible might
To quell the mighty of the earth, the oppressor,
The brute and boisterous force of violent men.
Milton, S. A.
Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius:
Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man.
Addison, Cato.

3. Unwieldy: clumsily violent.
His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,
He could not rearen up again so light,
But that the knight him at advantage found.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. It is used by Woodward of heat; violent.
When the sun hath gained a greater strength, the heat becomes too powerful and boisterous for them. Natural Hist.

Bo'isterously. adv. [from boisterous.] Violently; tumultuously.
A sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand,

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, iv. 12.

Bo'LSTERING.* n. s. [from bolster.] A prop; a support.

Crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet, without a miracle, by some iron bodies, or some benign bolsterings.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BOLT.† n. s. [Gr. βόλις, from βάλλω; Goth. bollt; Welsh, bollt; Dutch, boult, bolt.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a cross-bow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower;
Before, milk-white, now purple with love's wound.
Shakspeare.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But, with the sharp, transfix'd Apollo's breast.
Dryden.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd.
Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striæ, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Grew.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow; we now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening, or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakspeare.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is I think corrupted from bought, or link, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. bollt is a fetter.

Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakspeare.

6. A sieve. See To Bolt; to sift. And Bolter.

Where be the French petticoats,
And girdles, and hangers? — Here, i' the trunk;
And the bolts of lawn. Ben Jonson, Alchemist.

To Bolt.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast.
Dryden.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride.
Milton, Com.

3. To fasten, as a bolt, or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle where the pins are,
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out.
B. Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change.
Shakspeare.

5. To sift; or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve; [bluter, Fr. bulter, old Fr. See Bolter, and Bultel.]

He now had boulted all the flour. Spenser, F. Q.

In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well bolted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attornies, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The fanned snow
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er.
Shakspeare.

To Bolt.† v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

Mercy — a fair virgin and lovely; her garments green and orient; a crown of gold upon her head; the tears of compassion bolting at her eyes; pity and ruth sitting in her face.

Dr. J. White's Sermon, (1615,) p. 72.

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton, Nymphidia.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins, to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd,
And beasts that bolted out and saw the forest bar'd.
Dryden.

Bolt-rope. n. s. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.

Bo'LTER.† n. s. [Old Fr. bulter, a sieve.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakspeare.

With a good strong chopping-knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon, Natural History.

When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudib. i. iii.

2. A kind of net.

These hakes, and divers others of the fore cited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Carew.

To Bo'LTER.* v. a. [probably from the verb boll, to swell; the sense of bolter implying concretion or accumulation. In the midland part of England, as in Leicestershire and Warwickshire, boltered is applied to any thing clotted, or to a bump raised; as, when cream is coagulated; or when a boy has a broken head, and his hair is matted together with blood; or when a horse has been hard-ridden in dirty roads, and the wound of the spur is covered with mire and blood.] To besmear.

Ay, now I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Bo'LTHEAD. n. s. A long strait-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquour into a bolthead, with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

Bo'LTING-HOUSE. n. s. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis's Letters.

Bo'LTING-HUTCH.* n. s. [from bolt and hutch.] The bin or tub for the bolted meal.

That bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropsies. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

This passing fine sophistical boulting-hutch. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Bo'LTING-TUB.* n. s. [from bolt and tub.] A tub to sift meal in.

The bake-houses and bolting-tub, the ovens.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Bo'LTSPRIT. } n. s. A mast running out at
Bo'WSPRIT. } the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The butt-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling.

Sea Dictionary.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards and boltsprit, would I flame distinctly.
Shakspeare.

Bo'LUS. n. s. [Gr. βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. † n. s. [Teut. bomme, a drum; Dutch, bommen, to sound; Gr. βομβεῖν, Lat. bombus.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495.

Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughtering bomb Gradivus roars.
Rowe.

3. The stroke upon a bell, often called the bome of the bell.

To BOMB.* v. n. [Dutch, bommen.] To sound; to emit a noise.

But tympanites, (which we call the drum,)
A wind, bombs in her belly; must be unbraced.

BOMBARDI'ER. n. s. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment it is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terrour and combustion. Tatler.

BOMBA'RDMENT. n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBASI'N.† n. s. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning. Formerly used for cotton also, as the French still use the word. See BOMBAST.

The materials [of Persian paper] are not rags or skins, but bombasine or cotton wool, coarse, and requiring much toil to perfect.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 298.

The pawnbroker tells me, that he has several suits of rich brocade, from ladies of quality, lately pawned with him, to enable them [during the present mourning] to buy crapes and bombazines.
The Student, ii. 258.

BO'MBAST.† n. s.

1. A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity. Written also corruptly bumbast. See BUMBAST. [Ital. bombagia, cotton; from the Gr. βάμβαξ.]

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast?
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Cotton is no less observable. The tree is slender but strait, a yard high and like a briar. — At the top it divides itself into several branches, each of which is charged with many balls that contain the bumbast: the shape thereof is round and equal to a walnut. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 366.

A bumbast or bolstered garment.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 44.

2. Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne, Poems, p. 130.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies?
Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shaksp.

To BOMBA'ST.* v. a. [from the noun.] To inflate; to puff up.

Then strives he to bombast his feeble lines
With far-fetch'd phrase. Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 4.

For Leontinus Gorgias, that bombasted sophister, the greatness of his learning was rather in the people's false opinion and ascription, than in his own true possession.
Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 190.

Albeit they, no doubt, thought the entertainment was noble, we thought never any strangers were bombasted with such a triumph.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 119.

BOMBAS'TICK.* adj. [from bombast.] The more modern adjective instead of bombast; of great sound with little meaning; ranting. Kersey in his Dict. 1702, has "a bombastick style."

Bambastick phrases, solecisms, absurdities, and a thousand monsters of a scholastick brood, were set on foot. Shaftesbury.

BOMBA'STRY.* n. s. [from bombast.] Swelling words without much meaning; fustian.

Bombastry and buffoonery, by nature lofty and light, soar highest of all.
Swift, Introd. Tale of a Tub.

BOMBILA'TION.† n. s. [bombilo, Lat. To hum like a bee. And in this sense bombilation was also used. See Coles's Dict. 1677.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown, Vulgar Errours.

BOMBY'CINOUS.† adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk. Coles.

BO'MBYX.* n. s. [Gr. βομβυξ.] The name by which the silk-worm is known.

Salisbury Manual, (1490,) fol. xxxviii. b.

BONA'SUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BO'NCHIEF.* n. s. [Fr. bon chef. This is a very uncommon word, but proper, as opposed to mischief; the latter being referrible to the Lat. malè cadere, the former to benè cadere.] Good consequence.

If I consent to do after your will for bonchief or mischief that may befall unto me in this life, I were worthy to be cursed.
Thorpe's Exam. in Fox, 1407.

BONCHRE'TIEN.† n. s. [French.] A species of pear, so called, probably, from the name of a gardener.
Here you have your bon christian pear and bergamot in perfection. Howell's Lett. i. ii. 8.

BOND. n. s. [bonb, Sax. bound; it is written indifferently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]
1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.
There left me, and my man, both bound together;
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakspeare.
Ligament that holds any thing together.
Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.
3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.
Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.
Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds.
Acts, xxiii. 29.
5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.
Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed! Shakspeare.
Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father.
Shakspeare, King Lear.
6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum or perform a contract.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond. Shakspeare.
What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date they say are void.
Dryden.
7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.
Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shaks.
Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from ȝebonden, Sax.] Captive; in a servile state.
Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BO'NDAGE. n. s. [from bond.]
1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.
You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.
Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?—
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility. Shakspeare.
Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard.
Dryden.
2. Obligation; tye of duty.
If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.
He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money.
South.

BO'NDMAID. n. s. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.
Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shaksp.

BO'NDMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.
Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him.
Hooker.
O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find.
Dryden.

BO'NDSERVANT. n. s. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.
And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant.
Leviticus, xxv. 39.

BO'NDSERVICE. n. s. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.
Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice. 2 Kings, ix. 21.

BO'NDSLAVE. n. s. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; one of servile condition who cannot change his master.
Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bondslave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young princess was. Sidney.
All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Macc. ii. 11.
Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave.
Sir J. Davies.

BO'NDSMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.]
1. A slave.
Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derham.
2. A person bound, or giving security for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN.† } n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.
BO'NDWOMAN. }
My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bonds-women. B. Jonson, Catiline.
We are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free. Gal. iv. 31.
The fugitive bond-woman, with her son
Outcast Nebaioth. Milton, P. R. ii. 308.

BONE.† n. s. [ban, Saxon; been, Su. Goth. bein, Germ.]
1. The solid parts of the body of an animal made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fœtus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.
Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold.
Macbeth.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.
2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.
Like Æsop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.
Dryden.
3. To be upon the bones. To attack.
Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estr.
4. To make no bones. To make no scruple; a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.
Knowing (according to the old rule of Thales) that he who hath not stuck at one villanie, will easily swallow another; perjury will easily downe with him that hath made no bones of murther.
Bp. Hall, Cas. of Consc.
5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.
And the free maids that weave their threads with bones. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.
6. Bones. Dice.
But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:
To shun ames ace that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BONE-ACHE.* n. s. [from bone and ache.] Pain in the bones.
Now the rotten disaeses of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, — incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cressida.
A lord that is a leper,
A knight that has the bone-ach, or a squire
That has both these, you make 'em smooth and sound. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
Here's cure for bone-ache, fever lurdens,
Unlawful or untimely burdens.
Sir T. Overbury, Songs.

BO'NED.* adj. [from bone.] Bony; large; strong.
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size.
Titus Andron. iv. 3.
Big-bon'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
Broad-shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long. Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

BO'NELACE.† n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.
She cuts cambrick at a thread, weaves bone-lace, and quilts balls. Beaum. & Fl. Scornful Lady.
The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

Bo'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dasht the brains out. Shakspeare.

To Bo'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting. Wiseman's Surgery.

Bo'NESETTER. n. s. [from boneset.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bone-setter. Denham.

BONE'TTA.* n. s. A sea fish.

Sharks, dolphins, bonettas, albicores, and other sea-tyrants. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

Bo'NFIRE.† n. s. [sometimes written boone-fire, incorrectly; frequently bone-fire, with reason; and the etymology has been assigned by Lye to boon and fire, i. e. a fire made of materials obtained by begging; and to the Fr. bon, good, and fire, by Skinner and Dr. Johnson. But our old literature will confirm, I think, the orthography of bone-fire, and shew that its primitive meaning is a fire made of bones. Sax. bael-fŷr, the fire which consumed the dead, made by a change of letters of the same organ baen-fŷr, whence our bone-fire. Hickes. "Bone-fyre: it was sometimes used as a ceremony to burn dead men's bones; in manner of an exequie; now it is otherwise." Huloet. "In worship of St. John, the people waked at home, and made three manner of fires: One was of clean bones, and no wood; and that is called a bone-fire. Another is clean wood, and no bones; and that is called a wood-fire, for people to sit and wake thereby. The third is made of wood and bones, and is called St. John's fire." Quatuor Sermones, 1499, fol. c. i. The primitive use of the word gradually sunk into its present meaning, a great fire, or blaze. The etymology, however, has been recently referred to baal-fire, (from the Icel. baal too, incendium,) a fire kindled on high grounds for some cause of rejoicing; corrupted into baan, which is the pronunciation of bone in the Craven district of Yorkshire and other northern parts; and ultimately thought to be derived from the heathen and superstitious custom of fires in honour of Baal. See the Craven Dialect, 1824, in V. BAAL-HILLS, and Brockett's N. Country Words, 1825, in V. BANFIRE.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

This city would make a marvellous bone-fire;
'Tis old dry timber, and such wood has no fellow.
Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in Queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

Bo'NGRACE.† n. s. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead, Dr. Johnson says, from Skinner. It seems to have resembled what is now called a parasol: "A bongrace, or such like, to keep away the sun," Barret's Alv. 1580. And, in this sense, our old poets use it.

[My face] was spoiled for want of a bongrace when I was young. Beaum. & Fl. The Captain.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke of hair, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakewill on Providence.

To Bo'NIFY.* v. a. [old Fr. bonifier, Cotgrave; from the Lat. bonus and facio, whence the low Lat. bonifatus, enjoying good; and an old Engl. word, not worthy of revival, "bonifate, having good luck," Coles's Dict. 1677.] To convert into good.

This must be acknowledged to be the greatest of all arts, to bonifie evils, or tincture them with good. Cudworth.

Bo'NITY.* n. s. [Lat. bonitas, Fr. bonté.] Goodness. Not in use. Ash from Scot.

*BON MOT. n. s. [Fr.] A jest; a witty reply.

The jokes, bon mots, the little adventures, which may do very well in one company, will seem flat and tedious when related in another. Chesterfield.

BO'NNET. n. s. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

Bo'NNET. [in fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the saliant angles of the glacis.

Bo'NNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three saliant angles, and two inwards.

Bo'NNETS.† [Fr. bonnette, fem. gen. Teut. bonet.] In the sea language, small sails set on the courses on the mizen, main-sail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

To Bo'NNET.* v. n. [old Fr. bonneter, "to put his cap unto," Cotgrave.] To pull off the bonnet; to make obeisance.

His ascent is not by such easy degrees as those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted without any further deed to heave them at all into their estimation and report. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Bo'NNIBEL.* n. s. [Fr. bonne and belle.] A fair or handsome girl.

I saw the bouncing, bellibone;
Hey, ho, bonibell! Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Trust her not, you bonnybell;
She will forty leasings tell. B. Jonson, Entertain.

Bo'NNILASS.* n. s. [from bonny and lass.] A beautiful maid.

As the bonnilasse pass'd by,
She rov'd at me with glauncing eye.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Homely spoken for a fair maid or bonnilasse.
E. K. on Spenser's Pastorals.

Bo'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

Bo'NNINESS. n. s. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY.† adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still very common in the North of England for pretty; and is sometimes used, like the Welsh bonedd, boneddig, for genteel; and for unaffected, pleasing.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shaksp.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shakspeare.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER.† n. s. [Irish baine, milk, and clabar, mire.] A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance,
To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber.
B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 2.

We scorn for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BO'NUM MAGNUM. n. s. A species of plum.

Bo'NY.† adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

Or think this ragged bony name to be
My ruinous anatomy. Donne, Poems, p. 20.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and, therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

3. Strong; having large bones.

Burning for blood, bony, and ghaunt, and grim,
Assembling wolves in raging troops descend.
Thomson, Winter, v. 394.

Bo'NZES.* n. s. Priests of Japan, Tonquin, and China.

This temple was of more than ordinary structure, and the bonzes numerous.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 374.

Bo'OBY.† n. s. [a word of no certain etymology; Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Span. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. Others derive it from the Gr. βηπαις. The Germ. bube, however, seems to be the original; which, according to Wachter, signified first a boy, then a servant, and at length a worthless fellow; bobby, an aukward boy.]

1. A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind.
Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

2. A bird so called.

Some boobies perched upon the yard arm of our ship, and suffered our men to take them; an animal so very simple as becomes a proverb.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 11.

BOOK.† n. s. [boka, Goth. or boc, Sax. supposed from boc, a beech; because they wrote on beechen boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shaksp.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.
Shakspeare.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakspeare.

The good old way among the gentry of England, to maintain their pre-eminence over the lower rank, was by their bounty, munificence, and hospitality; and it is a very unhappy change, if, at present, by themselves or their agents, the luxury of the gentry is supported by the credit of the trader. This is what my correspondent pretends to prove out of his own books, and those of his whole neighbourhood. Tatler, No. 180.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have publick audience but once. Hooker.

To BOOK.† v. a. [Sax. bocian.]

1. To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakspeare.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland.

2. To have a knowledge of books. Obsolete.

She was well kepte, she was well loked,
She was well taught, she was well boked.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 8.

BOOK-KEEPER.* n. s. [from book and keep.] He who holds a book, into which others may look. It is now used only for the man who enters in a book the names of persons or parcels to be conveyed to particular places.

Here, brother, you shall be the book-keeper;
This is the argument of that they shew.
Kyd's Spanish Tragedy.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. s. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part, of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BO'OKBINDER.† n. s. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

Some [manuscripts] they solde to the grossers and sope-sellers, and some they sent over sea to the bokebynders. Bale's Pref. to Leland's Journey.

BO'OKCASE.* n. s. [from book and case.] Formerly, a reference to cases ruled in law. V. Huloet. Now, merely a case for holding books.

BO'OKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookfull blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope.

BO'OKISH.† adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously, Dr. Johnson says; but there are exceptions of good authority.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.
Shakspeare.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Xantippe follows her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

Those that have had all the advantages of bookish education. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 45.

This bookish disease, let it make me as much poor as it will, it shall never make me the less just.
More, Pref. to his Philosophical Poems

BO'OKISHLY.* adv. [from bookish.] In a way devoted to books.

While she [Christina, Queen of Sweden] was more bookishly given, she had it in her thoughts to institute an order of Parnassus.
Thurlow's State-Papers, ii. 104.

BO'OKISHNESS.† n. s. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over studiousness.

Do you not see, say they, how threadbare, slighted, contemned, and almost starved their [scholars] bookishness keepeth them?
Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 180.

There are some with whom bookishness is a disease: for by overmuch reading they surcharge their minds, and so digest nothing.
Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 46.

BO'OKLAND.* n. s. [Sax. boclanb, Dutch boeckland.] Bookland, or charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and services, in effect differed nothing from free socage lands.
Blackstone.

BO'OKLEARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veri'st fool in all the play. Dryden.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BO'OKLEARNING. n. s. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would; but he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

BO'OKLESS.* adj. [book and less.] Not given to books; unbookish; disdaining the use of books; wanting books.

Why with the cit,
Or bookless churl, with each ignoble name,
Each earthly nature, deign'st thou to reside?
Shenstone, Economy, P. I.

See how mean, how low
The bookless, saunt'ring youth, proud of the sect
That dignifies his cap, his florish'd belt
And rusty couples gingling by his side.
Somerville, Chace, B. i.

BO'OKMAKING.* n. s. [from book and make.] The art of making books.

He [Adam Smith] had bookmaking so much in his thoughts, and was so chary of what might be turned to account in that way, that he once said to Sir Joshua Reynolds, that he made it a rule, when in company, never to talk of what he understood. Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 24.

BO'OKMAN.† n. s. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd.
Shakspeare.

The things we talk of all this while, how like soever they may look to a bookman's business, yet are such of themselves as kings and princes have found their states concerned in.
Gregory's Posthuma, p. 328.

BO'OKMATE. n. s. [from book and mate.] School-fellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,
A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the Prince and his bookmates. Shakspeare.

BO'OKOATH.* n. s. [from book and oath.] The oath made on the book; a word yet used among the vulgar.

I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it, if thou canst. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

BO'OKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

BO'OKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food.
Guardian.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgement.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope, Letters.

BO'OLY. n. s. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes; — being the very same that the Irish boolies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats.
Spenser on Ireland.

BOOM.† n. s. [from boom, a tree, Dutch; which is from the old Goth. bom.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainsail and foresail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to shew the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman, and who cut the boom.
Dryden.

To Boom. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. Dict.

2. To swell and fall together.

Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead.
Young.

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head.
Pope.

Bo'omkin.* n. s. See Bumkin.

Boon.† n. s. [from bene, Sax. a petition; baen, boon, Iceland.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give.
Shakspeare.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden, Fables.

What rhetorick didst thou use,
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me!
Addison, Cato.

Boon.† adj. [bon, Fr.]

1. Gay; merry; as, a boon companion. This is rather a low sense of the word, and is the only one which Dr. Johnson gives.

Satiate at length.
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleasingly began.
Milton, P. L.

I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Arbuthnot.

At 12 of the clock every day they dined together at a cook's house within the tower, and sometimes had Jennings, a boon blade, among them.
Life of A. Wood, p. 205.

2. Kind; beautiful.

Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice Art
In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon
Pour'd forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain.
Milton, P. L. iv. 242.

All that boon Nature could luxurious pour
Of high materials. Thomson's Liberty, P. II.

Boor.† n. s. [boer, Dutch; ȝebuꝛe, Sax.; Goth. bur, a cottage; bure, a country fellow.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a male-content.
L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life.
Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baffled by a boor. Dryden.

Bo'orish.† adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is, company of this female. Shakspeare, As you like it.

A gross and boorish opinion.
Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, i. 9.

No lusty neatherd thither drove his kine,
No boorish hogherd fed his rooting swine.
Brown, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

Bo'orishly. adv. [from boorish.] In a boorish manner; after a clownish manner.

Bo'orishness. n. s. [from boorish.] Clownishness; rusticity; coarseness of manners.

Boose.† n. s. [boꝛiȝ, Sax.; baas, Su.] A stall for a cow or an ox.

To Boot.† v. a. [boetan, to profit, Dutch; bot, in Saxon, is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation; but the Goth. botjan, or botan, to profit, is the parent of our word, from bot, reparation.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them, without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain.
Shakspeare.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun.
Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe?
Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.

And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Boot.† n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. also bote, help, advantage.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

My gravity,
Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakspeare.

Is it any boot to bid a man hold fast our once recovered liberty? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 28.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides. But Dr. Johnson might have noted, that this is rather the infinitive of the verb.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances, and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is
Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard.
Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed, and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

3. It seems, in the following lines of Shakspeare, used for booty or plunder, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed was not an unusual signification of it; and in fact means, according to Dr. Johnson's second definition of the verb, an unlawful way of enriching or benefiting.

Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds.
Shakspeare.

The cry whereof entering the hollow cave
Efisoones brought forth the villaine, as they ment,
With hope of her some wishfull boot to have.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 10.

Their chiefest boot is th' adversary's head;
They end not war till th' enemy be dead.
Mir. for. Magistrates, p. 275.

In that accursed forest,
Set on by villains that make boot of all men,
The peers of France are pillage there, they shot at us. Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

Boot.† n. s. [bottas, Armorick; botes, a shoe, Welsh; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little.—
—I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder.
Shakspeare.

Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light.
Milton.

Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison, Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

He was put to the torture, which, in Scotland, they call the boots; for they put a pair of iron boots close on the leg, and drive wedges between these and the leg.
Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, an. 1666.

Boot of a Coach.† The space between the coachman and the coach.

The horses, being young, took some affrightment, and running away so furiously, that one of them tore all his belly open upon the corner of a beer-cart; my nephew, who in this mean while adventured to leap out, [of the coach,] seemeth to have hung on one of the pins of the boot.
Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 417.

To Boot. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Boot, boot, master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses.
Shakspeare.

Bo'ot-catcher. n. s. [from boot and catch.] The person whose business at an inn is to pull off the boots of passengers.

The ostler and the boot-catcher ought to partake.
Swift.

Boot-hose. n. s. [from boot and hose.] Stockings to serve for boots; spatterdashes.

His lacquey with a linen stock on one leg, and a boot hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list. Shakspeare.

Boot-tree. n. s. [from boot and tree.] Two pieces of wood, shaped like a leg, to be driven into boots, for stretching and widening them.

Bo'oted.† adj. [old Fr. boter, to put boots on.] In boots; in a horseman's habit.

The ill man rides through all confidently; he is coated and booted for it. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A booted judge shall sit to try his cause,
Not by the statute, but by martial laws. Dryden.

Booth.† n. s. [boed, Dutch; bwth, Welsh; buth, Gael. a hut; both, Irish.] A house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.

The clothiers found means to have all the quest made of the northern men, such as had their booths in the fair. Camden.

Much mischief will be done at Bartholomew fair, by the fall of a booth. Swift.

Bo'otless.† adj. [Sax. boclear.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and gan to tell
Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night.
Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness. Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shaks.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakspeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel? Shakspeare.

Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent
Him bootless home, and weather beaten back.
Shakspeare.

Bo'OTLESSLY.* adv. [from bootless.] Uselessly, to no purpose.

Good nymph, no more; why dost thou bootlesly
Stay thus tormenting both thyself and me?
Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p.133.

Bo'OTY.† n. s. [byta, præda, Su.-Goth.; buyt, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see, Fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakspeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty. Dryd.

BOPE'EP. n. s. [from bo and peep. See Bo.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frighted, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung
That such a king should play bopeep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare.

Rivers,
That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriours,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep. Hudibras.

There the devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety. Dryden.

BORA'CHIO.† n. s. [borracho, Span. bouracho, old Fr. "The Spanish borachoe, or bottle commonly of a pig's skin, with the hair inward, dressed inwardly with rosin and pitch to keep wine or liquour sweet. Fr. boráche." Minsheu. Dr. Johnson explains it a drunkard, by an example from Congreve; which, however, serves only to shew that the cask was what the speaker alludes to. Other writers confirm this meaning.] A bottle, or cask.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio.
Dryden, Pers. Sat. 5.

As soon as the servant had done speaking, she made haste, (says the text,) and took two hundred loaves, and two bottles, (that is, two skins or borachios,) of wine. Delany, Life of David, i. 18.

How you stink of wine! D'ye think my niece will ever endure such a borachio? you're an absolute borachio. Congreve.

Bo'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

Bo'RAGE. n. s. [from borago, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BO'RAMEZ. n. s. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tartary, which wolves delight to feed on; which hath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BO'RAX. n. s. [borax, low Lat.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal ammoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and alum, dissolved in wine. It is principally used to solder metals, and sometimes an uterine ingredient in medicine. Quincy.

BO'RDEL. } n. s. [bordeel, Teut. bordel,
BORDE'LLO. } Armorick.] A brothel; a bawdy-house.

From the bordello it might come as well,
The spital, or picthath. B. Jonson.

Making even his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil vice into the unwary ears of his poor children. South.

Bo'RDELLER.* n. s. [from bordel; a word used both by Chaucer and Gower for a keeper of a bawdy-house. Chaucer also uses bordel-women for strumpets.] The keeper of a brothel. Obsolete.

Thais out of his barge he hent,
And to the bordeler her sold.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

BO'RDER.† n. s. [bord, Germ. bord, Fr. bopð, Sax.]

1. The outer part or edge of any thing.

They have looking-glasses, bordered with broad borders of crystal, and great counterfeit precious stones. Bacon.

The light must strike on the middle, and extend its greatest clearness on the principal figures; diminishing by degrees, as it comes nearer and nearer to the borders. Dryden.

2. The march or edge of a country; the confine.

If a prince keep his residence on the border of his dominions, the remote parts will rebel; but if he make the centre his seat, he shall easily keep them in obedience. Spenser.

Those outlaws, as I may call them, who robbed upon the borders.
Patrick, Comment. on Genesis, xlvi. 34.

3. The outer part of a garment, generally adorned with needle-work, or ornaments.

4. A bank raised round a garden, and set with flowers; a narrow rank of herbs or flowers.

There he arriving round about doth fly
From bed to bed, from one to other border,
And takes survey, with curious busy eye,
Of every flower and herb there set in order.
Spenser.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound:
Such various ways the spacious alleys lead,
My doubtful muse knows not what path to tread.
Waller.

The place was covered with a wonderful profusion of flowers, that without being disposed into regular borders, and parterres, grew promiscuously. Tatler, No. 161.

5. [In heraldry.] Written also bordure. Formerly the mark of distinguishing one part of a family from the other, descended of one family and from the same parents.

To Bo'RDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To confine upon; to touch something else at the side or edge: with upon.

It bordereth upon the province of Croatia, which, in time past, had continual wars with the Turks garrisons. Knolles.

Virtue and honour had their temples bordering on each other, and are sometimes both on the same coin. Addison.

2. To approach nearly to.

All wit, which borders upon profaneness, and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due, deserves to be branded with folly. Tillotson.

To Bo'RDER.† v. a. See To IMBORDER.

1. To adorn with a border of ornaments. [Old Fr. brudez, bordered, edged.]

Rivulets bordered with the softest grass enamelled with various flowers.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 372.

2. To reach; to touch; to confine upon; to be contiguous to.

Sheba and Raamah are those parts of Arabia, which border the sea, called the Persian gulf. Ralegh.

3. To keep within bounds.

That nature, which contemns its origin, cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Bo'RDERER.† n. s. [from border.]

1. One that dwells on the borders, extreme parts, or confines; he that dwells next to any place.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shaks.

An ordinary horse will carry two sacks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the sea do bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number. Carew.

The easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war:
The rather for their seat, being next bord'rers
On Italy; and that they abound with horse.
B. Jonson.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly. Bacon.

Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers: on mutual slaughter bent,
They rend their countries. Philips.

2. One that approaches near to another.

The poet is the nearest borderer upon the orator, and expresseth all his virtues, though he be tied more to numbers. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A poet is the very next borderer unto an orator. Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 191.

Bo'RDRAGING.* n. s. [Probably from border, and rage, i. e. to make a furious incursion on the borders of a country. This word Dr. Johnson has cited as an example of the verb neuter, to bordrage, in the following lines of Spenser; where it is evidently a verbal noun; and Mr. Mason has cited bordrag from the verb. Of the verb bordrage proof is yet to be sought.] An incursion on the borders of a country.

Who [Constantine]—
Long time in peace his realm established,
Yet oft annoyd with sondry bordragings
Of neighbour Scots, and forrein scatterlings
With which the world did in those dayes abound.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 63.

To BORE.† v. a. [bopian, Sax.]

1. To pierce in a hole.

I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep. Shakspeare.

Mulberries will be fairer, if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thrust, into the places bored, wedges of some hot trees. Bacon.

But Capys, and the graver sort, thought fit
The Greeks suspected present to commit
To seas or flames; at least, to search and bore
The sides, and what that space contains t' explore.
Denham.

2. To hollow; to scoop.

Love may blindfold the eyes, but lust boreth them out. Fuller, Holy War, p. 80.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, and set it upright, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; and then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel never so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby.

3. To make by piercing.

These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; which, after they are fully entered, grow together. Ray.

4. To pierce; to break through.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,
What riots seen, what bustling crouds I bor'd,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd.
Gay.

To BORE. v. n.

1. To make a hole.

A man may make an instrument to bore a hole an inch wide, or half an inch, not to bore a hole of a foot. Wilkins.

2. To push forward towards a certain point.

Those milk paps,
That through the window bars bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity writ. Shakspeare.

Nor southward to the raining regions run;
But boring to the west, and hovering there,
With gaping mouths they draw prolifick air.
Dryden.

To BORE. v. n. [with farriers.] Is when a horse carries his nose near the ground. Dict.

BORE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The hole made by boring.

Into hollow engines long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire.
Dilated, and infuriate. Milton, P. L.

2. The instrument with which a hole is bored.

So shall that hole be fit for the file, or square bore. Moxon.

3. The size of any hole; the cavity; the hollow.

We took a cylindrical pipe of glass, whose bore was about a quarter of an inch in diameter. Boyle.

Our careful monarch stands in person by,
This new-cast cannon's firmness to explore;
The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
And ball and cartridge sorts for every bore.
Dryden.

It will best appear in the bores of wind instruments; therefore cause pipes to be made with a single, double, and so on, to a sextuple bore; and mark what tone every one giveth. Bacon.

BORE.* n. s. [probably from To bear, bore or borne. Teut. bore, or beuer, elevatio. Bire is twice used by Wicliffe for the Lat. impetus. The bore, it may be added, is considerably elevated above the common surface of the water.] A tide swelling above another tide.

The victorious tenth wave shall ride, like the bore, victorious over all the rest.
Burke, on a Regicide Peace.

BORE. The preterite of bear.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul;
Yet with becoming grief he bore his part,
Resign'd his son, but not resign'd his heart.
Dryden.

'Twas my fate
To kill my father and pollute his bed,
By marrying her who bore me. Dryden.

Bo'REAL. adj. [borealis, Lat.] Northern; septentrional.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope.

BO'REAS. n. s. [Lat.] The north wind.

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestas loud,
And Thrascias, rend the woods, and seas upturn.
Milton, P. L.

Bo'RECOLE.* n. s. A species of the brassica, or cabbage. See CABBAGE.

Bo'REE.† n. s. A kind of dance, said to be brought from Biscay.

That to his lays wild beasts danc'd borees.
Swift, Ovidiana, Ed. Barret, No. ii.

Bo'RER. n. s. [from bore.] A piercer; an instrument to make holes with.

The master-bricklayer must try all the foundations, with a borer, such as well-diggers use, to try the ground. Moxon.

To be BORN. v. n. pass. [derived from the word to bear, in the sense of bringing forth; as, my mother bore me twenty years ago; or, I was born twenty years ago.]

1. To come into life.

When we are born, we cry, that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakspeare.

The new born babe, by nurses overlaid.
Dryden.

Nor nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,
But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born.
Prior.

All that are born into the world, are surrounded with bodies, that perpetually and diversely affect them. Locke.

2. It is usually spoken with regard to circumstances; as, he was born a prince; he was born to empire; he was born for greatness; that is, formed at the birth.

The stranger that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself. Leviticus, xix. 34.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job, v. 7.

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity. Proverbs, xvii. 17.

Either of you knights may well deserve
A princess born; and such is she you serve.
Dryden.

Two rising crests his royal head adorn,
Born from a god, himself to godhead born.
Dryden.

Both must alike from heaven derive their light;
These born to judge, as well as those to write.
Pope.

For all mankind alike require their grace;
All born to want a miserable race! Pope.

I was born to a good estate, although it now turneth to little account.
Swift, Story of an Injured Lady.

Their lands are let to lords, who, never designed to be tenants, naturally murmur at the payment of rents, as a subserviency they were not born to. Swift.

3. It has usually the particle of before the mother.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute, laugh to scorn
The power of man; for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth. Shakspeare.

I being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third, she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister. Tatler.

BORNE.† The participle passive of bear. Pronounced with o long, and therefore more correctly written borne, to distinguish it from born. [Sax. bopen.]

Their charge was always born by the queen; and duly paid out of the exchequer. Bacon.

The great men were enabled to oppress their inferiours; and their followers were born out and countenanced in wicked actions. Davies.

Upon some occasions, Clodius may be bold and insolent, born away by his passion. Swift.

BO'ROUGH.† n. s.

1. It signified anciently a surety, or a man bound for others. See BORROW.

A borogh, as I here use it, and as the old laws still use, is not a borough town, that is, a franchised town; but a main pledge of a hundred free persons, therefore called a free borough, or, as you say, franci-plegium. For borh, in old Saxon, signifieth a pledge or surety; and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith, St. John to borrow; that is, for assurance and warranty. Spenser on Ireland.

2. A town with a corporation. [Goth. baurg, a city. Sax. bupg. "Berg usu veteri significavit recondere, tegere; unde Germ. bergen, &c. Convenit Goth. baurg, &c." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 89.

Find out upon what foundation any proposition, advanced, bottoms; and observe the intermediate ideas, by which it is joined to that foundation upon which it is erected. Locke.

BO'TTOMED. adj. [from bottom.] Having a bottom; it is usually compounded.

There being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land-forces, under the wing and protection of the great navy. Bacon.

BO'TTOMLESS. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than being fallen, to give one's self any stay from falling infinitely. Sidney.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them. Shaks.

Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong, flaming from the etherial sky,
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. L.

BO'TTOMRY. n. s. [in navigation and commerce.] The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on; and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

BOUCHE.* n. s. See BOUGE.

BO'VATE.* n. s. [Lat. bovata.] A bovate (oxgang) of land is as much as one yoke of oxen can reasonably cultivate in a year. Burn, Hist. of Cumb. Gloss.

BO'UCHET. n. s. [French.] A sort of pear.

BOUD. n. s. An insect which breeds in malt; called also a weevil. Dict.

To BOUGE. v. n. [bouge, Fr.] To swell out.

BOUGE.* n. s. [a corruption of the French bouche. Bouge of court is an expression of our old language for the "allowance to the officers of the court." Bouch au cour, allowance of diet at the king's table. Kelham. Avoir bouche à cour, to eat and drink scot-free; to be in ordinary at court. Cotgrave.] Provisions; meat and drink. Not now in use.

They knock'd hypocrisy o' the pate, and made room for a bombard-man that brought bouge for a country lady or two, that fainted, he said, with fasting for the fine sight since seven o'clock in the morning. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

BOUGH. n. s. [bog, Sax. the gh is mute.] An arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

A vine labourer, finding a bough broken, took a branch of the same bough, and tied it about the place broken. Sidney.

Their lord and patron loud did him proclaim,
And at his feet their laurel boughs did throw.
Spenser, F. Q.

From the bough
She gave him of that fair enticing fruit.
Milton, P. L.

As the dove's flight did guide Æneas, now
May thine conduct me to the golden bough.
Denham.

Under some fav'rite myrtle's shady boughs,
They speak their passions in repeated vows.
Roscommon.

See how on every bough, the birds express,
In their sweet notes, their happiness. Dryden.

'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
And see the boughs with happy burdens bend.
Pope.

BOUGHT.† [Sax. bohte.] preter. and participle of To buy; which see.

The chief were these who not for empire fought,
But with their blood their country's safety bought.
Pope.

BOUGHT.† n. s. [Teut. bocht, bucht, an inclosure, a fence of stakes; from bogen, to bend, bow, or inflect. Sax. bogeht, bowed.]

1. A twist; a link; a knot.

His huge long tail wound up in hundred folds,—
Whose wreathed boughts whenever he unfolds,
And thick entangled knots adown does slack.
Spenser, F. Q.

Immortal verse,
Such as the melting soul may pierce,
In notes, with many a winding bought
Of linked sweetness, long draw out.
Milton, Il Pens.

2. A flexure.

The flexure of the joints is not the same in elephants as in other quadrupeds, but nearer unto those of a man; the bought of the fore-legs not directly backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward. Brown, Vulgar Errours.

3. That part of a sling which contains the stone.

The souls of thine enemies, them shall He sling out as out of the middle of a sling: [In the margin,] in the midst of the bought of a sling.
1 Sam. xxv. 29.

BO'UGHTY.* adj. [from bought.] Crooked; bending. Not in use. Sherwood.

BOU'ILLON. n. s. [French.] Broth; soup; any thing made to be supped: a term used in cookery.

To BOUKE, or BOWKE.* v. n. To nauseate, so as to be ready to vomit; and to belch: probably, therefore, a corruption of the Sax. bealcan. Sometimes pronounced boke. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. Country Words.

BO'ULDER.† n. s. A large round stone. In the north pronounced sometimes bowder, or booder, and also boother. See BOWLDER-STONES.

BO'ULDER Walls. [in architecture.] Walls built of round flints or pebbles, laid in a strong mortar; used where the sea has a beach cast up, or where there are plenty of flints. Build. Dict.

BO'ULIMY.* n. s. Dr. Johnson gives this word as bulimy, and derives it from the Gr. βουλιμία, of βοῦς, an ox, and λιμὸς hunger. But it is from βο, valdè, greatly.

It stretches out his desires into an insatiable boulimy. Scott, Serm. (1687,) Works, ii. 75.

To BOULT. v. a. See to BOLT.

To BOUNCE.† v. n. [a word formed, says Skinner, from the sound.]

1. To fall or fly against any thing with great force, so as to rebound.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start,
Against his bosom bounc'd his heaving heart. Dryd.

2. To spring; to make a sudden leap; a sudden explosion.

High nonsense is like beer in a bottle, which has, in reality, no strength and spirit, but frets, and flies, and bounces, and imitates the passions of a much nobler liquor. Addison.

They bounce from their nest,
No longer will tarry. Swift.

Out bounc'd the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.

3. To make a sudden noise.

Just as I was putting out my light, another bounces as hard as he can knock. Swift.

4. To boast; to bully; a sense only used in familiar speech.

He gives away countries, and disposes of kingdoms; and bounces, blusters, and swaggers, as if he were really sovereign lord and sole master of the universe. Lowth's Letter to Warburton, p. 14.

5. To be bold, or strong.

Forsooth the bouncing Amazon.
Your buskin'd mistress, and your warriour love,
To Theseus must be wedded. Shakspeare.

6. In the preceding instance bouncing, applied to an Amazon, may mean what Dr. Johnson asserts, to be bold or strong. But this word was often formerly applied to the fair sex merely to denote a superabundance of excellence, or cause of admiration, in them; and was also applied to things. We use brave in a similar manner.

I saw the bouncing bellibone,
Tripping over the dale alone;—
She sweeter than the violet.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

With lofty luring lookes, they, [ladies] bouncing brave,
The highest place in all men's sight must have.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 217.

We have had a merry and a lusty ordinary,
And wine, and good meat, and a bouncing reckoning. Beaum. and Fl. Wild Goose Chase.

BOUNCE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A strong sudden blow.

The bounce burst ope the door; the scornful fair
Relentless look'd. Dryden.

As I was sitting in my chamber, and thinking on a subject for my next Spectator, I heard two or three irregular bounces at my landlady's door; and upon the opening of it, a loud cheerful voice inquiring whether the philosopher was at home.
Addison, Spectator, No. 383.

2. A sudden crack or noise.

What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke, and bounce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue. Shaks.

Two hazel nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd. Gay.

3. A boast; a threat: in low language.

BO'UNCER. n. s. [from bounce.] A boaster; a bully; an empty threatener: in colloquial speech.

BO'UNCINGLY.* adv. [from bounce.] Boastingly, with threat.

Pighius said bouncingly, the judgement of the apostolical see, with a council of domestick priests, is far more certain than the judgement of an universal council of the whole earth sans pope.
Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

BOUND.† n. s. [Sax. bunde, from bindan, to bind. Old Fr. bundes, limits. Kelham.]

1. A limit; a boundary; that by which any thing is terminated.

Illimitable ocean! without bound;
Without dimension; where length, breadth, and highth,
And time, and place, are lost. Milton, P. L.

Those vast Scythian regions were separated by the natural bounds, of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.

Indus and Ganges, our wide empire bounds,
Swell their dy'd currents with their natives wounds.
Dryden.

Through all th' infernal bounds,
Which flaming Phlegethon surrounds,
Sad Orpheus sought his consort lost. Pope.

2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?
Shakspeare.

Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. Denham.

Any bounds made with body, even adamantine walls, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its progress in space. Locke.

3. [from To bound, v. n.] A leap; a jump; a spring.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud. Shakspeare.

The horses started with a sudden bound,
And flung the reins and chariot to the ground.
Addison.

Dextrous he 'scapes the coach with nimble bounds,
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue Stop thief resounds.
Gay.

4. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.

These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention. Decay of Piety.

To BOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To limit; to terminate.

A lofty tow'r, and strong on every side,
With treble walls, which Phlegethon surrounds,
Whose fiery flood the burning empire bounds.
Dryden.

2. To restrain; to confine.

Take but degree away,
The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shaksp.

3. Sometimes with in.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my sire's. Shakspeare.

To BOUND. v. n. [bondir, Fr.]

1. To jump; to spring; to move forward by leaps.

Torrismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er,
Leaping and bounding on the billows' heads.
Dryden.

Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds,
Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds.
Pope.

When sudden through the woods a bounding stag
Rush'd headlong down, and plung'd amidst the river. Rowe.

Warbling to the vary'd strain, advance
Two sprightly youths, to form the bounding dance.
Pope.

2. To rebound; to fly back by repercussion.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief. Shak.

To BOUND. v. a. To make to bound.

If I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes, never off. Shakspeare.

If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch?
Shakspeare.

BOUND.† pret. and particip. pass. of bind. [Sax. bonb.]

Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Sidney.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound. —
— You should in all sense be much bound to him;
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Shaks.

The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound. Shakspeare.

The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemen, which they used to bring into the field.
Knolles.

They summoned the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.

BOUND.† adj. [a word of doubtful etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is a common word still in the North of England for going, or ready, and is pronounced bowne; "Where are you bowne to?" i. e. whither are you going? or where are you bound to? Boun is used for ready by Chaucer, and other of our old writers. So it is still employed in Scotland. Ruddiman and Chalmers derive the word from the Sax. abunden, expeditus, which, even if rightly translated, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, seems to be an insulated term, not allied to any other words in that language; and therefore the origin, given by Dr. Jamieson, from the Su.-Goth. boa, to prepare, to make ready, of which boen or boin is the participle, must be preferred.] Destined; intending to come to any place.

His be that care, whom most it doth concern,
Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
Art thou now bound? for well might I discern
Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light.
Spenser, F. Q.

To be bound for a port one desires extremely, and sail to it with a fair gale, is very pleasant.
Temple.

Willing we sought your shores, and hither bound,
The port so long desir'd, at length we found. Dryd.

BO'UNDARY. n. s. [from bound.] Limit; bound.

He suffers the confluence and clamours of the people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. King Charles.

Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance. Locke.

Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Rogers.

BO'UNDEN.† participle passive of bind. [Sax. bunden.] Not now much in use.

Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.—
—I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.
Shakspeare.

We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on earth were bounden. Bacon.

To be careful for a provision of all necessaries for ourselves, and those who depend on us, is a bounden duty. Rogers.

BO'UNDENLY.* adv. [from bounden.] In a bounden or dutiful manner. Obsolete.

Your ladishippes daughter, most boundenly obedient.
Transl. of Ochin's Sermons, (1583,) Epist. Dedicat.

BO'UNDER.* n. s. [from bound.]

1. A limiter; he who imposes bounds.

Now the bounder of all these, is only God himself; who is the bounder of all things.
Fotherby's Athcomastix, p. 274.

2. A boundary. Sometimes written boundure.

The boundure of Alexander's march into India being in the tract obscure.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 254.

Kingdoms are bound within their bounders, as it were in bands; and shut up within their limits, as it were in prison. Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 274.

The evidence proves, that the bounder was for this common now claimed.
Clayton, Reports and Pleas, &c. 1651, p. 43.

BO'UNDING-STONE. } n. s. A stone to play
BOUND-STONE. } with.

I am past a boy;
A sceptre's but a play-thing, and a globe
A bigger bounding-stone. Dryden.

BO'UNDLESS. adj. [from bound.] Unlimited; unconfined; immeasurable; illimitable.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakspeare.

Heav'n has of right all victory design'd;
Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd.
Dryden.

Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being; and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.

Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason, why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Locke.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundless sky. Pope.

BO'UNDLESSNESS. n. s. [from boundless.] Exemption from limits.

God has corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires, by stinting his strength, and contracting his capacities. South.

BO'UNTEOUS.† adj. [from bounty, old Fr. bountenouse.] Liberal; kind; generous; munificent; beneficent: a word used chiefly in poetry for bountiful.

Every one,
According to the gift, which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd. Shakspeare.

Her soul abhorring avarice,
Bounteous; but almost bounteous to a vice. Dryd.

BO'UNTEOUSLY. adv. [from bounteous.] Liberally; generously; largely.

He bounteously bestow'd unenvy'd good
On me. Dryden.

BO'UNTEOUSNESS.† n. s. [from bounteous.] Munificence; liberality; kindness. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from the Psalms to illustrate this word, where the real word, however, is plenteousness. "Thou fillest all things living with plenteousness." Ps. cxlv. 16.

BO'UNTIFUL. adj. [from bounty and full.]

1. Liberal; generous; munificent.

As bountiful as mines of India. Shakspeare.

If you will be rich, you must live frugal; if you will be popular, you must be bountiful. Taylor.

I am obliged to return my thanks to many, who, without considering the man, have been bountiful to the poet. Dryden.

God, the bountiful author of our being. Locke.

2. It has of before the thing given, and to before the person receiving.

Our king spares nothing, to give them the share of that felicity, of which he is so bountiful to his kingdom. Dryden.

BO'UNTIFULLY. adv. [from bountiful.] Liberally; in a bountiful manner; largely.

And now thy alms is given,
And thy poor starv'ling bountifully fed. Denne.

It is affirm'd, that it never raineth in Egypt; the river bountifully requiting it in its inundation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

BO'UNTIFULNESS. n. s. [from bountiful.] The quality of being bountiful; generosity.

Enriched to all bountifulness. 2 Cor. ix. 11.

BO'UNTIHEAD. } n. s. [from bounty and BO'UNTIHEDE. } head, or hood. See
BO'UNTIHOOD. } HOOD.] Goodness; virtue. It is now wholly out of use.

This goodly frame of temperance,
Formerly grounded, and fast settled
On firm foundation of true bountihead.
Spenser, F. Q.

How shall frail pen, with fear disparaged,
Conceive such sovereign glory, and great bountihood?
Spenser, F. Q.

BO'UNTY.† n. s. [bonté, Fr. bountée, old Fr. from the Lat. bonitas.]

1. Generosity; liberality; munificence.

We do not so far magnify her exceeding bounty, as to affirm, that she bringeth into the world the sons of men, adorned with gorgeous attire.
Hooker, iii. § 4.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shaksp.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give, that is not thine.
Denham.

Those godlike men, to wanting virtue kind,
Bounty well plac'd preferr'd, and well design'd,
To all their titles. Dryden.

2. It seems distinguished from charity, as a present from an alms; being used, when persons, not absolutely necessitous, receive gifts; or when gifts are given by great persons.

Tell a miser of bounty to a friend, or mercy to the poor, and he will not understand it. South.

Her majesty did not see this assembly so proper to excite charity and compassion; though I question not but her royal bounty will extend itself to them. Addison.

3. Simply, goodness; agreeably to the original of the word. Not now in use. Spenser has used the adjective bounteous in the same sense.

Let not her fault your sweete affections marre,
Ne blott the bounty of all womankind
'Mongst thousands good, one wanton dame to find.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 49.

Bo'UQUET.* n. s. [Fr.] A nosegay. See BUSKET.

May-buskets; if busket be not there the French bouquet, now become English.
Warton, Notes on Milton.

To BOURD.* v. n. [Fr. bourder, from the low Lat. burdare, to joke, to jest; which is supposed to be adopted from bohordicum, a kind of exercise or tilting with spears. V. Du Cange in BOHORDICUM. This is one of our oldest words; and is still used in the North of England, as the substantive also is, for jest.] To jest.
Barret and Sherwood.

Brethren, quoth he, take kepe what I shal say;
My wit is great, though that I bourde and play.
Chaucer, Pard. T.

BOURD.* n. s. [old Fr. bourd, bord, a jest or story. V. Lacombe. See also To BOURD.] A jest.

They all agreed; so, turning all to game
And pleasaunt bord, they past forth on their way.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 13.

Gramercy, Borrill, for thy company,
For all thy jests, and all thy merry bourds.
Drayton, Shep. Garl. p. 53.

Bo'URDER.* n. s. [Fr. bourdeur.] A jester.
Huloet.

Bo'URDINGLY.* adv. [from bourd.] In sport. Huloet.

To Bo'URGEON.† v. n. [bourgeonner, Fr.] To sprout; to shoot into branches; to put forth buds.

And tools to prune the trees, before the pride
Of hasting prime did make them burgein round.
Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 43.

I fear, I shall begin to grow in love
With my dear self, and my most prosperous parts,
They do so spring and burgeon. B. Jonson, Fox, ii. 1.

Long may the dew of heaven distil upon them, to make them bourgeon and propagate among themselves.
Howell.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might bourgeon where another fell!
Still would I give thee work!
Dryden.

BOURN.† n. s. [borne, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.

Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none.
Shakspeare, Temp.

That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

False,
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine.
Shaks. Wint. Tale.

2. [From burn, Saxon; burn, Gael. water.] A brook; a torrent; whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense, though the second continues in the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, used still in the North of England for a brook, or small stream of water. And Milton affords a beautiful instance of the word, which Dr. Johnson has misunderstood; the poet, in his landscape, meaning by "bosky bourn" a rivulet skirted with trees; not merely a bound or limit, as Dr. Johnson has stated.

Ne swelling Neptune, ne loud thundering Jove,
Can change my cheer, or make me ever mourn;
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourn.
Spenser, F. Q.

And ere the sun had climb'd the eastern hills,
To gild the muttering bourns and pretty rills.
Browne, Brit. Past. p. 75.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side.
Milton, Comus, ver. 313.

BOURSE.* n. s. See BURSE.

To BOUSE.† v. n. [buysen, Dutch.] To drink lavishly; to tope.

As he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did bear a bousing can,
Of which he sipt.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 22.

Though he bouze his belly full.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 381.

A file of bousing comrades there.
Cleveland's Poems, &c. p. 17.

To BOUSE.* v. a. To swallow.

To restore and well flesh them, [hawks,] they commonly gave them hog's flesh, with oil, butter, and honey; and a decoction of cumfory to bouse.
Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 115.

BOU'SY. adj. [from bouse.] Drunken.

With a long legend of romantick things,
Which in his cups the bousy poet sings.
Dryden.

The guests upon the day appointed came,
Each bousy farmer with his simp'ring dame.
King.

BOUT. n. s. [botta, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of any action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: Pas durst not Cosma chace;
But did intend next bout with her to meet.
Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout.
Shaks.

When in your motion you are hot,
As make your bouts more violent to that end,
He calls for drink.
Shakspeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out.
Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life: says the weasel, I give no quarter to birds: says the bat, I am a mouse; look on my body: so she got off for that bout.
L'Estrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
Or if it want the nice concluding bout.
King.

BOUTA'DE. n. s. [Fr.] A whim; a start of fancy; an act of caprice.

His [lord Peter's] first boutade was to kick both their wives one morning out of doors, and his own too.
Swift, Tale of a Tub.

BOU'TEFEU. n. s. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and discontents. Now disused.

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion.
Bacon.

Nor could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeus, and open incendiaries.
King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
We set on work within the house.
Hudibras.

Bo'UTISALE. n. s. [I suppose from bouty or booty, and sale.] A sale at a cheap rate, as booty or plunder is commonly sold.

To speak nothing of the great boutisale of colleges and chantries.
Sir J. Hayward.

BOUTS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhimes of a number of verses given to be filled up.

To BOW.† v. a. [buzan, Saxon, boga, Su.]

1. To bend, or inflect. It sounds as now, or how.

Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down.
Psalm cxliv. 5.

A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it.
Shakspeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
And the mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.
Shakspeare.

I can fly, or I can run,
Quickly to the earth's green end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend.
Milton, Comus, v. 1015.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
Their tops in distant arches rise again.
Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bowed.
Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.
2 Kings. ii. 15.

Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sack-cloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord.
Isaiah, lviii. 5.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer.
Ecclus. iv. 8.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?
Shakspeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground.
Pope.

To Bow.† v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

The everlasting mountains were scattered: the perpetual hills did bow.
Habak. iii. 6.

2. To make a reverence.

Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king.
Shakspeare.

This is the great idol to which the world bows; to this we pay our devoutest homage.
Decay of Piety.

Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd.
For whereso'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd.
Dryden.

3. To stoop.

The people bowed down upon their knees, to drink.
Judges, vii. 6.

4. To sink under pressure.

They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden.
Isaiah, xlvi. 2.

Bow. n. s. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, how.] An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.

Some clergy too she wou'd allow,
Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow.
Swift.

Bow.† n. s. [Sax. box, boh. Pronounced as grow, no, lo, without any regard to the w.]

1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.

Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison.
Genesis.

The white faith of hist'ry cannot show,
That e'er the musket yet could beat the bow.
Alleyne's Hen. VII.

2. A rainbow.

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.
Gen. ix. 13.

3. The instrument with which string-instruments are struck.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind:
The sawtry, pipe, and hautboy's noisy band,
And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching hand. Dryden, Fables.

4. The doubling of a string in a slip-knot. This is perhaps corruptly used for bought.

Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow. Wiseman.

5. A yoke.

As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the faulcon his bells, so man hath his desire. Shakspeare.

6. Bow of a saddle. The bows of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid archwise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back, to give the saddle its due form, and to keep it tight. Farrier's Dict.

7. Bow of a ship. That part of her which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost part of the forecastle. If a ship hath a broad bow, they call it a bold bow; if a narrow thin bow, they say she hath a lean bow. The piece of ordnance that lies in this place, is called the bowpiece; and the anchors that hang here, are called her great and little bowers.

8. Bow is also a mathematical instrument, made of wood, formerly used by seamen in taking the sun's altitude.

9. Bow is likewise a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, that direct a lath of wood or steel to any arch; used commonly to draw draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or wherever it is requisite to draw long arches. Harris.

BOW-BEARER. n. s. [from bow and bear.] An under-officer of the forest. Cowel.

BOW-BENT. adj. [from bow and bent.] Crooked.

A sibyl old, bowbent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage.
Milton, Vac. Ex.

BOW-HAND. n. s. [from bow and hand.] The hand that draws the bow.

Surely he shoots wide on the bow-hand, and very far from the mark. Spenser, on Ireland.

BOW-LEG.* n. s. [from bow and leg.] A leg crooked as a bow.

Who fears to set straight, or hide, the unhandsome warpings of bow-legs?
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BOW-LEGGED. adj. [from bow and leg.] Having crooked legs.

BOW-SHOT.† n. s. [from bow and shot. Sometimes written bow-shoot.] The space which an arrow may pass in its flight from the bow.

She went, and sat her down over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow-shot. Gen. xxi. 16.

About a bow-shoot hence to the southward, upon the plain or lower ground; is a high column in perfection. Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 148.

Though he were not then a bow shot off, and made haste; yet by that time he was come, the thing was no longer to be seen. Boyle.

BOW-WINDOW.* n. s. [from bow and window.] A window projected, thrown out beyond the rest. But see BAY-WINDOW.

BO'WABLE.* adj. [from To bow.] Flexible of disposition.

If she be a virgin, she is pliable or bowable.
Wodroephe's Fr. Gram. 1623. p. 323.

To BO'WEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To take forth the bowels. From this old unnoticed verb comes the modern disembowel, and also Shakspeare's embowel. Sherwood renders bowelled by desentraielé. Huloet and Minsheu.

BO'WEL-LESS.* adj. [from bowel and less.] Without tenderness or compassion.

Miserable men commiserate not themselves; bowel-less unto others, and merciless unto their own bowels. Browne, Chr. Morals, i. 7.

BO'WELS.† n. s. [boyaux, modern French; boailles, old French. Roquefort, Suppl. Gloss. Rom.]

1. Intestines; the vessels and organs within the body.

He smote him therewith in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels. 2 Sam. xx. 10.

2. The inner parts of any thing.

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that
Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood appear. Shakspeare.

His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle. Shaks.

As he saw drops of water distilling from the rock, by following the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison.

3. The seat of pity, or kindness.

His bowels did yern upon him. Gen. xliii. 30.

4. Tenderness; compassion.

He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon.

5. This word seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.

BO'WER.† n. s. [not from bough or branch, or from the verb bow or bend, as Dr. Johnson asserts; but from the Sax. bup, a chamber. Our old language sometimes gives it bure; and in Cumberland, to this day, a back-room or chamber without a fire-place, or a little parlour, is called a boor. This word of northern origin is in the Goth. bur, a cottage; Theotisc. buer, the same; Icel. bur, a little dwelling, from bouan, to dwell; Dan. buur, an inner room; Dutch, buer, a cottage. The word, thus signifying a small or private abode, a place of shade or retirement, was easily transferred to the place of shelter or retirement, called an arbour. See BUR.]

1. A chamber: a private retirement.

Goe to my love, where she is carelesse laid,
Yet in her winter's bowre not well awake.
Spenser, Sonn. lxx.

The gyaunt selfe dismaied with that sownd,
Where he with his Duessa dalliaunce fownd,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bowre.
Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 5.

2. A cottage: Harrington has so rendered the expression of Ariosto, tugurii, agreeably to the old usage of bower.

Courtesie oft-times in simple bowres
Is found as great as in the stately towres.
Transl. of Ariost. xiv. 62.

3. Any abode or residence.

Wasting the countrie with sword and with fire,
Overturning towns, high castles, and towers,
Like Mars, god of war, enflamed with ire,
I forced the Frenchmen t' abandon their bowers.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 282.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower.
Milton, Il Pens.

Refresh'd, they wait them to the bower of state,
Where, circled with his peers, Atrides sate.
Pope, Il.

4. A place covered with the branches of trees or plants; a shady recess.

The pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter. Shaksp. Much Ado.

Hand in hand alone they pass'd
On to their blissful bower: — the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf. Milton, P. L.

BO'WER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers this word as signifying, in Spenser, a blow, a stroke, from the Fr. bourrer, to fall upon. Both the etymology and definition are erroneous. The word is used for the shoulder, Sax. boh, Dan. bou. The bowers, in anatomy, are the musculi flexores.] One of the muscles which bend the joints.

His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawned bowrs
Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were clene consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 41.

BO'WER. n. s. [from the bow of a ship.] Anchors so called. See Bow.

BO'WER.* n. s. [from To bow.] One who bows, in token of respect.

Those bowers to altars, those setters-up of crucifixes, &c. Icon Alethinè, 1649. p. 41.

To BO'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To embower; to inclose.

Thou didst bower the spirit,
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shaks.

To BO'WER.* v. n. To lodge. Obsolete.

Amongst them all grows not a fayrer flowre
Than is the bloosme of comely courtesie;
Which though it on a lowly stalke doth bowre,
Yet brancheth forth in brave nobilitie,
And spreds itself through all civilitie.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 4.

BO'WERY.† adj. [from bower.] Imbowering; covering with shade.

Landskips how gay the bowery grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds.
Tickell.

Snatch'd through the verdant maze the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bowery walk
Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps.
Thomson, Spring.

To BOWGE. See To BOUGE.

BO'WINGLY.* adv. [from bow.] In a bending manner; like a bow, arcuatim.
Huloet.

BOWL.† n. s. [buelin, Welsh; which signifies, according to Junius, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bole. So far Junius and Dr. Johnson. But the word is of northern origin: Goth. bolla, a cup. Sax. bolla.]

1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.
Shakspeare.

If a piece of iron be fastened on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will make unto it. Brown.

The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden.

While the bright Sein, t' exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires.
Fenton to Lord Gower.

2. The hollow part of any thing.

If you are allowed a large silver spoon for the kitchen, let half the bowl of it be worn out with continual scraping. Swift.

3. A basin or fountain.

But the main matter is so to convey the water, as it never stay either in the bowl or in the cistern. Bacon.

BOWL.† n. s. [boule, Fr. perhaps from the Lat. bulla. It is generally pronounced as cow, howl.] A round mass, which may be rolled along the ground.

Like to a bowl upon a subtile ground,
I've tumbled past the throw. Shakspeare.

How finely dost thou times and seasons spin!
And make a twist checker'd with night and day!
Which as it lengthens, winds, and winds us in,
As bowls go on, but turning all the way. Herbert.

Like him who would lodge a bowl upon a precipice, either my praise falls back, or stays not on the top, but rowls over. Dryden.

Men may make a game at bowls in the summer, and a game at whisk in the winter.
Dennis's Letters.

Though that piece of wood, which is now a bowl, may be made square, yet, if roundness be taken away, it is no longer a bowl. Watts, Logick.

To BOWL.† v. a. [old Fr. bouler.]

1. To roll as a bowl.

Break all the spokes and fellies of her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. To pelt with any thing rolled.

Alas! I had rather be set quick i' th' earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.
Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

To BOWL.* v. n. To play at bowls.

Challenge her to bowl. Shaks. L. Labour Lost.

BO'WLING.* n. s. [from bowl.] The art or act of throwing bowls.

This wise game of bowling doth make the fathers surpasse their children in apish toyes and most delicate dogtrickes. As first for the postures. 1. handle your bowle: 2. advance your bowle: 3. charge your bowle: 4. ayme your bowle: 5. discharge your bowle. 6. plye your bowle: in which last posture of plying your bowle you shall perceive many varieties and divisions, as wringing of the necke, lifting up of the shoulders, clapping of the hands, lying downe of one side, running after the bowle, making long dutifull scrapes and legs, &c.
Wit and Mirth, by John Taylor, (1629,) sign. D. 8. b.

In the preceding citation the origin of Addison's exercise of the fan is plainly, I think, to be discovered.

Many other sports and recreations there be much in use, as ringing, bowling, shooting.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 266.

Who can reasonably deny the lawfulness of many disports and recreations, as bowling or shooting? Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 217.

BO'WLDER-STONES. n. s. Lumps or fragments of stones or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being tumbled to and again by the water; whence their name.
Woodward on Fossils.

BO'WLER.† n. s. [from bowl.] One that plays at bowls.

Sisyphus has left rolling the stone, and is grown a master-bowler. B. Jonson, Masques.

Who can reasonably think it to be a commendable calling, for any man to be a profest bowler, or archer, or gamester, and nothing else?
Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 217.

BO'WLINE.† } n. s. [A sea term. Su. bog-
BO'WLING. } lina, Ihre; bouline, Fr. written also boulin and bolin.] A rope fastened to the middle part of the outside of a sail; it is fastened in three or four parts of the sail, called the bowling bridle. The use of the bowling is to make the sails stand sharp or close to a wind. Harris.

Slack the bolins there; thou wilt not,
Wilt thou? Blow, and split thyself.
Shakspeare, Pericles.

As if a gentleman of Northamptonshire, Warwickshire, or the Midland, should fetch all the illustrations to his country-neighbours from shipping, and tell them of the main-sheet and the boulin. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

BO'WLING-GREEN. n. s. [from bowl and green.] A level piece of ground, kept smooth for bowlers.

A bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct line.
Bentley.

BO'WLING-GROUND.* n. s. [from bowl and ground.] The same as bowling-green.

That (for six of the nine acres) is counted the subtlest bowling-ground in all Tartary.
B. Jonson, Mosques.

BO'WMAN. n. s. [from bow and man.] An archer; he that shoots with a bow.

The whole city shall flee, for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen. Jerem. iv. 29.

BO'WNET.* n. s. [Sax. bozenet.] A weel, or net made of twigs bowed or incurvated, to catch fish.

To BOWSE.* v. n. A sea term signifying to hale or pull together. Chambers.

BO'WSPRIT. n. s. [from the bow of the ship.] This word is also spelt boltsprit; which see.

To BO'WSSEN. v. a. [probably of the same original with bouse, but found in no other passage.] To drench: to soak.

The water fell into a close walled plot; upon this wall the frantick person set, and from thence tumbled headlong into the pond; where a strong fellow tossed him up and down, until the patient, by foregoing his strength, had somewhat forgot his fury: but if there appeared small amendment, he was bowssened again and again, while there remained in him any hope of life or recovery.
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BO'WSTRING. n. s. [from bow and string.] The string by which the bow is kept bent.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him.
Shakspeare.

Sound will be conveyed to the ear, by striking upon a bowstring, if the horn of the bow be held to the ear. Bacon.

BO'WYER.† n. s. [from bow.]

1. An archer; one that uses the bow.

Call for vengeance from the bowyer king.
Dryden.

2. One whose trade is to make bows.

Good bows and shafts shall be better known, to the commodity of shooters; and good shooting may, perchance, be more occupied, to the profit of all bowyers and fletchers. Ascam, Toxophilus.

BOX. n. s. [box, Saxon; buxus, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot, inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engravers, and mathematical instrument-makers; being so hard, close, and ponderous, as to sink in water. Miller.

Box, there are two sorts of it; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is very good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide, and will prosper on the declivity of cold, dry, barren, chalky hills, where nothing else will grow. Mortimer.

Box.† n. s. [box, Sax. buste, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

A magnet, though but in an ivory box, will, through the box, send forth his embracing virtue to a beloved needle. Sidney, Arc. b. ii.

About his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakspeare.

The lion's head is to open a most wide voracious mouth, which shall take in letters and papers. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it.
Steele, Guardian, No. 98.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

2. The case of the mariners' compass.

3. The chest into which money given is put.

So many more, so every one was used,
That to give largely to the box refused. Spenser.

4. The seats in the playhouse, where the ladies are placed.

Wanton dames come disguised into God's house, as it were into the box of the playhouse.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

'Tis left to you, the boxes and the pit
Are sovereign judges of this sort of wit. Dryden.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring,
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.

To Box.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in a box.

Box'd in a chair, the beau impatient sits,
While spouts run clattering o'er the roof by fits.
Swift, City Shower.

2. In naval language, to box the compass, is to rehearse the several points of it in their proper order.

BOX. n. s. [bock, a cheek, Welsh.] A blow on the head given with the hand.

For the box o' th' ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince. Shakspeare, H. IV.

If one should take my hand perforce, and give another a box on the ear with it, the law punisheth the other. Bramhall against Hobbes.

There may happen concussions of the brain from a box on the ear. Wiseman's Surgery.

Olphis, the fisherman, received a box on the ear from Thestylis. Addison, Spectator, No. 283.

To Box. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight with the fist.

The ass very fairly looked on, till they had boxed themselves a-weary, and then left them fairly in the lurch. L'Estrange.

A leopard is like a cat; he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kitlins. Grew.

The fighting with a man's shadow consists in brandishing two sticks, loaden with plugs of lead; this gives a man all the pleasure of boxing, without the blows. Spectator, No. 115.

He hath had six duels, and four and twenty boxing matches, in defence of his majesty's title. Spectator, No. 629.

To Box.† v. a. To strike with the fist.

Let the boy get up ever so often, the other is obliged to box him again as often as he requires it. Misson's Travels over England, p. 304.

Bo'XEN.† adj. [formerly boxy, Lat. buxeus. Huloet.]

1. Made of box.

The young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

As lads and lasses stood around,
To hear my boxen hautboy sound. Gay, Pastorals.

2. Resembling box.

Her faded cheeks are chang'd to boxen hue,
And in her eyes the tears are ever new. Dryden.

Bo'XER.† n. s. [from box.] A man who fights with his fist.

Castor a horseman, Pollux though
A boxer was, I wist:
The one was fam'd for iron heel,
Th' other for leaden fist.
Ballad of St. George for England.

To Bo'XHAUL.* v. a. A sea term. To turn about, to veer the ship by a particular method, when the swell of the sea renders tacking impracticable. Chambers.

BOY. n. s. [bube, Germ. The etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing. Zech. viii. 5.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou boy;
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind.
The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd.
Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor. Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.
Pope.

To Boy.† v. a. [from the noun.] To treat as a boy; but the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Shakspeare, is thought by the commentators to signify the acting of women's characters on the stage by boys. I, therefore, add an example, which clearly proves the meaning of treated as a boy, or despised.

Anthony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,
I' the posture of a whore.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I am tainted;
The dearest twin to life, my credit's murder'd,
Baffled and boy'd. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Bo'YBLIND.* adj. [from boy and blind.] Undiscerning, like a boy.

Put case he could be so boy-blind and foolish.
Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

Bo'YHOOD. n. s. [from boy.] The state of a boy; the part of life in which we are boys. This is perhaps an arbitrary word.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective, and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference; the same air, the same strut. Swift.

Bo'YISH. † adj. [from boy. Formerly boyly. "Boyly or boyish: as, a boyly old lubber, that will still play the boy, not chaunging his manners with his years." Huloet.]

1. Belonging to a boy.

I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Shakspeare, Othello.

2. Childish; trifling.

This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms.
Shakspeare, K. John.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling. Dryden.

Bo'YISHLY.† adv. [from boyish.] Childishly; triflingly. Sherwood.

Bo'YISHNESS.† n. s. [from boyish.] Childishness; trifling manner. Sherwood and Kersey.

Bo'YISM.† n. s. [from boy.]

1. Puerility; childishness.

He had complained he was farther off from possession, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the dignity of the subject. Dryden, Fab. Preface.

2. The state of a boy.

The real boyism of the brothers, which yet should have been forgotten by the poet, is to be taken into the account. Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

Boy's-PLAY.* n. s. [from boy and play.] The amusement of a boy.

Away, this is no boy's-play!
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

Bp. An abbreviation of bishop.

To BRA'BBLE.† v. n. [brabbelen, Dutch, from the noun.] To clamour; to contest noisily.

Reason, in faith thou art well serv'd, that still
Wouldst brabbling be with sense and love in me.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

If brabbling Makefray, at each fair and 'size,
Picks quarrels for to shew his valiantize.
Bp. Hall, Satires, iv. 4.

This is not a place
To brabble in; Calianax, join hands.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

We are not so contentious or brabbling, as you would have us.
Montagu's Appeal to Cæsar, p. 304.

BRA'BBLE.† n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous contest; a squabble; a broil.

Here in the streets, desperate in shame and state,
In private brabble did we apprehend him.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

If it be only some slight brabble, we think to compose it alone.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, ii. 9.

The practice being discovered by a brabble between the parties about the hiring money.
Spelman, Hist. of Sacrilege, ch. 1.

BRA'BBLER.† n. s. [from brabble.] A clamorous, quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabbler. Shakspeare, K. John.

BRA'BBLING.* n. s. [from brabble.] Quarrel: which in low conversation is frequently called brabblement. So brangle-ment is used for brangling.

I omit their brabblings and blasphemies.
Sir J. Harington, Treatise on Play, about 1597.

To BRACE.† v. a. [embrasser, Fr. and its old sense in Eng. is embrace; as, "he bracyd her,—and made her gladly chere," Tale at the close of Urry's Chaucer.]

1. To bind; to tie close with bandages.

The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet. Locke.

2. To intend; to make tense; to strain up.

The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced.
Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion. Arbuthnot on Air.

3. To surround; to encompass.

For big bulls of Basan brace them about.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. September.

BRACE.†[1] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cincture; bandage.

2. That which holds any thing tight.

The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war-drum do in that. Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. BRACE. [in architecture.] is a piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way. Builder's Dict.

4. BRACES. [a sea term.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except the mizen. They have a pendant to the yard-arm, two braces to each yard; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards. Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. Harness.

7. BRACE. [in printing.] A crooked line inclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,
Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove;
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. } Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakspeare, Othello.

9. The armour for the arm. [Fr. bras. Hence our word vant-brace also.]

An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.—
——— It hath been a shield
'Twixt me and death; and pointed to this brace.
Shakspeare, Pericles, ii. 1.

10. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind
Milton, P. L.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden, Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants.
Addison, Freeholder.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you.
Shakspeare, Tempest.

BRA'CELET.† n. s. [bracelet, French, from the low Lat. bracellus.]

1. An ornament for the arms.

Both his hands were cut off, being known to have worn bracelets of gold about his wrists.
Sir J. Hayward.

Tie about our tawny wrists
Bracelets of the fairy twists.
B. Jonson, Fairy Prince.

A very ingenious lady used to wear, in rings and bracelets, store of those gems. Boyle.

2. A piece of defensive armour for the arm.

BRA'CER.† n. s. [from brace.]

1. A cincture; a bandage.

When they affect the belly, they may be restrained by a bracer, without much trouble.
Wiseman's Surgery.

2. A medicine of constringent power.

3. Armour for the arm. [Fr. brassar, Dict. Trevoux, from bras. See also BRACE. This is a very old Eng. substantive. The distinction of an archer's bracer is noticed by Sherwood.]

Upon his arme he bare a gaie bracer,
And by his side a sword and a bokeler.
Chaucer, Prologue, C. T.

BRACH.† n/s. [old Fr. brache: "brachel, chien de chasse," Lacombe. Such a dog is still called in Scotland a brachell. Germ. brack, low Lat. bracco, old Goth. racke, and in our own language rache is the dog-hound as brache is the female. See the Gentleman's Recreation, p. 28.] A bitch-hound. Burton's illustration of this word exhibits a match for the sporting sow of modern times, which Mr. Daniel, in his Anecdotes of Rural Sports, has celebrated.

A sow-pig by chance sucked a brach, and when she was grown would miraculously hunt all manner of deer; and that as well, or rather better than an ordinary hound. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 142.

Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady, the brach, may stand by the fire and stink. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

BRA'CHIAL.† adj. [Fr. brachial, from brachium, an arm, Lat.] Belonging to the arm. Blount.

BRA'CHMAN, or BRA'MIN.* n. s. [called by the Portuguese braman or bremen; by the English, most commonly, bramin. The etymology is said to be from brama, the secondary deity of the Hindoos; though Mr. Bryant contends that brachmanes is the contraction of Bar-Achmanes, and that the persons were so denominated from Manes, the lunar deity whom they served. Analys. Anc. Mythol. vol. 3. p. 220.] A priest of India, of the first and principal cast of the four grand divisions of Gentoos.

The Indians have their brachmans, the Turks their muftis. Fealley, Dippers Dipt, p. 130.

BRACHY'GRAPHER.* n. s. [from brachygraphy.] A short-hand-writer.

He beheld himself, and sermon-writer; and did not know which most to wonder at, his own deafness, or the fellow's acuteness. At last, he asked the brachygrapher, whether he wrote the notes of that sermon, or something of his own conception?
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, i. 8.

BRACHY'GRAPHY.† n. s. [Fr. bracygraphie, from βραχὺς short, and γράφω, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

He is to take the whole dances from the foot by brachygraphy, and so make a memorial, if not a map of the business. B. Jonson, Masques.

To grammar may be referred the useful art of brachygraphy or writing by short marks.
Hakewill's Apology, p. 260.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Glanville.

BRACK.† n. s. [from the Goth. braka, Sax. bpacan, to break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Fortune cannot raise
Any aloft, without some other's wracke;
Floods drown no fields before they find a bracke.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 340.

You may find time out in eternity,
Deceit and violence in heavenly justice,
Life in the grave, and death among the blessed,
Ere stain or brack in her sweet reputation.
Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece, and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout, I shall promise myself an acquiescence.
Digby on the Soul, Dedic.

BRA'CKEN.* n. s. [written also braken, and sometimes pronounced breckin, in the north of England; perhaps from break.] Fern.

BRA'CKET.† n.s. [a term of carpentry, from the Lat. brachium, an arm.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath.
Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH.† adj. [brack, Dutch, from the Goth. breke, the sea.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand; but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brakish waters on the ground,
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.
What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main diffuse?
Blackmore.

BRA'CKISHNESS. n. s. [from brackish.] Saltness in a small degree.

All the artificial strainings, hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

BRA'CKY.* adj. The same as brackish, which see.

The bracky fountains. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 11.
The bracky marsh. Ibid. S. 14.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Sax. bpab, and the Goth. braid. Gibson's Camden.

BRAD. n.s. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentaticusly; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. Shakspeare, Othello.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England. Sanderson, Pax Ecclesiæ.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war.
Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment.
Arbuthnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth. Shaks.

Ev'ry busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend.
Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon.
Pope, Dunciad.

BRAG. n.s. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest
Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame.
Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon, War with Spain.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, at high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton, Comus.

BRAG.* adj. [from the verb.] Proud; boasting; insolent. Spenser uses it adverbially.

The chiefe cause of this hath bene the cruel contempt of holy wedlocke, and the bragge bosting out of their unholye chastitye.
Bale's Acts of Eng. Votaries, M. vii. b.

Seest how brag yond bullock bears,
So smirke, so smoothe, his pricked ears?
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. v. 71.

Much hath been laid in against that bragge prescription, to the which their confidence and hope of silence on the contrary parte moved them.
Stapleton's Fortresse of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 68.

BRAG.* n. s. A name given to a game at cards from the nature of it; the principal stake being won by him who brags with most confidence and address, i. e. who challenges the other gamesters to produce cards equal to his. Chambers.

If they happen to rise above brag or whist, [they] infallibly stop short of every thing either pleasing or instructive. Ld. Chesterfield.

BRAGGADO'CIO.† n. s. [from brag, adopted from Spenser's vain-glorious knight, Braggadocchio.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRA'GGARDISE.* n. s. [old Fr. bragardise.] Gloriation; a bragging.
Minsheu and Sherwood.

BRA'GGARDISM.† n. s. [from braggardise.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

BRA'GGART.† n. s. [sometimes written braggard, as in Minsheu's and Sherwood's dictionaries; old Fr. bragard. Dutch, braggaerd] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass.
Shakspeare, All's well.

Pox upon your women,
And your half-man there, court-sir Ambergris,
A perfum'd braggart.
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from the substantive.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high-born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puft nobility? Donne.

BRA'GGER.† n. s. [from brag, old Fr. bragueur, Kelham.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Many ydell wytted braggers, whych judge them selves lerned, and are nothing lesse.
Bale, in Leland's New Yeares Gyfte.

The loudest braggers of Jews or Grecians are found guilty of spiritual ignorance.
Hammond's Sermons, p. 627.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRA'GGET.* n. s. [Welsh, bragod, bragawd; Cornish, bregawds a very old Eng. word, and sometimes written bracket, or braket. It is still in use in the north, as well as in Wales, for a compound drink.] A sweet drink, usually made of the wort of ale, spice and honey; a kind of mead.

Hir mouth was swete as braket or the meth,
Or hord of apples, laid in hay or heth.
Chaucer, Miller's Talc.

Armed all in ale,
With the brown bowl, and charg'd in braggat stale.
B. Jonson, Masques.

One that knows not neck-beef from a pheasant,
Nor cannot relish braggat from ambrosia.
Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

BRA'GGINGLY.* adv. [from brag.] Boastingly; in an insulting manner. Huloet.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles. —— If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cres.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk same hawthorn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids make ready Maia's bower.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To BRAID.† v. a. [bpeban, Saxon; often written brede, in our elder language, agreeably to the etymology; and perhaps for another reason, which also has here escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson; namely, that the verb to braid for upbraid, was once in use, and therefore the distinction of orthography might be nicely regarded. See Huloet in V. To BRAID, exprobo, reprocher.] To weave together.

She anointed herself with precious ointment, and braided the hair of her head. Judith, x. 3.

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded. Milton, P. L.

Osier wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly.
Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay, Trivia.

BRAID. n. s. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou are sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping-hair.
Milton, Comus.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound.
Prior.

BRAID.† adj. [from Sax. bpeð, deceit; perhaps from the Iceland. bragd, fraud or deceit. Mr. Horne Tooke gives the interpretation of beaten up, as it were, in a mortar, from bray, to pound, instead of the sense, which Johnson and other commentators on Shakspeare had given the word, of deceitful; and ridiculing them, he contends, that the expression alludes to Prov. xxvii. 20. "Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." The context of the poet, however, does not seem to warrant Mr. Tooke's conclusion, that "Diana does not confine herself merely to the craft and deceit of Bertram, but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes him to be compounded, and which would not depart from him, though bray'd in a mortar." The allusion, throughout the scene points merely at his deceit.] Crafty; deceitful.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in his heart: he had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him,
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry that will, I'll live and die a maid;
Only, in this disguise, I think't no sin
To cozen him, that would unjustly win.
Shakspeare, All's Well, &c. iv. 2.

BRAID.* n. s. [from abraid, to awake. See To ABRAID. "At a braide," on a sudden, at the instant, Chauc. Rom. R. 1336.] A start. Obsolete.

O, what a ruthful, stedfast eye, methought,
He fix'd upon my face, which to my death
Will never part from me! when with a braid,
A deep-fet sigh he gave, and therewithal
Clasping his hands, to heaven he cast his sight.
Sackville, Trag. of Gorbodue.

To BRAID.* v. a. [Su. Goth. brigda; Icelandick, bregda; to reproach. This is the parent of our verb upbraid, though it has fallen into disuse. Huloet's old dictionary presents not only the verb, but also the substantive braider, as a reproacher; and braid, for reproach, was also formerly in use.] To upbraid; to reproach. Obsolete.

BRAILS. n. s. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is when the sail is furled across, to hail up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN.† n. s. [bpæzen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain, which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea.
Cheselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.
Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true.
Bacon. Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond on Fundamentals.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common nor proper.

My son Edgar; had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shaks. K. Lear.

4. Fancy; imagination.

God will be worshipped and served according to his prescript word, and not according to the brain of man. Apb. Sandys, Sermons, fol. 128. b.

Ladies that call themselves collegiates, an order between courtiers and country-madams, that live from their husbands; and give entertainment to all the wits, and braveries o' the time, as they call 'm; cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain or fashion, with most masculine or rather hermaphroditical authority. B. Jonson, Episcæne.

To BRAIN.† v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him.
Shakspeare, Tempest.

They invent a slander—that the Jews were naturally to their wives the cruellest men in the world; would poison, brain, and do I know not what if they might not divorce. Milt. Tetrachordon.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death.
Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast.
Pope, Odyssey.

BRA'INISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BRA'INLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints.
Hooker, v. 20.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices.
Shakspeare Tr. and Cress.

The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN.† n. s. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

And a certain woman cast a piece of millstone on Abimelech, and all-to brake his brayne-panne.
Judges, ix. 53. (Bible of Hen. VIII.)

You are wise,
Your honourable brain-pan full of crotchets.
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca, v. 2.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brainpan glows.
Dryden.

BRA'INSICK. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseased in the understanding; addle-headed; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

They were brainsick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance.
Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BRA'INSICKLY.† adv. [from brainsick.] Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainsickly of things. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In the question about ἀνρόθεος., M. Parsons, venting his acerbity, saith; "M. Morton hath a shift to deceive his reader." Bitterly and brainsickly too, by your leave; for afterwards he was compelled to confess, that the letters set down, for his direction in the margin, were so dim, that he mistook them. Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 219.

BRA'INSICKNESS. n. s. [from brainsick.] Indiscretion; giddiness.

BRAIT. n. s. Among jewellers for a rough diamond. Dict.

BRAKE. The preterite of break.

He thought it sufficient to correct the multitude with sharp words, and brake out into this cholerick speech. Knolles.

BRAKE.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew, Sur. of Cornwall.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton, P. L.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight. Dryden, Fables.

2. It is said originally to mean fern, Dr. Johnson says. It has still this meaning. See BRACKEN.

In a canvas thin he was bedight,
And girded with a belt of twisted brake.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 22.

Other [leaves] are parted small, like our fern or brakes. Terry's Voyage, p. 105.

BRAKE.† n. s.

1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.
3. A baker's kneading trough.
4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses. A smith's brake is a machine in which horses unwilling to be shod, are confined during that operation. Used figuratively by our old poets.

Fairfax, Tasso.

BRA'KY.† adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lay hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open, and flowery light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If He lead us through braky thickets and deep sloughs, know, that He knows this the nearer way, though more combersome.
Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

BRA'MBLE.† n. s. [Sax. bpæmbel, formerly written bremble.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Miller.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.
Dryden, Ovid.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bower,
The woods can witness many a woeful store.
Spenser, Past.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare, As You Like it.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrustles shrill the bramble bush forsake.
Gay, Past.

BRA'MBLED.* adj. [from bramble.] Overgrown with brambles or briers.

Beneath yon tower's unvaulted gate,
Forlorn she sits upon the brambled floor.

BRAN.† n. s. [old Fr. bren, bran; bas Bret. bren; Ital. brenna.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flower of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hayward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility.
Wotton.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

Figuratively used like the Latin farina.

They add more particulars of the same bran.
Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 3. § 3.

BRAN-NEW.* [Teut. brand-new; and so written and pronounced in some parts of the north of England.] This expression, still common in colloquial language, might be perhaps originally brent-new, or brennew, from the Sax. bpennan, to burn; equivalent in meaning to firenew, i. e. to any thing new from the forge; hence the secondary sense, just finished, quite new. Kilian explains the Teut. expression by vier-new.

BRA'NCARD. n. s. [Fr. brancal and brancar. V. Cotgrave in both.] A horse-litter; or any thing that has arms or outbearing side-beams, and is to be carried by or between two.

The gentleman —— proposed, that he would either make use of a boat to Newport or Ostend, or a brancard to St. Omer's; either of which he would cause to be provided against the next morning. Life of Lord Clarendon, iii. 891.

BRANCH.† n. s. [branche, Fr. in Provence, branchia, from the Lat. brachium.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?
Shakspeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole;

any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.
Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side. Exodus, xxv. 32.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks. Ralegh, Hist.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river. Ralegh, Hist.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

His father, a younger branch of the ancient stock planted in Somersetshire, took to wife the widow.
Carew, Surv.

Thou mighty branch of emperours and kings!
Crashaw.

7. The antlers or shoots of a stag's horn.

8. The branches of a bridle are two pieces of bended iron, that bear the bit-mouth, the chains, and the curb, in the interval between the one and the other.
Farrier's Dict.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults; which arches transversing from one angle to another, diagonalwise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals. Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The cause of scattering of the boughs is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and, therefore, those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Plant it round with shade
Of laurel ever-green, and branching palm.
Milton, S. A.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,
Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;
Fresh was the grass beneath, and every tree
At distance planted in a due degree,
Their branching arms in air, with equal space,
Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.
Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views
Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.
Addison, Ovid.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Addison, on Italy.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into further distinctions. Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

I have known a woman branch out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat.
Spectator, No. 247.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head. Milton, P. L.

To BRANCH.† v. a.

1. To divide as into branches.

The spirit of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branched into canals as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats where the principal spirits do reside. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.

In robe of lily white she was array'd,
That from her shoulder to her heel down raught,
The train whereof loose far behind her stray'd,
Branched with gold and pearl most richly wrought.
Spenser, F. Q.

May the moths branch their velvets.
Beaum. and Fl. Philast.

Your branch'd cloth of bodkin. Ibid.

BRA'NCHER. n. s. [from branch.]

1. One that shoots out into branches.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may yield, though with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Wotton.

2. [Branchier, Fr] In falconry, a young hawk.

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the eires the brancher, and the two sorts of lentners. Walton's Angler.

BRA'NCHLESS.† adj. [from branch.]

1. Without shoots or boughs.

Branchless wood, "bois de fustée," naked or polled trees. Cotgrave.

Quite round the pile, a row of reverend elms,
Coeval near with that, all ragged shew,
Long lash'd by the rude winds: some rift half down
Their-branchless trunks. R. Blair, The Grave.

2. Without any valuable product; naked.

If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BRA'NCHY.† adj. [from branch. This adjective is a century older than the time of Pope, being found in Minsheu's dictionary.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown,
Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;
Sudden full twenty on the plain are strow'd
And lopp'd, and lighten'd of their branchy load. Pope.

What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

BRAND.† n. s. [bpand, Sax. from bpennan, to burn.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted in the fire.

Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Take it, she said, and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.
Dryden, Fables.

If, with double diligence, they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Rogers.

2. A sword. [Runick, brandar; Goth. and Iceland. brandur; old Fr. brande; Fr. Theotisc. brandò; Ital. brando; a sword. All, in allusion to the brand, or flaming fire, which swords were either made or supposed to represent.]

They looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of paradise, so late their happy seat!
Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms.
Milton, P. L.

3. A thunderbolt.

The sire omnipotent prepares the brand,
By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand.
Granville.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous; a stigma.

Clerks convict should be burned in the hand, both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour.
L'Estrange.

5. Any note of infamy.

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand.
Dryden, Mac Fleck.

To BRAND.† v. a. [branden, Dutch.]

1. To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.

Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The king was after branded, by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Bacon.

Brand not their actions with so foul a name;
Pity, at least, what we are forced to blame.
Dryden.

Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.

Our Punick faith
Is infamous and branded to a proverb.
Addison, Cato.

The spreader of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy.
Atterbury.

BRA'NDIRON.* n. s. [Sax. bpanbipen.] A trivet to set a pot upon. Huloet. In Scotland, brander is used for this word, and signifies a gridiron. But see ANDIRON.

To BRA'NDISH.† v. a. [from brand, a sword; which see.]

1. To wave, or shake, or flourish as a weapon.

I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them.
Ezek. xxxii. 10.

Brave Macbeth,
Disdaining fortune with his brandish'd steel,
Like valour's minion carved out his passage.
Shakspeare.

He said, and brandishing at once his blade,
With eager pace pursu'd the flaming shade.
Dryden.

Let me march their leader, not their prince;
And at the head of your renown'd Cydonians,
Brandish this sword Smith, Phædr. and Hippol.

2. To play with; to flourish.

He who shall employ all the force of his reason, only in brandishing of syllogisms, will discover very little. Locke.

BRA'NDISH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A flourish.

I can wound with a brandish and never draw bow for the matter. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

[She] accompanied her discourse with motions of the body, tosses of the head, and brandishes of the fan. Tatler. No. 157.

To BRA'NDLE.* v. n. [Fr. brandiller.] To shake; to wag; to totter. Cotgrave.

Walton's Angler.

2. A kind of trout. See BRANLIN.

BRAND-NEW.* See BRAN-NEW.

BRA'NDY.† n. s. [contracted from brande-wine, or burnt wine. Skinner first notices the word brandy, Etymol. 1671; South, in his application of it to shops, shews that it was then, however, common.] A strong liquour distilled from wine.

Buy any brand wine, buy any brand wine.
Beaum. and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

That man's work is done, and his name lies grovelling upon the ground in all the taverns, brandy-shops, and coffee-houses about the town.
South, Serm. vi. p. 109.

If your master lodgeth at inns, every dram of brandy extraordinary that you drink, raiseth his character. Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

BRANDY-WINE. n. s. The same with brandy.

It has been a common saying, A hair of the same dog; and thought, that brandy-wine is a common relief to such. Wiseman's Surgery.

BRA'NGLE.† n. s. [uncertainly derived, Dr. Johnson says. It may be a corruption of wrangle, which see.] Squabble; wrangle; litigious contest.

The payment of tythes is subject to many frauds, brangles, and other difficulties, not only from papists and dissenters, but even from those who profess themselves protestants. Swift.

To BRA'NGLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To wrangle; to squabble.

This is "durus sermo," says some brangling parishioner that fetches up his poor minister every term for trifles. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 81.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Brasiers that turn andirons, pots, kettles, &c. have their lathe made different from the common turners lathe. Moxon.

2. A pan to hold coals. [probably from embraser, Fr. Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather from brasier, a burning coal. V. Cotgrave, in braisier and brasier. It is introduced as an affected word, and is said to have been made of silver in the Fop's dictionary, at the end of Mundus Muliebris, published in 1690.]

It is thought they had no chimneys, but were warmed with coals on brasiers.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

BRA'SIL.† } n. s. An American wood, com-
BRA'ZIL. } monly supposed to have been thus denominated, because first brought from Brazil: though Huet shows it had been known by that name many years before the discovery of that country; and the best sort comes from Fernambuc. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish, but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red. Chambers.

The following passage of an English author proves also that the Brazil wood was long known by that name, before the discovery of the country so called in America.

He loketh as a sparhauk with his eyen;
Him nedeth not his colour for to dien
With Brasil, ne with grain of Portingale.
Chaucer, Nun's

BRASS.† n. s. [bpaꝛ, Sax. prés, Welsh.]

1. A yellow metal, made by mixing copper with lapis calaminaris. It is used, in popular language, for any kind of metal in which copper has a part.

Brass is made of copper and calaminaris.
Bacon.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Let others mold the running mass
Of metals, and inform the breathing brass.
Dryden.

2. Impudence. See BRASS-VISAGED.

3. Used for copper. The Irish now call copper money, brass; and formerly we employed the same phrase.

A land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass. Deut. viii. 9.

Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses. St. Matt. x. 9.

There were just four thousand brass half-pence.
Dryden, Amphitryon.

BRASS-PAVED.* adj. [from brass and paved.] Firm and durable as brass; an expression warranted by classical authorities. Gr. χαλχοπεδον.

She [Juno] does ride
To Jove's high-house, through heaven's brass-paved way. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 17.

BRASS-VISAGED.* adj. [from brass and visage.] Having a face of brass; impudent.

And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flint.
Shakspeare.

3. Impudent.

BRAST. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

There creature never past,
That back returned without heavenly grace,
But dreadful furies which their chains have brast,
And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast. Spenser, F. Q.

BRAT.† n. s. [its etymology is uncertain; bpatt, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come, Dr. Johnson says. Bratt has a kindred meaning in the Welsh, viz. a rag, a clout. In Chaucer, the word is used for a coarse mantle. So in the Gael. brat, is a mantle or covering. And, to this day, in Cumberland and Westmorland, brat means a coarse apron. If the application of brat to a child be not owing to these terms, may we may not consider it as the past participle of breed, viz. bred, then softened into bret, and finally corrupted into brat?]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

This brat is none of mine:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

The friends that got the brats were poison'd too;
In this sad case what could our vermin do?
Roscommon.

Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children.
L'Estrange.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld, since she was a brat in hanging-sleeves. Swift.

I give command to kill or save,
Can grant ten thousand pounds a-year,
And make a beggar's brat a peer. Swift.

2. The progeny; the offspring.

The two late conspiracies were the brats and offspring of two contrary factions. South.

BRAVA'DO.† n. s. [bravada, Span.] A boast; a brag.

Let me advise our men to avoid needless bravadoes, and not contemn them [inhabitants] for their indefensive nakedness.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 19.

In a bravado to encounter death, and for a small flash of honour to cast away himself.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. to the Reader.

No, goodman glory, 'tis not your bravados,
Your punctual honour!
Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

BRAVE.† adj. [Goth. brahe, bold, braf, honest; Iceland. braf; Germ. brav. Ihre considers brage, as the origin; Watchter, probus; and others, the Gr. βραβεῖον, the prize of victory; whence the low Lat. bravium.]

1. Courageous; daring; bold; generous; high-spirited.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe, that his genius, which otherways was brave and confident, was, in the presence of Octavius Cæsar, poor and cowardly. Bacon.

From armed foes to bring a royal prize,
Shows your brave heart victorious as your eyes.
Waller.

2. Gallant; having a noble mien; lofty; graceful.

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with a braver grace. Shaks.

3. Magnificent; grand.

Rings put upon his fingers,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself?
Shakspeare.

But whosoe'er it was nature design'd
First a brave place, and then as brave a mind.
Denham.

4. Excellent; noble: it is an indeterminate word, used to express the superabundance of any valuable quality in men or things.

Let not old age disgrace my high desire,
O heavenly soul in human shape contain'd;
Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire,
When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend.
Sidney.

If there be iron ore, and mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth. Bacon.

If a statesman has not this science, he must be subject to a braver man than himself, whose province it is to direct all his actions to this end.
Digby, on the Soul, Dedic.

5. Fine; showy. See BRAVERY.

With blossoms brave bedecked daintily.
Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 32.

BRAVE.† n. s. [brave, Fr.]

1. A hector; a man daring beyond decency or discretion.

Happy times! when braves and hacksters, the only contented members of his government, were thought the fittest and the faithfullest to defend his person. Milton, Eicon. ch. 3.

Hot braves, like thee, may fight, but know not well
To manage this, the last great stake. Dryden.

Morat's too insolent, too much a brave,
His courage to his envy is a slave. Dryden.

2. A boast; a challenge; a defiance.

There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;
We grant thou canst outscold us. Shakspeare.

He sent me a challenge (mixed with some few braves) which I restored, and in fine we met.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

To BRAVE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To defy; to challenge; to set at defiance.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch. Shakspeare.

My nobles leave me, and my state is brav'd
Ev'n at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers.
Shakspeare.

The ills of love, not those of fate I fear;
These I can brave, but those I cannot bear.
Dryden.

Like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest and the rising waves.
Dryden.

2. To carry a boasting appearance of.

Both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or, at least, to brave that which they believe not. Bacon, Essays.

3. To make fine or splendid, in the sense of bravery for show. Not now in use.

He [the sun] disdains to shine; for, by the book,
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

BRA'VELY.† adv. [from brave.]

1. In a brave manner; courageously; gallantly.

Martin Swart, with his Germans, performed bravely. Bacon.

No fire, nor foe, nor fate, nor night,
The Trojan hero did affright,
Who bravely twice renew'd the fight. Denham.

3. In good health: a common expression in the north of England.

BRA'VERY.† n. s. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to do by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us. Spectator, No. 255.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence; finery.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,
And all the happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments. Isaiah, iii. 18.

Like a stately ship ——
With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving.
Milton, S. A. v. 717.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery.
Bacon, Essays.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises. Sidney, Arcadia.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation.
L'Estrange.

BRA'VINGLY.* adv. [from brave.] In a defying or insulting manner.

Bravingly, in your epistle to Sir Edward Hobby, — you end thus.
Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 49.

BRA'VO. n. s. [bravo, Ital.] A man who murders for hire.

For boldness, like the bravoes and banditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services.
Govern. of the Tongue.

No bravoes here profess the bloody trade,
Nor is the church the murderer's refuge made.
Gay, Trivia.

BRAVU'RA. n. s. [Ital.] A word of modern application, in this country, to such songs as require or occasion great vocal ability in the singer.

To BRAWL.† v. n. [brouiller, or brauler, Fr. or bragal, Welsh, to cry out.]

1. To quarrel noisily and indecently.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shaks.

How now, Sir John! what, are you brawling here?
Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquatious, brawling, ever in the wrong.
Dryden, Fab.

Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.

2. To speak loud and indecently.

His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one power against the French,
And one against Glendower.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

3. To make a noise. This is little used, Dr. Johnson says: but both the poets cited use it beautifully.

As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood.
Shakspeare.

Up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling brook
And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan.
Thomson, Winter, 69.

To BRAWL.* v. a.

1. To drive away by noise.

Your deep wit ——
Reason'd not brawl'd her [Truth] thence, and woo'd her hither. Verses prefixed to Digby on Souls and Bodies.

2. Figuratively, to beat down.

By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city.
Shakspeare, K. John.

BRAWL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Quarrel; noise; scurrility.
He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but brawls; and therefore wisheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches, all these strifes may be decided. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Preface.
Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.
That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.

2. A dance. See BRANSLE.
Thence did Venus learn to lead
The Idalian brawls, and so to tread
As if the wind, not she, did walk.
B. Jonson, Masques.
His usual songs are certain catches and roundelays he [the nightingale] hath, much after the manner of the French braules; you would take him verily to be a monsieur of Paris straight, if you heard but his preludiums; for then indeed is he set on a merry pin.
Partheneia Sacra, (1633.) p. 139.
My grave lord-keeper led the brawls:
The seal and maces danc'd before him.
Gray, Long Story, v. 11.

3. An old word for a brat, or child, from its brawling or making a noise.
Now mot ich soutere hys son setten to schole,
And a beggeres brol on the book lerne.
P. Plowman's Crede, 1553. sign. D. 1.

BRA'WLER.† n. s. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a quarrelsome, noisy fellow.
Not a brawler, not covetous. 1 Tim. iii. 3.
To be no brawler, but gentle. Tit. iii. 2.
An advocate may incur the censure of the court, for being a brawler in court, on purpose to lengthen out the cause. Ayliffe.

BRA'WLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of quarrelling.
Concerning prayer, who is more ageynst it than you, which have clearlye changed the right use of it into a brawlynge in the temple and a bletynge in the streats, in a foren speeche and in the sight of men. Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, fol. 65.
She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear.
Sidney.

BRA'WLINGLY.* adv. [from brawling.] In a quarrelsome manner. Huloet.

BRAWN.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says; which is certainly not the case, as far as the fourth and fifth definitions are concerned; ban, Sax. a boar, pronounced bawr, and the pl. banen, bawrn, offering the explanation of boars-flesh; bawren or boaren flesh, and by transposition brawn. And hence secondarily, perhaps, the application of brawn to any muscular and fleshy appearance or substance.]

1. The fleshy or musculous part of the body.
The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.
But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantick force to rear.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

2. The arm, so called from its being musculous.
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn.
Shakspeare.
I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn.
Shakspeare.

3. Bulk; muscular strength.
The boisterous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawn without brain is thine. Dryden, Fab.

4. The flesh of a boar, prepared in a particular manner.
The best age for the boar is from two to five years, at which time it is best to geld him, or sell him for brawn. Mortimer.
Intending, as soon as it can be ready, to entertain you with a strange collar of brawn.
Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 578.

5. A boar. In the north of England a boar is still called a brawn.
Her grace sits mumping,
Like an old ape eating a brawn.
Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover, v. i.

To BRAWN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To render strong.
Custom and long continuance in slavery have so hardened and brawned their shoulders, [that] the yoke doth not wring them so much.
Fuller, Holy War, 1639. p. 178.

BRA'WNED.* adj. [from brawn; in our old dictionaries, defined "well armed or legged," and "brawned like a boar."] Strong; brawny.
His rawbone arms, whose mighty brawned bowrs
Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were clene consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 41.

BRA'WNER. n. s. [from brawn.] A boar killed for the table.
At Christmas time be careful of your fame,
See the old tenant's table be the same;
Then if you would send up the brawner head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread. King.

BRA'WNINESS.† n. s. [from brawny.] Strength; hardness.
Stalled up and fed to such a brawniness, that neither the understanding nor the affection were capable of any impression.
Hammond, Serm. p. 651.
This brawniness and insensibility of mind, is the best armour against the common evils and accidents of life. Locke.

BRA'WNY.† adj. [from brawn.]

1. Musculous; fleshy; bulky; of great muscles and strength.
The brawny fool, who did his vigour boast,
In that presuming confidence was lost.
Dryden, Juv.
The native energy
Turns all into the substance of the tree,
Starves and destroys the fruit, is only made
For brawny bulk, and for a barren shade.
Dryden, Virg.

2. Figuratively, hard; unfeeling.
Those who have a hard and a brawny conscience, which hath no feeling in it.
Mede's Apostasy of the Latter Times, P. ii.

To BRAY.† v. a. [bpacan, Sax. braier, Fr.]

1. To pound, or grind small.
I'll burst him; I will bray
His bones as in a mortar. Chapman, Iliad.
Except you would bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war. Bacon.

2. To emit with sound; to give vent to. [Gr. βράχω.] Dr. Johnson has cited the passage of Milton for an example of the verb neuter; and omits this usage of the word as a verb active. But it is one of our oldest actives, and is supported by the best authority.
Not speaking, but, as a wilde bull, roaring and braying out wordes despitefull and venymous.
Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 100.
Blasphemous words, which she doth bray out of her poisonous entrails frought with dire decay.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 20.
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shaks. Hamlet.
Arms on armour clashing bray'd
Horrible discord. Milton, P. L. vi. 209.

To BRAY.† v. n. [broire, Fr. barrio, Lat.]

1. To make a noise as an ass.
Laugh, and they
Return it louder than an ass can bray. Dryd. Juv.
'Agad if he should hear the lion roar, he'd cudgel him into an ass, and to his primitive braying. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To make an offensive, harsh, or disagreeable noise. [Gr. βράχω.]
As the hart panteth [in the margin, brayeth] after the water-brooks. Psalm xlii. 1.
What shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?
Shakspeare.
Heard ye the din of battle bray?
Gray, The Bard.

BRAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Voice of an ass.

2. Harsh sound.
Boisterous untun'd drums,
And harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful bray.
Shakspeare.

BRAY.* n. s. [probably from brow; the upper part of a hill being, in some places, called both broo, and brae. Welsh, bre; Gael. brigh, from the Celt. briga, a mountain or high place.] Ground raised as a fortification; a bank of earth.
Order was given that bulwarks, brays, and walls, should be raised in his castles and strongholds on the sea-side.

Hazard his folk. Fairfax, Tasso, ix. 96.

BRA'YER.† n. s. [from bray.]

1. One that brays like an ass.
Hold! cry'd the queen; a cat-call each shall win;
Equal your merits, equal is your din!
But that this well-disputed game may end,
Sound forth my brayers! and the welkin rend.
Pope.

2. [With printers; from To bray or beat.] An instrument to temper the ink.

3. A brayer, [Fr. broyeur.] is a pounder or beater of things till they be made small. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

BRA'YING. n. s. [from bray.] Clamour; noise.
In a foughten field, where trumpets blow, the clarions sound, the guns thunder, the noise of the strokes, the clashing of armour, the clattering of harness, the braying of the horses, the groaning of men dying, and the gasping of the dead reacheth almost to heaven.
Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 33.
Angry, that none are frighted at their noises and loud brayings under their asses skins.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To BRAZE. v. a. [from brass.]

1. To solder with brass.

If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary, because that worm is first turned up, and bowed into the grooves of the spindle, and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut. Moxon.

2. To harden to impudence.

I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd to do it. Shaks. K. Lear.

If damned custom hath not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BRA'ZEN. adj. [from brass.]

1. Made of brass. It was anciently and properly written brasen.

Slew friends and foes, and in the smoke retir'd.
Dryden.

4. The violation of a law or contract.

That oath would sure contain them greatly, or the breach of it bring them to shorter vengeance.
Spenser, on Ireland.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit all right in a nation to govern? Bacon.

Breach of duty towards our neighbours still involves in it a breach of duty towards God.
South.

The laws of the gospel are the only standing rules of morality; and the penalties affixed by God to the breach of those laws, the only guards that can effectually restrain men within the true bounds of decency and virtue. Rogers.

5. The opening in a coast.

But th' heedful boatman strongly forth did stretch
His brawny arms, and all his body strain,
That th' utmost sandy breach they shortly fetch,
While the dread danger does behind remain.

A private man in Athens. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

3. To take breath; to rest.

He presently follow'd the victory so hot upon the Scots, that he suffered them not to breathe, or gather themselves together again.
Spenser, State of Ireland.
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,
Upon agreement. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Rest, that gives all men life, gave him his death,
And too much breathing put him out of breath.
Milton, Ep. on Hobson.
When France had breath'd, after intestine broils,
And peace and conquest crown'd her foreign toils.
Roscommon.

4. To pass as air.

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there be strangl'd ere my Romeo comes?
Shakspeare.

To BREATHE. v. a.

1. To inspire or inhale into one's own body, and eject or expire out of it.

They wish to live,
Their pains and poverty desire to bear,
To view the light of heav'n, and breathe the vital air. Dryden.
They here began to breathe a most delicious kind of æther, and saw all the fields about them covered with a kind of purple light.
Tatler, No. 81.

2. To inject by breathing: with into.

He breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit; whose motions, he expects, should own the dignity of its original.
Decay of Piety.
I would be young, be handsome, be belov'd,
Could I but breathe myself into Adrastus.
Dryden.

3. To expire; to eject by breathing: with out.

Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit. Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

BRE'ECHES.† n. s. [bpæc, Sax. from bracca, an old Gaulish word; so that Skinner imagines the name of the part covered with breeches, to be derived from that of the garment. In this sense it has no singular, Dr. Johnson says; and yet he has, in the preceding article, given it in the singular number, under the second definition. Mr. Horne Tooke inclines to the Sax. bpŷce, because, he says, "breeches cover those parts where the body is broken into two parts." But, from this ludicrous refinement of etymology, I pass on to direct the reader to the Celtick and Gothick languages; brek, old Goth. the knee, brok, the covering or breeches; brag, Celt. whence the old Fr. bragues, and then broéches; Sax. bpec, whence also breeks, still a common word for breeches in the north of England; and sometimes found in our writings.]
1. The garment worn by men over the lower part of the body.
Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, and a pair of old breeches, thrice turned. Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

A poor physician's daughter. Shaks. All's Well.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I hope to see it a piece of none of the meanest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature. Glanville, Scepsis, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errours, must the less commit.
Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide
Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride.
Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits? Milton, S. A.

BREESE. n. s. [bpiora, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly.

Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope.

2. Full of gales.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn.
Gray, Elegy, st. 5.

BRE'HON.† n. s. [An Irish word, from breath, judgement. The word was once in use in Scotland also. See Jamieson's Dict. In the example, from Spenser, given by Dr. Johnson, a curious errour occurs in all the editions of the dictionary, which presents a specimen of that pleasant mode of blundering, so often attributed to the Irish; though Spenser does not warrant it, and therefore Spenser is now vindicated. Dr. Johnson's reading is, "the judge will compound between the murderer and the party murdered!"]

In the case of murder, the brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and friends of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriach.
Spenser on Ireland.

BREME.† adj. [from bpemman, Sax. to rage or fume, often written brim and bryme in our old language. Brim or fierce, ferox, Prompt. Parv. Su.-Goth. brumma, to rage.] Cruel; sharp; severe. Not used.

Thistles thicke,
And breris brimme for to pricke.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 1836.

And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deemen the spring come at once:
But eft, when you count, you freed from fear,
Comes the breme winter, with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furrows.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Baleful shrieks of ghosts are heard most brim.
Sackville's Induction, Mir. for Mag.

To BREN.* v. a. [Iceland. brenn, to burn; Goth. brinnan; Sax. brennan. This verb, instead of burn, is usual in our old authors. It continued in use till the reign of Elizabeth.] To burn. Obsolete.

Closely the wicked flame his bowels brent.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 16.

BRENT.† part. adj. [from bren.] This word is given by Dr. Johnson, merely as an adjective, without any notice of the verb, which formerly both as an active and neuter verb was common.] Burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be brent than drent?
Spenser, F. Q.

BRENT, or BRANT.* adj. [Su.-Goth. bryn, the top of a hill.] Steep; high. A brent brow is yet distinguished in some places, as a high hill; in the north, it is brant or brunt; "as brant as the side of a house. Ray.

The grapes grow on the brant rocks so wonderfully, that ye will marvell how men dare to climb up to them. Ascham, Lett. to Raven.

BREST. n. s. [in architecture.] That member of a column, called also the torus, or tore.

BREST Summers. The pieces in the outward parts of any timber building, and in the middle floors, into which the girders are framed. Harris.

BRET. n. s. A fish of the turbot kind, also burt or brut. Dict.

BRE'TFUL.* adj. [Cockeram gives this word, and defines it topfull; but says, that then (1622) it was obsolete. The etymology is uncertain; but, in Gloucestershire, the breeds of a hat are said to mean the brims of a hat, Grose's Prov. Gloss. This may serve perhaps to confirm the meaning, in our old poets, of brimful, which this obsolete word exhibits.] Brimful.

His wallet lay before him in his lappe,
Bretful of pardons come from Rome all hote.
Chaucer, Prol. C. T. 689.

A frere on a bench —
With a face so fat, as a full bleddere,
Blowen bretful of breath.
P. Plowman's Crede, (1554,) sign. B. i. b.

BRE'THREN.† n. s. [the plural of brother. Goth. brothrahans.] See BROTHER.

All these sects are brethren to each other in faction, ignorance, iniquity, perverseness, pride.
Swift.

*BREVE.† n. s. [in musick.] A note or character of time, equivalent to four minims.

BREVE.* n. s. [Lat. breve; whence the Icelandick bref, a diploma; the Germ.

and Dutch brief, a letter; Sax. bpave; and our own word brief, now used instead of breve, which however is found in good authors. Originally, "breve nihil aliud erat quàm rescriptum quoddam principis, quo ordinario judici mandabat, ut de querelâ ad eum delatâ jus diceret brevitèr, ita ut ampliùs super eâ querelâ rex non molestetur." Cragii Jus Feudale, lib. ii. tit. xvii.] An official writing; a letter of state. In the common law, a writ or brief; in the civil, a short note or minute.

The breve rather than the bull should have larger dispensation.

Ld. Herbert's Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 227.

Neither the popes themselves, nor those of the court, the secretaries and dataries, which pen their bulls and breves, have any use or exercise in Holy Scripture. Bp. Bedell's Letters, &c. p. 356.

*BRE'VET. n. s. [Fr. from the low Lat. brevetum, of breve, short.] A military phrase of modern times. For Cotgrave renders brevet "a brief, note, breviate, little writing, short declaration, ticket, or bill of one's hand." But brevet now means appointment in the army, and rank above the specifick appointment for which pay is received; as a lieutenant-colonel, being made colonel by brevet, enjoys the pay only of the former, but the honour and privileges of the latter, station. A brevet is a warrant, without seal.

BRE'VIARY.† n. s. [breviaire, Fr. breviarium, Lat.]

1. An abridgement; epitome; a compendium.

Cresconius, an African bishop, has given us an abridgement or breviary thereof. Ayliffe.

Some few naked breviaries of their wars and leagues. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 43.

Peter Comestor's Historia Scholastica, a sort of breviary of the Old and New Testament.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 108.

2. The book containing the daily service of the church of Rome, as contradistinguished from the missal.

The sermon of the martyrs, which is found among the homilies of St. Augustine and Leo, and in the Roman breviary is appointed to be read at the common festival days of many martyrs.

Abp. Usher's Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 333.

If you say they were not saved, then your Roman martyrology, all your missals and breviaries are manifestly false. Bp. Barlow's Rem. p. 460.

BRE'VIATE.† n. s. [from brevis, brevio, Lat.]

1. A short compendium.

He shall less need the help of breviates, or historical rhapsodies.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

It is obvious to the shallowest discourser, that the whole counsel of God, as far as it is incumbent for man to know, is comprised in one breviate of evangelical truth. Decay of Piety.

2. A lawyer's brief.

First, he that led the cavalcade
Wore a sow-gelder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a levet,
As well-fee'd lawyer on his breviate.

Hudibras, P. ii. c. 2.

To BRE'VIATE.* v. a. [Lat. brevio.] To abbreviate, Sherwood.

Though they breviate the text, it is he that comments upon it.

Hewyt, Funer. Serm. 1658, p. 92.

BRE'VIATURE. n. s. [from brevio, Lat.] An abbreviation.

BRE'VIER. n. s. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary; as,

Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,
Live well; how long or short, permit to Heav'n.

Milton.

BRE'VITY.† n. s. [brievitas, Lat. brieveté, Fr.] Conciseness; shortness; contraction into few words.

Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions. Dryden.

To BREW.† v. a. [brouwen, Dutch; brawen, German; bpipan, Saxon; brugga, Goth. bruer, old Fr.]

1. To make liquours by mixing several ingredients.

We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices. Bacon.

Mercy guard me!
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver. Milton, Comus.

2. To put into preparation.

Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. To mingle.

Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely. Shaks. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Pope seems to use the word indeterminately.

Or brew fierce tempests on the watery main,
Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

5. To contrive; to plot.

I found it to be the most malicious and frantick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print. Wotton.

To BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakspeare.

BREW.† n. s. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.

Trial would be made of the like brew with potatoe roots, or burr roots, or the pith of artichokes, which are nourishing meats.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Above the northern nests of feather'd snows,
The brew of thunders, and the flaming forge
That forms the crooked lightning.

Young, Night Th. 9.

BRE'WAGE.† n. s. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.

Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.
—— With eggs, sir? ——
— Simple of itself: I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. Shaks. Merry Wives of Windsor.

After the malmsey, or some well-spiced brewage.

Milton, Areopagitica.

BRE'WER. n. s. [from brew.] A man whose profession it is to make beer.

When brewers marr their malt with water.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Men every day eat and drink, though I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid or Apollonius, that his baker, or brewer, or cook, has not conveyed poison into his meat or drink. Tillotson.

BRE'WERY.* n. s. [from brewer.] The place appropriated to brewing.

Over the bridge is a great porter-brewery.

Pennant.

I could not but be somewhat diverted by hearing Johnson talk in a pompous manner of his new office, and particularly of the concerns of the brewery, which it was at last resolved should be sold.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

BRE'WHOUSE. n. s. [from brew and house.] A house appropriated to brewing.

In our brewhouses, bakehouses, and kitchens, are made divers drinks, breads, and meats.

Bacon, Atlantis.

BRE'WING.* n. s. See To BREW, 4th sense. In naval language, the appearance of black tempestuous clouds, arising gradually from a particular part of the hemisphere, and indicating an approaching storm. Chambers.

BRE'WING. n. s. [from brew.] Quantity of liquor brewed at once.

A brewing of new beer, set by old beer, maketh it work again. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BRE'WIS.† n. s. [Sax. bpip, pl. bpipap, sops, or little pieces of meat.. In Yorkshire, breau is the term for such brewis. In Welsh, briw is a morsel. Huloet calls it "browesse made with bread or fat meat."] A piece of bread soaked in boiling fat pottage, made of salted meat. It seems anciently to have meant broth, with meat in it.

Clerks of the kitchen, yeomen of the horse, to have a soupe [sup] at their maister's broth and brewes. Harmar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 334.

He, going to their stately place, did find in every dish,
Fat beef and brewis, and great store of dainty fowl and fish. Warner's Albion's England.

Ye eating rascals,
Whose gods are beef and brewis!

Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

What an ocean of brewis shall I swim in.

Beaum. and Fl. Dioclesian.

BRI'AR. n. s. See BRIER.

BRIBE.† n. s. [Bribe, in French, originally signifies a piece of bread, and is applied to any piece taken from the rest; it is therefore likely, that a bribe originally signified, among us, a share of any thing unjustly got. This etymological description, given by Dr. Johnson, is not complete. Bribe appears to have formerly signified what is given to a beggar; and in old Fr. is sometimes written briba, "reste de pain d'un repas, morceau de telle chose que ce soit," Roquef. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Bribeur is both a beggar, and a greedy devourer, in old Fr. V. Cotgrave and Roquefort. Hence, from the latter acceptation, bribe is used by Chaucer for what is given to an extortioner, Canterb. T. ver. 6960, ed. Tyrwhitt. Brib is also a scrap or morsel in Welsh. In the writers of the middle age, a bribe given to a judge is called quota litis, and the receiver campi or cambi particeps; because the spoils of the field, i. e. the profits of the cause were thus shared with the giver. V. Chambers, in V. BRIBE. This obsolete meaning seems to have been assumed, in the time of James the First, by the lord keeper Williams; for he can only mean fees (which word, by the way, is also used for pittance) in his letter to the Duke of Buckingham, where he says, "my charge is exceeding great, my bribes are very little." See Cabala, or Mysteries of State, 1654, p. 85.] A reward given to pervert the judgement or corrupt the conduct.

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians.
Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

Nor less may Jupiter to gold ascribe,
When he had turn'd himself into a bribe. Waller.

If a man be covetous, profits or bribes may put him to the test. L'Estrange.

There's joy when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe.
Dryden.

To BRIBE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gain by bribes; to give bribes, rewards, or hire, to bad purposes.

The great, 'tis true, can still th' electing tribe,
The bard may supplicate, but cannot bribe.
Prologue to Good-natured Man.

2. It is seldom, and not properly, used in a good sense.

How pow'rful are chaste vows! the wind and tide
You brib'd to combat on the English side. Dryd.

BRI'BER.† n. s. [old Fr. bribeur. See BRIBE.] One that pays for corrupt practices.

He was an unconscionable briber and abettor of unjust causes.
Bp. Hall, Works, 1661. vol. ii. p. 327.

Affection is still a briber of the judgement; and it is hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest. South.

BRI'BERY. n. s. [from bribe.] The crime of taking or giving rewards for bad practices.

There was a law made by the Romans, against the bribery and extortion of the governours of provinces: before, says Cicero, the governours did bribe and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves; but now they bribe and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for judges, jurors, and magistrates. Bacon.

No bribery of courts, or cabals of factions, or advantages of fortune, can remove him from the solid foundations of honour and fidelity.
Dryden, Aurengz. Pref.

BRICK. n. s. [brick, Dutch; brique, Fr. according to Menage, from imbrex, Lat. whence brica.]

1. A mass of burnt clay, squared for the use of builders.

For whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as coals made of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They generally gain enough by the rubbish and bricks, which the present architects value much beyond those of a modern make, to defray the charges of their search. Addison.

But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
On passive paper, or on solid brick.
Pope, Dunciad.

2. A loaf shaped like a brick.

To BRICK.† v. a. [from the noun.] To lay with bricks; to place as a brick.

If I do not beat thee presently
Into a sound belief, as sense can give thee,
Brick me into that wall there for a chimney-piece.
Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

The sexton comes to know where he is to be laid, and whether his grave is to be plain or bricked. Swift.

BRI'CKBAT. n. s. [from brick and bat.] A piece of brick.

Earthern bottles, filled with hot water, do provoke in bed a sweat more daintily than brickbats hot. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BRI'CKBUILT.* part. adj. [from brick and build.] Built with bricks.

Yet, enter'd in the brick-built town, he try'd
The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide.
Dryden, Juv. Sat. 10.

BRI'CKCLAY. n. s. [from brick and clay.] Clay used for making brick.

I observed it in pits wrought for tile and brick-clay. Woodward on Fossils.

BRI'CKDUST. n. s. [from brick and dust.] Dust made by pounding bricks.

This ingenious author, being thus sharp set, got together a convenient quantity of brickdust, and disposed of it into several papers.
Spectator, No. 283.

BRI'CKEARTH. n. s. [from brick and earth.] Earth used in making bricks.

They grow very well both on the hazelly brick-earths, and on gravel. Mortimer.

BRICK-KILN. n. s. [from brick and kiln.] A kiln; a place to burn bricks.

Like the Israelites in the brick-kilns, they multiplied the more for their oppression.
Decay of Piety.

BRI'CKLAYER. n. s. [from brick and lay.] A man whose trade it is to build with bricks; a brick-mason.

The elder of them, being put to nurse,
And ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a bricklayer when he came to age.
Shakspeare.

If you had liv'd, sir,
Time enough to have been interpreter
To Babel's bricklayers, sure the tow'r had stood.
Donne.

BRI'CKLE.* adj. [Teut. brokel, from broken, to break. Formerly written brokle by us. See Huloet in BRITTLE, "brickle or brokle." Huloet and Barret explain bryckle as "soon broken, easy to be broken." In Cheshire, brichoe is brittle; and in the West of England brickle is still used for brittle.] Brittle; frail; apt to break.

The altar, on the which this image staid,
Was, O great pity! built of brickle clay.
Spenser, Ruins of Time.

The brickle and variable doctrine of John Calvin in his institutions. Stapleton's Fortress of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 24. b.

This man — of earthly matter maketh brickle vessels and graven images. Wisdom, xv. 13.

BRI'CKLENESS.* n. s. [from brickle.] Fragility; aptness to break. Barret.

BRI'CKMAKER. n. s. [from brick and make.] One whose trade it is to make bricks.

They are common in claypits; but the brick-makers pick them out of the clay. Woodward.

BRI'CKWORK.* n. s. [from brick and work.] Laying of bricks. Sherwood.

BRI'CKY.* adj. [old Fr. briqueux. See BRICKLE.] Full of bricks; fit for bricks. Cotgrave in V. Briqueux.

BRI'DAL.† n. s. [Sax. bṗýbal, signifying both the wedding, and the wedding feast; epulum nuptiale, nuptiæ. Lye, in V. Bṗýbal, edit. Manning. But Butler, in his English Grammar of 1634, says "A brideale [is] of bride and ale; the word signifying not the wedding, but the wedding feast, Ind. a. 2. Some have asserted, that the bridal is so denominated from the circumstance of the bride in our northern counties, selling ale on the wedding-day, for which she received handsome presents from her friends. The word bride-bush is attributed to the same custom, and is only another expression for bride-ale; a bush at the end of a stake being once the usual sign in country places for the alehouse. A divine of James the First's time has published "a bride-bush or wedding sermon; compendiously describing the duties of married persons," &c. 1st edit. 1617. A bride-wain, which in the north, means a bidden wedding, i. e. a wedding to which guests are invited, is attended with presents also to the bride.] The nuptial festival.

The bridale was fulfild with men sittynge at the mete. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxii.

I saw nuns and papists dance at a bridal.
Ascham, Lett. to Raven.

Looke! how the crowne, which Ariadne wore
Upon her ivory forehead that same day
That Theseus her unto his bridale bore.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 13.

Nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observance always,
As fits the bridal. Shakspeare, Othello.

A man that's bid to bride-ale, if he ha' cake
And drink enough, he need not vear his stake.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky,
Sweet dews shall weep thy fall to-night;
For thou must die. Herbert.

In death's dark bow'rs our bridals we will keep,
And his cold hand
Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep.
Dryden.

BRI'DAL.† adj. [from the substantive.] Belonging to a wedding; nuptial; connubial.

Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast,
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse.
Shakspeare.

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.
Shakspeare.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp.
Milton, P. L.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton, S. A.

When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,
Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above. Dryden.

With all the pomp of woe, and sorrow's pride,
Oh, early lost! oh, fitter to be led
In chearful splendour to the bridal bed! Walsh.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,
For her white virgins hymenæals sing.
Pope, El. to Abelard.

BRI'DALTY.* n. s. [from bridal.] Celebration of the nuptial feast.

At quintin he,
In honour of this bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRIDE.† n. s. [bṗýð, Saxon; brudur, in Runick, signifies a beautiful woman, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. bruth is perhaps the original; bruth, the daughter in law, St. Matt. x. 35. M. Goth. Vers. The Su. brud, a bride, is from this word.] A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to resound,
Ne let the same of any be envy'd;
So Orpheus did for his own bride.
Spenser, Epithal.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide
Th' important enterprize, and give the bride.
Dryden, Fab.
These are tributes due from pious brides,
From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife.
Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

To BRIDE.* v. a. To make a bride of; to marry.
I knew a man
Of eighty winters, this I told them, who
A lass of fourteen brided.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

BRI'DEBED.† n. s. [from bride and bed, Sax. bpiðbeð.] Marriage-bed,
Now until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray;
To the best bridebed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.
Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,
To the first bridebed of the world receive
A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave? Prior.

BRI'DEBUSH.* n. s. See BRIDAL.

BRI'DECAKE. n. s. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.
With the phant'sies of hey-troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad bride-cake
Round about the bride's stake.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.
The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured a handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow. Spectator, No. 597.

BRI'DECHAMBER.* [from bride and chamber. Sax. bpiðbupe, the bride-bower or chamber.] The nuptial chamber.
Can the children of the bride chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them?
St. Matt. ix. 15.

BRI'DEGROOM.† n. s. [from bride and groom, Dr. Johnson says. The Saxon word is bpiðzuma, the Teut. brautigam, and the Dutch bruydgom; the two latter of which Minsheu notices, and adds a very ancient German word for it, viz. brutigomo; the etymology of which he plausibly refers to the Germ. braut, a bride, and the Gr. γαμεω, to marry. Skinner, noticing the collateral words, which want the r in groom, contends, however, that bridegroom is manifestly the groom or servant of the bride, he being so called on the wedding-day. But the word means literally the bride's man, gumme being the old Gothick for a man; guma, the M. Gothick; whence the Germ. gomo, and the Sax. zuma, a man. Gom was so used in our own language. See GOM. Mr. Horne Tooke, as plausibly as Minsheu and Skinner, argues in support of an etymology which he offers, that groom is applied to the person by whom something is attended; and that notwithstanding the introduction of the letter r into it, for which, he says, he cannot account, he is persuaded that it is the past participle of the A. Sax. verb zýman, curare, regere, custodire, cavere, attendere. But he had not considered the Gothick word; or the remark of another etymologist, that the Lat. homo is perhaps only another form of gomo or guma; by which the omission of the r is at once accounted for. See Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 355. It is obvious, that our word yeoman, (the original of which Dr. Johnson has not rightly explained) is to be found in this northern etymology. Coles, in his dictionary, has bridgume for bridegroom.] A new married man.
As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage. Shakspeare.
Why, happy bridegroom!
Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed? Dryd.

BRI'DEMAID.† n. s. [from bride and maid.] She who attends upon the bride.
In came the bridemaids with a posset.
Sir J. Suckling, Song on a Wedding.
The bride [among the Anglo-Saxons] was led by a matron, who was called the bride's woman, followed by a company of young maidens, who were called the bride's maids.
Strutt, Manners and Customs of the Eng. i. 76.

BRI'DEMAN.† n. s. [from bride and man.] He who attends the bride and bridegroom at the nuptial ceremony; formerly called a bride-knight, and a bride-squire; as in Selden's Uxor Ebraica, and B. Jonson's Underwoods.
My virtuous maid, this day I'll be your brideman. Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.
The friends [of persons to be married] may be understood such as the ancients called paranymphs, or bridemen. Wheatley on the Common Prayer.

BRI'DESTAKE. n. s. [from bride and stake.] It seems to be a post set in the ground, to dance round, like a maypole.
Round about the bridestake.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRI'DEWELL. n. s. [The palace built by St. Bride's, or Bridget's well, was turned into a workhouse.] A house of correction.
He would contribute more to reformation than all the workhouses and Bridewells in Europe.
Spectator, No. 157.

BRIDGE.† n. s. [Su.-Goth. brygga; Sax. bpýcze, bpiczz; old Fr. brug, bruge, and brige; and brig is the common word, in the north of England, for a bridge. Ihre states the Su.-Goth. "bro, stratum aliquod," as the root of brygga.]
1. A building raised over water for the convenience of passage.
What need the bridge much broader than the flood? Shakspeare.
And proud Araxes, whom no bridge could bind.
Dryden.
2. The upper part of the nose.
The raising gently the bridge of the nose, doth prevent the deformity of a saddle nose.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
3. The supporter of the strings in stringed instruments of musick.

To BRIDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] Of this unusual word Dr. Johnson cites only the following example in the passage of Milton, whom a literary friend supposes to have coined this verb. But I find bridged in Sherwood's dictionary of 1632, with the explanation, "that hath a bridge over it."] To raise a bridge over any place.
Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,
From Susa, his Memnonian palace high,
Came to the sea; and over Hellespont,
Bridging his way, Europe with Asia join'd.
Milton, P. L. x. 310.

BRI'DGY.* adj. [from bridge.] Full of bridges. Sherwood.

BRI'DLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bridel, Sax. bpiðl.]
1. The headstall and reins by which a horse is restrained and governed.
They seiz'd at last
His courser's bridle and his feet embrac'd.
Dryden, Fab.
2. A restraint; a curb; a check.
The king resolved to put that place, which some men fancied to be a bridle upon the city, into the hands of such a man as he might rely upon. Clarendon.
A bright genius often betrays itself into many errours, without a continual bridle on the tongue.
Watts.

To BRI'DLE.† v. a. [Sax. bpiðlian.]
1. To restrain, or guide by a bridle.
I bridle in my struggling muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.
Addison.
2. To put a bridle on any thing.
The queen of beauty stopp'd her bridled doves;
Approv'd the little labour of the Loves. Prior.
3. To restrain; to govern.
The disposition of things is committed to them, whom law may at all times bridle, and superiour power controul. Hooker, § 9.
With a strong, and yet a gentle hand,
You bridle faction, and our hearts command.
Waller.

To BRI'DLE.† v. n. To hold up the head.
How the fool bridles! how she twitters at him!
Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

BRI'DLEHAND. n. s. [from bridle and hand.] The hand which holds the bridle in riding.
In the turning, one might perceive the bridlehand something gently stir; but, indeed, so gently, as it did rather distil virtue than use violence. Sidney, b. ii.
The heat of summer put his blood into a ferment, which affected his bridlehand with great pain. Wiseman's Surgery.

BRI'DLER.* n. s. [from bridle.] One who directs or restrains as by a bridle.
The prelates — boast themselves the only bridlers of schism.
Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i. ch. 7.
A goose-bridler; a nick-name for a lawyer.
Cotgrave, in V. Brydoye.

BRIEF. adj. [brevis, Lat. brief, Fr.]
1. Short; concise. It is now seldom used but of words.
A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious. Shaksp. Mids. N. Dr.
I will be mild and gentle in my words. —
— And brief, good mother, for I am in haste.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pretty, and effectual.
Shakspeare, Tam. of Shrew.
They nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
The brief stile is that which expresseth much in little. B. Jonson, Discoveries.
If I had quoted more words, I had quoted more profaneness; and therefore Mr. Congreve has reason to thank me for being brief.
Collier, View of the Stage.
2. Contracted; narrow.
The shrine of Venus, or straight pight Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature. Shaks. Cymbeline

BRIEF.† n. s. [Icelandick, bref, diploma; Dutch, brief. See BREVE.]

1. A writing of any kind.

There is a brief, how many sports are ripe: Make choice of which your highness will see first. Shakspeare.

The apostolical letters are of a twofold kind and difference, viz. some are called briefs, because they are comprised in a short and compendious way of writing. Ayliffe.

2. A short extract, or epitome.

But how you must begin this enterprize, I will your highness thus in brief advise. Spenser, F. Q.

I doubt not but I shall make it plain, as far as a sum or brief can make a cause plain. Bacon, Holy War.

The brief of this transaction is, these springs that arise here are impregnated with vitriol. Woodward on Fossils.

3. [In law.] A writ whereby a man is summoned to answer to any action; or it is any precept of the king in writing, issuing out of any court, whereby he commands any thing to be done. Cowel.

4. The writing given the pleaders, containing the case.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd, On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift.

The young fellow had a very good air, and seemed to hold his brief in his hand rather to help his action, than that he wanted notes for his further information. Tatler, No. 186.

5. Letters patent, giving licence to a charitable collection for any public or private loss.

6. [In musick.] A measure of quantity, which contains two strokes down in beating time, and as many up. Harris.

BRI'EFLY.† adv. [from brief.]

1. Concisely; in few words.

I will speak in that manner which the subject requires; that is, probably, and moderately, and briefly. Bacon.

The modest queen a while, with downcast eyes, Ponder'd the speech; then briefly thus replies. Dryden.

2. Quickly.

Ant. Go, put on thy defences.
Er. Briefly, sir. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BRI'EFNESS.† n. s. [from brief.] Conciseness; shortness.

They excel in grandity and gravity, in smoothness and propriety, in quickness and briefness. Camden.

As Quintilian saith, there is a briefness of the parts sometimes that makes the whole long. B. Jonson's Discoveries.

My lord, long wish'd for, welcome!
'Tis a sweet briefness; yet in that short word
All pleasures, which I may call mine, begin;
And may they long increase, before they find
A second period! Beaum. & Fl. Martial Maid.

BRI'ER. n. s. [bpæp, Sax.] A plant. The sweet and the wild sorts are both species of the rose.

What subtle hole is this,
Whose mouth is cover'd with rude growing briers?
Shakspeare.

Then thrice under a brier doth creep,
Which at both ends was rooted deep,
And over it three times doth leap;
Her magick much availing. Drayton's Nymph.

BRI'ERY.† adj. [from brier.] Rough; thorny; full of briers. Sherwood.

BRI'ERY.* n. s. [from brier; so we say a shrubbery.] A place where briers grow. Huloet.

BRIG, and possibly also BRIX, is derived from the Saxon, bpicz, a bridge; which, to this day, in the northern counties, is called a brigg, and not a bridge. See BRIDGE. Gibson's Camden.

BRIG.* n. s. [an abbreviation perhaps of brigantine, which see.] A light vessel with two masts.

BRIGA'DE.† n. s. [brigade, Fr. It is now generally pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Milton wrote it brigad in order to urge, perhaps, an accentuation opposite to that of the French on the second syllable. He was no friend to the French language. But, in his own time, and long before the publication of the Paradise Lost, brigade was so written, and also accented on the first syllable. The etymology perhaps may be traced to the Goth. brigd. See BRIGUE. But some deduce it from brigandine, armour, or, brigand, an ill-disciplined soldier.] A division of forces; a body of men, consisting of several squadrons of horse, or battalions of foot.

Can Lesley's regiment thus wheel about
The brigade of our clergy put to rout
Our bishops, deans, and doctors?
Rome for Canterbury, (1641,) p. 7.

Thither, wing'd with speed,
A numerous brigad hasten'd. Milton, P. L. i. 674.
With rapid wheels, or fronted brigads form'd.
Ibid. ii. 532.

Here the Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

To BRIGA'DE.* v. a. [old Fr. brigader, "to associate, to troop together," Cotgrave. That such a verb should escape especial notice in a Military Dictionary, is curious; but the reader will look for it in vain, at least in modern compilations of that kind.] To form into a brigade; to apportion a body of military forces.

BRIGA'DE Major. An officer appointed by the brigadier [or general] to assist him in the management and ordering of his brigade; and he there acts as a major does in an army. Harris.

BRI'GADIER General.† An officer who commands a brigade of horse or foot in an army; next in order below a major general.

The Austrians have no brigadiers, and the French have no major-generals. Ld. Chesterfield.

BRI'GAND. n. s. [brigand, Fr.] A robber; one that belongs to a band of robbers.

There might be a rout of such barbarous thievish brigands in some rocks; but it was a degeneration from the nature of man, a political creature. Bramhall against Hobbes.

BRI'GANDAGE.* n. s. [Fr. brigandage.] Theft; plunder.

It was not at all for the publick good, to suffer peasants and mechanicks to run up and down the woods and forests, armed; which not only brings them to neglect their proper trades and employments to the damage of the publick and their families, but in time inevitably draws them on to robbery and brigandage. Warburton.
Alliance of Ch. and State, (1st. ed.) p. 129.

BRI'GANDINE.† n. s.

1. A light vessel; such as has been formerly used by corsairs or pirates. [Old Fr. brigandin; "brigantin, sort de vaisseau léger," Roquefort.]

Like as a warlike brigandine, apply'd
To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore
The engines, which in them sad death do hide. Spenser.

2. A coat of mail. [old Fr. brigandine.]

Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jerem. xlvi. 4.

Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet
And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon, Vantbrace, and greves. Milton, S. A.

BRI'GANTINE.† n. s. [Fr. brigantin. See BRIGANDINE.] A light vessel.

In your brigantine you sail'd to see
The Adriatick wedded. Otway, Venice Preserved.

The consul obliged him to deliver up his fleet, and restore the ships, reserving only to himself two brigantines. Arbuthnot.

BRIGHT.† adj. [Goth. bairht; Sax. beopht, bpiht, splendid, clear. Some have thought the Welsh brith, painted, as the origin of our word. But see also Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 97. "brit, albus, &c."]

1. Shining; full of light.

Through a cloud
Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,
Dark, with excessive bright, thy skirts appear. Milton, P. L.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Sprung through the roof, and made the temple bright. Dryden.

2. Shining as a body reflecting light.

Bright brass, and brighter domes. Chapman.
Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright. Gay.
Bright as the sun her eyes the gazers strike. Pope.

3. Clear; transpicuous.

From the brightest wines
He turn'd abhorrent. Thomson.
While the bright Seine t'exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl. Fenton.

4. Clear; evident.

He must not proceed too swiftly, that he may with more ease, with brighter evidence, and with surer success, draw the learner on. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

5. Resplendent with charms.

Thy beauty appears,
In its graces and airs,
All bright as an angel new dropp'd from the sky. Parnel.

O Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight! Addison.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair,
Such Chloe is, and common as the air. Granville.
To-day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er engag'd a watchful spirit's care. Pope.
Thou more dreaded foe, bright beauty shine. Young.

6. Illuminated with science; sparkling with wit.

Generous, gay, and gallant nation,
Great in arms, and bright in art. Pope.
If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind. Pope.

7. Illustrious; glorious.

This is the worst, if not the only stain,
I' the brightest annals of a female reign. Cotton.

To BRI'GHTEN.† v. a. [from bright, Goth. bairtjan, to make manifest.]

1. To make bright; to make shine.

The purple morning rising with the year,
Salutes the spring, as her celestial eyes
Adorn the world, and brighten up the skies. Dryden.

2. To make luminous by light from without.

An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart, and brightens all my sorrow,
Like gleams of sunshine in a louring sky. Philips.

3. To make gay, or cheerful.

Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton, P. L.

This makes Jack brighten up the room wherever he enters, and changes the severity of the company into that gaiety and good humour, into which his conversation generally leads them. Tatler, No. 206.

4. To make illustrious.

The present queen would brighten her character if she would exert her authority to instil virtues into her people. Swift.

Yet time ennobles, or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine. Pope.

5. To make acute, or witty.

To BRI'GHTEN.† v. n. To grow bright; to clear up; as, the sky brightens.

But let a lord once own the happy lines;
How the stile brightens, how the sense refines. Pope.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength; to consider that she is to shine for ever in new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity; that she will still be adding virtue to virtue, and knowledge to knowledge; carries in it something wonderfully agreeable to that ambition which is natural to the mind of man. Addison, Spect. No. 111.

BRI'GHTBURNING.* adj. [from bright and burning.] Burning brightly or briskly.

What fool hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy?
Tit. Andr. iii. 1.

BRI'GHTEYED.* adj. [from bright and eye.] Having bright eyes.

Bright-ey'd science watches round.
Gray, Install. Ode.

BRI'GHTHAIRED.* adj. [from bright and hair.] Having hair of a bright colour.

Thee, bright-hair'd Vesta long of yore,
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton, Il Pens. ver. 23.

BRI'GHTHARNESSED.* adj. [from bright and harness.] Having bright armour. See HARNESS.

And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harness'd angels sit in order serviceable.
Milton, Ode on the Nativity.

BRI'GHTISH.* adj. [from bright.] Inclining to bright. Kersey.

BRI'GHTLY.† adv. [Sax. bpihtlice.] Splendidly; with lustre.

Safely I slept, till brightly dawning shone
The morn conspicuous on her golden throne.
Pope.

BRI'GHTNESS. n. s. [from bright.]

1. Lustre; splendour; glitter.

The blazing brightness of her beauty's beam,
And glorious light of her sun-shining face,
To tell, were as to strive against the stream.
Spenser, F. Q.

A sword, by long lying still, will contract a rust, which shall deface its brightness. South,

The moon put on her veil of light,
Mysterious veil of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade. Hudibras.

Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come?
Prior.

2. Acuteness.

The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgement, and the candour and generosity of his temper, distinguished him in an age of great politeness. Prior.

BRI'GHTSHINING.* part. adj. [from bright and shine.] Shining brightly.

The light of your brightshyning starre.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

In the midst of this bright-shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

BRIGO'SE.* adj. [from the old Fr. Germ. or low Lat. briga, contention. See BRIGUE.] Quarrelsome; contentious.

Which two words, as conscious that they were very brigose and severe, (if too generally taken, therefore,) he softens them in the next immediate words by an apology.
Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 324.

BRIGUE.* n. s. [Goth. brigd, Germ. briga, old Fr. briga, low Lat. briga. Cotgrave translates the Fr. word into "a canvas, a private suit, an underhand labouring for an office." In this softened sense both the verb and substantive are found in our modern language. In our old language, the substantive implies open and violent contention.] Strife; quarrel.

Ye knowen wel that mine adversaries han begonne this debat and brige by their outrage.
Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

The rise and decay of the papal power, the politicks of the court, the brigues of the cardinals, the tricks of the conclave. Ld. Chesterfield.

To BRIGUE.* v. a. [Fr. briguer.] To canvas; to solicit. See BRIGUE.

Though I think too justly of myself to believe I am qualified to enter into the former of these lists; you may conclude, if you please, that I am too proud to brigue for an admission into the latter. Hurd.

BRI'LLIANCY. n. s. [from brilliant.] Lustre; splendour.

BRI'LLIANT.† adj. [brillant, Fr. briller, old Fr. to glitter, from bril, a sparkle.] Shining; sparkling; splendid; full of lustre.

So have I seen in larder dark
Of veal a lucid loin,
Replete with many a brilliant spark,
As wise philosophers remark,
At once both stink and shine. Dorset.

BRI'LLIANT. n. s. A diamond of the finest cut, formed into angles, so as to refract the light, and shine more.

In deference to his virtues I forbear
To shew you what the rest in orders were;
This brilliant is so spotless and so bright,
He needs not foil, but shines by his own proper light. Dryden.

BRI'LLIANTLY.* adv. [from brilliant.] Splendidly.

One of these [banners] is most brilliantly displayed. Warton's Hist. Eng. Poetry, ii. 56.

BRI'LLIANTNESS. n. s. [from brilliant.] Splendour; lustre.

BRILLS. n. s. The hair on the eyelids of a horse. Dict.

BRIM.† n. s. [brim, Icelandick, bpimm, Sax.]

1. The edge of any thing.

His hat being in the form of a turban, daintily made, the locks of his hair came down about the brims of it. Bacon.

This cited place lies upon the very brim of another corruption. Milton, of Prelat. Episcopacy.

2. The upper edge of any vessel.

How my head in ointment swims!
How my cup o'erlooks her brims! Crashaw.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise,
Above the brims they force their fiery way.
Dryden, Æn.

Thus in a bason drop a shilling,
Then fill the vessel to the brim,
You shall observe, as you are filling,
The pond'rous metal seems to swim. Swift.

3. The top of any liquour.

The feet of the priests, that bare the ark, were dipped in the brim of the water. Joshua, iii. 15.

4. The bank of a fountain, river, or the sea; the shore.

As the bright sunne, what time his fiery teme
Towards the western brim begins to draw,
'Gins to abate the brightnesse of his beme.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 35.

It [the fountain] told me it was Cynthia's own,
Within whose cheerful brims
That curious nymph had oft been known
To bathe her snowy limbs.
Drayton, Quest. of Cynthia.

By dimpled brook and fountain-brim,
The wood-nymphs deck'd with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep.
Milton, Comus, ver. 119.

The sun, ———
With wheels yet hovering o'er the ocean-brim,
Shot parallel to the earth his dewy ray.
Milton, P. L. v. 140.

BRIM.* adj. [Sax. bpyme, conspicuous. The adjective breme, i. e. fierce, is often written by our old authors brim or bryme. See BREME.] Public; well-known. Obsolete.

That thou dost hold me in disdain,
Is brim abroad, and made a gibe to all that keep this plain. Warner, Albion's England.

To BRIM. v. a. [from the noun.] To fill to the top.

May thy brimmed waves, for this,
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand petty rills.
Milton, Comus, ver. 924.

This said, a double wreath Evander twin'd;
And poplars black and white his temples bind:
Then brims his ample bowl; with like design
The rest invoke the gods, with sprinkled wine.
Dryden.

To BRIM. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays
Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd
With dire intent. Philips.

To BRI'MFILL.* v. a. [from brim and fill.] To fill to the top.

By all thy brim-fill'd bowls of fierce desire.
Crashaw's Poems, p. 197.

BRI'MFUL. adj. [from brim and full.] Full to the top; overcharged.

Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling,
With seed of woes my heart brimful is charged.
Sydney.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends:
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe.
Shakspeare, J. Cæsar.

Her brimful eyes, that ready stood,
And only wanted will to weep a flood,
Releas'd their watery store. Dryden, Fables.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,
His eyes brimful of tears, then sighing cry'd,
Prithee, be careful of my son. Addison, Cato.

BRI'MFULNESS.† n. s. [from brimful.] Fulness to the top. It has been observed, by the learned author of a supplement to the first edition of this augmented dictionary, that brimfulness is not a substantive in the following example, but that brim "seems to be used as an adjective agreeing with fulness;" that is, from brim, the substantive.

The Scot, on his unfurnish'd kingdom,
Came pouring like a tide into a beach,
With ample and brimfulness of his force.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

BRI'MLESS.* adj. [from brim and less.] Without an edge or brim.

They [the Jews] wear little black brimless caps, as the Moors red.
L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 10.

BRI'MMER. n. s. [from brim.] A bowl full to the top.

When healths go round, and kindly brimmers flow,
Till the fresh garlands on their foreheads glow.
Dryden, Lucret. b. iii.

BRI'MMING. adj. [from brim.] Full to the brim.

And twice besides her beestings never fail,
To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden.

BRI'MSTONE. n. s. [corrupted from brin or brenstone, that is, fiery stone.] Sulphur. See SULPHUR.

From his infernal furnace, forth he threw
Huge flames that dimmed all the heavens' light,
Enroll'd in duskish smoke and brimstone blue.
Spenser, F. Q.

The vapour of the grotto del Cane is generally supposed to be sulphureous, though I can see no reason for such a supposition: I put a whole bundle of lighted brimstone matches to the smoke, they all went out in an instant. Addison on Italy.

BRI'MSTONY.† adj. [from brimstone.] Full of brimstone; containing sulphur; sulphureous.

The Ismaelite
King of Thogarma, and his habergions
Brimstony, blue, and fiery. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

BRI'NDED.† adj. [brin. Fr. a branch, according to Dr. Johnson, who defines the word streaked, or tabby. The Fr. brin, is indeed a little sprig, and generally any small substance. But it is hardly the etymology of brinded, which is only another form of brended, from the Sax. bpennan, to burn; and means a reddish brown colour, which, in the north of England, is often applied to cattle; as, a branded cow. See BROWN.] Of a brown colour, originally; thence of a varied colour; streaked.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

She tam'd the brinded lioness,
And spotted mountain pard. Milton, Comus.

My brinded heifer to the stake I lay,
Two thriving calves she suckles twice a-day.
Dryden.

BRI'NDLE. n. s. [from brinded.] The state of being brinded.

A natural brindle. Clarissa.

BRI'NDLED. adj. [from brindle.] Brinded; streaked.

The boar, my sisters! aim the fatal dart,
And strike the brindled monster to the heart.
Addison, Ovid.

BRINE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. But the word is the Sax. bpŷne, salt liquour, perhaps from bpŷm, the sea, which is the old Goth. brim.]

1. Water impregnated with salt.

The encreasing of the weight of water, will encrease its power of bearing; as we see brine, when it is salt enough, will bear an egg.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Dissolve sheep's dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine, in this liquor steep your corn. Mortimer.

2. The sea, as it is salt.

All, but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel,
Then all afire with me. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The air was calm, and, on the level brine,
Sleek Panope, with all her sisters, play'd.
Milton, Lycidas.

As when two adverse winds
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

What a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
Shakspeare.

To BRINE.* v. a.

1. In husbandry, to brine corn is an operation performed on the wheat seed, by a liquour prepared for the purpose, to prevent the smut. Chambers.
2. To brine meat is to cover it with brine.

BRI'NEPIT. n. s. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile. Shakspeare, Tempest.

To BRING.† v. a. [Goth. briggan, bringan, bpinzan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought; brahta, Goth. bpohc, Sax. "Bring usu satis antiquo notavit ferre, afferre, &c." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 96.]

1. To fetch from another place; distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shaks.

And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. 1 Kings, xvii. 11.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey, or carry to another place; the preceding distinction not being always observed, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. This sense, however, is rarely used.

Thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac. And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?
Genesis, xxiv. 4, 5.

"Must I needs bring thy son again, &c." His doubt was, whether, if a woman would not come with him into Canaan, he should be bound to go again a second time, and carry Isaac to her.
Bp. Patrick on Genesis.

The steward demanded, whether, if he could not persuade the person, whom Isaac was to marry, to come and dwell with Isaac in Canaan, he might carry him to her, into that country which Abraham had forsaken. Pyle on Genesis.

3. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring.
Dryden.

4. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice you may. Bacon.

5. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator, No. 83.

6. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol.
Newton, Opticks.

7. To put into any particular state or circumstances, to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

8. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge, by insensible degrees. Locke.

9. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

10. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them.
Locke.

11. To attend; to accompany.

Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

12. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison, Freeholder.

13. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shaks.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth
Light out of darkness! Milton, P. L.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives.
Milton, S. A.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand,
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land!
Dryden, Æneid.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice; and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

14. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light.
Job, xxxviii. 11.

15. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you
And needs no other suitor, but his liking,
To bring you in again. Shakspeare, Othello.

16. To bring in. To reduce.
Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

17. To bring in. To afford gain.
The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. South.
Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

18. To bring in. To introduce.
Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.
There is but one God, who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Stilling fleet.
The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.
Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.
Quotations are best brought in, to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

19. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.
I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.
Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.
The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

20. To bring on. To engage in action.
If there be any that would reign and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

21. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.
The fountains of the great deep being broken open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet, Theory.
Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour
Friendliest to sleep and silence. Milton, P. L. v. 607.
The great question, which, in all ages, has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

22. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.
This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions, of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Engl. man.
The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

23. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.
If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
Which he could bring out, where he had,
And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.
These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,
Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.
Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbuthnot.

To bring to. In naval language, to check the course of a ship, when she is advancing, by arranging the sails in such a manner, as that they shall counteract each other, and prevent her either from retreating or moving forward. In this situation, the ship is said to lie-by, or to lie-to. Chambers.

24. To bring to pass. To effect.
The thing is established by God, and God will bring it to pass. Genesis, xli. 32.
[She] in time's long and dark prospective glass,
Foresaw what future days should bring to pass.
Milton, Vac. Exerc. v. 72.

25. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.
That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser on Ireland.
To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon, Holy War.

26. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.
The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney, b. i.
He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.
They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison, Guardian.

27. To baing up. To introduce to general practice.
Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator, No. 119.

28. To bring up. To cause to advance.
Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find,
They've not prepar'd for us. Shaks. Coriol.

29. To bring up. To bring back.
I will go down with thee into Egypt, and will also bring thee up again. Genesis, xlvi. 4.

30. To bring up. To introduce; to occasion.
And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land; even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord. Numbers, xiv. 36, 37.

31. Bring retains in all its senses the idea of an agent, or cause producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something: for it is oft said, that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without.

BRI'NGER.† n. s. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office: and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shaksp.
Best you see safe the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakspeare.
The good king adores the books: feasts the bringers, who after fall to the business, and translated it out of the Hebrew into the Greek. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. Epistle to the Reader.

BRI'NGER IN.* n. s. The person who introduces any thing.
Lucifer is a bringer in of light; and therefore the harbinger of the day. Sandys, Christ's Passion, Notes, p. 79.

BRI'NISH†. adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.
Nero would be tainted with remorse
To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears. Shakspeare.
For now I stand, as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him. Shakspeare, Titus Andron.
Which saltness, [of the sea,] Aristotle says, is caused by the sun's exhaling the thinner and fresher parts thereout, leaving behind what is thick and brinish. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 188.

BRI'NISHNESS. n. s. [from brinish.] Saltness; tendency to saltness.

BRINK. n. s. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.
Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden.
We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.
So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRI'NY, adj. [from brine.] Salt.
He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide;
Or his, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.
Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewel,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison on Italy.
A muriatick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BRI'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRISK.† adj. [brusque, French, braska, Su. and Goth. to carry it highly or pertly.]
1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly: applied to men.

Or else be
Kind and brisk, and gay like me. Denham.
A creeping young fellow, that had committed matrimony with a brisk gamesome lass, was so altered in a few days, that he was liker a skeleton than a living man. L'Estrange.
Why shou'd all honour then be ta'en
From lower parts, to load the brain;
When other limbs we plainly see,
Each in his way, as brisk as he? Prior.

2. Powerful; spirituous.
Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine. Denham.

Under ground, the rude Riphæan race
Mimick brisk cyder, with the brake's product wild,
Sloes pounded, hips, and servis' harshest juice.
Philips.

It must needs be some exteriour cause, and the brisk acting of some objects without me, whose efficacy I cannot resist. Locke.

3. Vivid; bright. This is not used.

Objects appeared much darker, because my instrument was overcharged; had it magnified thirty or twenty-five times, it had made the object appear more brisk and pleasant. Newton.

To BRISK.* v. a. To make brisk.

Such a vast difference there is in the arteries newly brisked in the fountain, and that in the veins lowered and impoverished with its journey.
Smith on Old Age, p. 109.

To BRISK UP. v. n. To come up briskly.

To BRISK UP.* v. a. To enliven; to make sprightly.

I will suppose that these things are lawful, and sometimes useful and necessary for the relief of our natures; for the brisking up our spirits; and rendering us more fit for conversation and business. Killingbeck's Sermons, p. 223.

BRI'SKET.† n. s. [brichet, Fr. or rather bryced, Welsh.] The breast of an animal.

But the most distinguishing part of his character seems to me, to be his briskness, his jollity, and his good humour. Dryden.

BRI'STLE. n. s. [byrtl, Sax.] The stiff hair of swine.

I will not open my lipe so wide as a bristle may enter. Shakspeare.

He is covered with hair, and not as the boar, with bristles, which probably spend more upon the same matter, which, in other creatures, makes the horns; for bristles seem to be nothing else but a horn split into a multitude of little ones. Grew.

Two boars whom love to battle draws,
With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,
Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound. Dryden.

To BRI'STLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To erect in bristles.

Now for the bare-pickt bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace. Shaksp.

Which makes him plume himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity. Shaksp.

To BRI'STLE. v. n. To stand erect as bristles.

Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear,
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,
With chatt'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright;
Yet arm'd with inborn worth. Dryden, Fab.

Thy hair so bristles with unmanly fears,
As fields of corn that rise in bearded ears.
Dryden, Perseus.

BRI'TISH.* adj. [Sax. Bryttiſc.]

1. What relates to THE LAND WE LIVE IN, "our not-fearing Britain," as Shakspeare describes this country.

Imploring Divine assistance, that it may redound to his glory, and the good of the British nation, I now begin.
Milton, Hist. of England, B. i.

The British cannon formidably roars;
While starting from his oozy bed,
The asserted ocean rears his reverend head;
To view and recognize his ancient lord again;
And, with a willing hand, restores
The fasces of the main.
Dryden, Threnod. Augustalis.

2. Applied to language, it means the Welsh.

What I here offer to the publick, is an explication of the antient British tongue, once the common language of Britain, and still preserved in the principality of Wales.
Richards's Brit. Dict. Preface.

BRI'TON.* n. s. [Sax. Bryton.] A native of Britain.

This was my master,
A very valiant Briton, and a good.
Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BRI'TON.* adj. What relates to Britain; British.

So shall the Briton blood their crown again reclaim. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 48.

I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

BRI'TTLE.† adj. [Sax. brytan, Su. and Goth. bryta, to break. Written also brickle. See BRICKLE. And by Chaucer brotel.] Fragile; apt to break; not tough.

The wood of vines is very durable; though no tree hath the twigs, while they are green, so brittle, yet the wood dried is extremely tough.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

From earth all came, to earth must all return,
Frail as the cord, and brittle as the urn. Prior.

Of airy pomp, and fleeting joys,
What does the busy world conclude at best,
But brittle goods, that break like glass?
Granville.

If the stone is brittle, it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel. Arbuthnot.

BRI'TTLELY.* adv. [from brittle.] In a fragile state or manner. Sherwood.

On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;
These morsels stay'd their stomachs. Dryden.

2. An opener, or utterer of any thing; the first author.

There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the first broacher of an heretical opinion. L'Estrange.

Numerous parties denominate themselves, not from the grand Author and Finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

This opinion is commonly, but falsely, ascribed to Aristotle, not as its first broacher, but as its ablest patron. Cheyne.

BROAD.† adj. [Celt. brayd, vast; Goth. braid; Sax. bpaþ; Su. bred, broad.]

1. Wide; extended in breadth; distinguished from length; not narrow.

The weeds that his broad spreading leaves did shelter
Are pull'd up root and all. Shakspeare.

The top may be justly said to grow broader, as the bottom narrower. Temple.

Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave. Dryden.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below,
The bottom was full twenty fathoms broad. Dryden.

He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burst the lightnings, deep the thunders roll. Pope.

2. Large.

To keep him at a distance from falsehood and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falsehood; this is the fittest preparation of a child for wisdom. Locke.

3. Clear; open; not sheltered, not affording concealment.

In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the wooers us before. Chapman, Odyssey.

It no longer seeks the shelter of night and darkness, but appears in the broadest light. Decay of Piety.

If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad sunshine. Locke.

4. Gross; coarse.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;
By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,
A name so broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntsmen with a shout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare. Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obscenity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteemed, it cannot be denied but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;
Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakspeare.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace. Shakspeare.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves: for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Estrange.

BRO'ADAXE.* n. s. [Sax. bpaþ-æx.] Formerly a military weapon.

BRO'ADLY.† adv. [from broad.] In a broad manner.

Little was it then imagined, that the time should come when the world, awakened by the cries of a friar, should look so broadly about, and search so narrowly all the sleights and hid corners of the papacy. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BRO'ADNESS.† n. s. [Sax. bpaðneꝛꝛe.]

1. Breadth; extent from side to side.

London — cannot be discerned by the fairness of the ways, though a little perhaps by the broadness of them, from a village. Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Verge.

The jollity of the company made him overlook the broadness and danger of the way. South, Serm. viii. 171.

2. Coarseness; fulsomeness.

I have used the cleanest metaphor I could find, to palliate the broadness of the meaning. Dryden.

BROAD-PIECE.* n. s. [from broad and piece.] The denomination of one of our gold coins.

When the twenty shilling pieces, commonly called guineas, were coined in the reigns of Charles II., then the unites of the Commonwealth, Charles I., and James I., received the name of broads or broad-pieces. Snelling's View of the Gold Coin, p. 28.

BROAD-SEAL.* n. s. [from broad and seal.] The great or broad seal of England.

Is not this to deny the king's broad-seal? Sheldon's Miracles of Antichrist, p. 61.

Under whose [the chancellor's] hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king, corroborated or strengthened with the broad-seal; without which seal all such instruments, by law, are of no force. Jus. Sigilli, p. 3.

To BROADSEAL.* v. a. To stamp or sanction as it were with the broad seal.

Thy presence broad-seals our delights for pure;
What's done in Cynthia's sight, is done secure. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

BRO'ADSHOULDERED. adj. [from broad and shoulder.] Having a large space between the shoulders.

Big-bon'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
Broadshoulder'd, and his arms were round and long. Dryden.

I am a tall, broadshoulder'd, impudent, black fellow; and, as I thought, every way qualified for a rich widow. Spectator.

BRO'ADSIDE.† n. s. [from broad and side.]

1. The side of a ship, distinct from the head or stern.

From vaster hopes than this he seem'd to fall,
That durst attempt the British admiral:
From her broadsides a ruder flame is thrown,
Than from the fiery chariot of the sun. Waller.

2. The volley of shot fired at once from the side of a ship.

He used in his prayers to send the king, the ministers of state, the officers of the army, with all the soldiers and the episcopal clergy, all broadside to hell, but particularly the general himself. Swift, Memoirs of Capt. Creighton.

She has given you a broadside, captain. Southern, Oroonoko.

Forget her pray'rs, or miss a masquerade. Pope.

BROCA'DED. adj. [from brocade.]

1. Drest in brocade.
2. Woven in the manner of a brocade.

Should you the rich brocaded suit unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

BRO'CAGE.† n. s. [from broke. Written frequently brokage.]

1. The gain gotten by promoting base bargains.

Yet sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unseemly shifts,
And borrow base, and some good ladies gifts.
Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

It served well Pandar's purpose for the bolstering of his bawdy brocage.
Epist. prefix. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

2. The hire given for any unlawful office.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Many in this city grow exceeding wealthy by unlawful means; usury, brokage, bribery. Dr. J. White's Sermons, (1615,) p. 59.

When 'tis said that merchandize is the Jews' general profession in Barbary, it is not to exclude their darling brokage and usury, in which they are very serviceable both to Christians and Moors. L. Addison's State of the Jews, p. 10.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit,
From brocage is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it.
B. Jonson.

Unless we do so, our charity is mercenary, and our friendships are direct merchandize, and our gifts are brokage. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. 8.

4. The transaction of business for other men.

So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less, whether he be landholder, for his goods, or labourer, for his hire, or merchant, for his brocage. Locke.

BRO'CCOLI. n. s. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.

Content with little, I can piddle here,
On broccoli and mutton round the year;
But ancient friends, though poor or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

To BROCHE. v. a. See To BROACH.

So Geoffry of Boulloigne, at one draught of his bow, shooting against David's tower in Jerusalem, broched three feetless birds. Camden's Remains.

BROCK.† n. s. [broc, Saxon; broc, Irish; broch, Welsh and Cornish.] A badger.

That a brock or badger hath the legs on one side shorter than of the other, though an opinion perhaps not very ancient, is yet very general. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Or with pretence of chasing thence the brock,
Send in a cur to worry the whole flock.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

BRO'CKET.† n. s. A red deer two years old.

What with us is termed a brocket, or a pricket, the whole space of the second year of his age. Knatchbull's Annot. Tr. 1693, p. 9.

To BRO'GGLE.* v. n. To fish for eels. This is, in some places, the word for sniggle, better known to anglers in general. See To SNIGGLE.

BROGUE.† n. s. [brog, Irish, and brog, Gael. a shoe.]

1. A kind of a shoe.

I thought he slept; and put
My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud. Shakspeare.

Sometimes it is given out, that we must either take these halfpence or eat our brogues. Swift.

2. A cant word for a corrupt dialect, or manner of pronunciation.

His brogue will detect mine. Farquhar.

What we call the Irish brogue, is no sooner discovered, than it makes the deliverer, in the last degree, ridiculous and despised; and from such a mouth, an Englishman expects nothing but bulls, blunders, and follies! Swift, on Barb. Denom. in Ireland.

BROGUE-MAKER.* n. s. [from brogue and make.] A maker of brogues; a shoemaker.

I supposed that the husband made brogues as the wife made an apron, till next day it was told me, that a brogue-maker was a trade, and that a pair would cost half a crown. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

BRO'DEKIN.* n. s. [Fr. brodequin, Dutch, broseken.] A buskin, or half-boot.

It [K. Charles the Second's apparel] was strait Spanish breeches; instead of a doublet, a long vest down to the midleg; and above that a loose coat, after the Muscovite or Polish way; the sword girt over the vest; and, instead of shoes and stockings, a pair of buskins or brodekins. Echard, Hist. of Eng. ii. 836.

To BROID.* v. a. [The old word for braid or bread, i. e. to plait; which Barret gives in his old dictionary, and which is found in our early translations of the New Testament; and had long before been used by Chaucer. Our last authorized translation of the New Testament gives broidered, not accurately, for broided; but in the margin, plaited.] To braid or weave together.

Her yellow hair was broided in a tresse.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Likewise also the women, that they array themselves in comely apparel, with shamefacedness and modesty, not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly apparel. 1 Tim. ii. 9. (Transl. of 1578.)

To BRO'IDER.† v. a. [brodir, Fr.] To adorn with figures of needle work.

A robe, and a broider'd coat, and a girdle. Exodus, xxviii. 4.

Infant Albion lay
In mantles broider'd o'er with gorgeous pride.
Tickell.

BRO'IDERER.* n. s. [from broider; sometimes written broderer; as broder is for broider. V. Barret and Sherwood. So the Fr. bordeur for brodeur. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.] An embroiderer. Huloet.

BRO'IDERY. n. s. [from broider.] Embroidery; flower-work; additional ornaments wrought upon cloth.

The golden broidery tender Milkah wove,
The breast to Kenna sacred, and to love,
Lie rent and mangled. Tickell.

BROIL. n. s. [brouiller, Fr.] A tumult; a quarrel.

Say to the king thy knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it. Shakspeare.

He has sent the sword both of civil broils, and publick war, amongst us. Wake.

Rude were their revels, and obscene their joys,
The broils of drunkards, and the lust of boys.
Granville.

To BROIL.† v. a. [bruler, Fr.] To dress or cook by laying on the coals, or before the fire.

They gave him a piece of a broiled fish. Luke, xxiv. 42.

Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil,
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil.
Dryden.

To BROIL. v. n. To be in the heat.

Where have you been broiling?—
——Among the croud i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more. Shakspeare.

Long ere now all the planets and comets had been broiling in the sun, had the world lasted from all eternity. Cheyne.

BRO'ILER.* n. s.

1. One who would excite a broil or quarrel.

What doth he but turn broiler and boutefeu, make new libels against the church, &c. Hammond, Serm. p. 544.

2. That which dresses by cookery; "a broiler, gril, Fr." Sherwood.

To BROKE.† v. n. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Skinner seems inclined to derive it from To break, because broken men turn factors or brokers. Casaubon from πραττειν. Skinner thinks, again, that it may be contracted from procurer. Mr. Lye more probably deduces it from bpucan, Sax. to be busy; to discharge an office; whence bpeac, St. Luke, i. 8.] To transact business for others, or by others. It is used, generally, in reproach, Dr. Johnson says; he should have said, occasionally.

He does, indeed;
And brokes with all that can, in such a suit,
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid.
Shakspeare, All's Well.

The gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men should wait upon others necessity; broke by servants and instruments to draw them on. Bacon.

Mr. Egerton and he [Dr. Field] being acquainted, and Mr. Egerton's mind being troubled with the ill success of this business, ventured it to this divine, who, contrary to his profession, took upon him to broke for him in such a manner, as was never precedented by any. He made Egerton to acknowledge a recognizance of 1000l. with a defeasance, &c.
Proceedings in the H. of Com. against Ld. Bacon.

BRO'KING. part. adj. Practised by brokers.

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt.
Shakspeare.

BRO'KEN.† part. pass. of break. [Sax. bpocen.]

Preserve men's wits from being broken with the very bent of so long attention. Hooker.

BRO'KEN-BELLIED.* adj. [from broken and belly.] Having a ruptured belly. Used also figuratively.

Such is our broken-bellied age, that this astutia is turned into versutia; and we term those most astute which are most versute.
Sir M. Sandys, Essays, p. 168.

BRO'KEN MEAT. Fragments; meat that has been cut.

Get three or four chair-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay at small charges; only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

BRO'KENHEARTED. adj. [from broken and heart.] Having the spirits crushed by grief or fear.

He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted.
Isaiah, lxi. 1.

BRO'KENLY.† adv. [from broken.] Without any regular series.

Sir Richard Hopkins hath done somewhat of this kind, but brokenly and glancingly; intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill.

The mind of a man distracted amongst many things, must needs entertain them brokenly and unperfectly. Hales, Rem. p. 219.

BRO'KENNESS.* n. s. [from broken.] The state of being broken; unevenness.

Those infirmities that are incident to them [the teeth] whether looseness, hollowness, rottenness, brokenness. Smith, Old Age, p. 85.

It is the brokenness, the ungrammatical position, the total subversion of the period that charms me.
Gray, Letter to Mason.

BRO'KENWINDED.* adj. [from broken and wind; formerly written broke-winded.] Having short breath.

And in the horrid cave were heard at once,
Brokewinded murmurs, howlings, and sad grones.
May's Lucan, b. v.

BRO'KER.† n. s. [from To broke. Brokers in old Fr. are termed broggours; and brokage, broggage. V. Kelham's Norman Dict. Hence perhaps our low word, to prog.]

1. A factor; one that does business for another; one that makes bargains for another.

Brokers, who, having no stock of their own, set up and trade with that of other men; buying here, and selling there, and commonly abusing both sides, to make out a little paultry gain. Temple.

Some South-Sea broker from the city,
Will purchase me, the more's the pity;
Lay all my fine plantations waste,
To fit them to his vulgar taste. Swift.

2. One who deals in old household goods. A seller of old apparel, &c. "because he buyeth old and broken apparel, &c." Minsheu. Sherwood calls the broker of this kind, "a fripperer."

3. A pimp; a match-maker.

A goodly broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines;
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Shakspeare.

In chusing for yourself, you shew'd your judgement;
Which being shallow, you shall give me leave
To play the broker in mine own behalf. Shakspeare.

BRO'KERAGE. n. s. [from broker.] The pay or reward of a broker. See BROCAGE.

BRO'KERLY.* adj. [from broker.] Partaking of the character of a broker; mean; servile.

We had determin'd that thou shouldst ha' come,
In a Spanish suit, and ha' carried her so; and he,
A brokerly slave, goes, puts it on himself.
B. Jonson, Alchem.

BRO'KERY.* n. s. [from broker.] The business of a broker.

Let them that meane by bookish businesse
To earne their bread, or hopen to professe
Their hard-got skill, let them alone for me,
Busie their brains with deeper brokerie.
Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

More knavery, and usury,
And foolery and brokery, than dogs-ditch.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer tamed.

BRO'NCHOCELE. n. s. [βρογκοκήλη.] A tumour of that part of the aspera arteria, called the bronchus. Quincy.

BRO'NCHIAL.† } adj. [Fr. bronchique, from BRO'NCHICK. } the Gr. βρόγκος.] Belonging to the throat.

Inflammation of the lungs may happen either in the bronchial or pulmonary vessels, and may soon be communicated from one to the other, when the inflammation affects both the lobes. Arbuthnot.

BRONCHO'TOMY.† n. s. [Fr. bronchotomie, from the Gr. βρόγκος and τέμνω.] That operation which opens the windpipe by incision, to prevent suffocation in a quinsey. Quincy.

The operation of bronchotomy is an incision into the aspera arteria, to make way for the air into the lungs, when respiration is obstructed by any tumour compressing the larynx. Sharp's Surgery.

BROND.† n. s. [Sax. bponb.] See BRAND. A sword.

Foolish old man, said then the pagan wroth,
That weenest words or charms may force withstond,
Soon shalt thou see, and then believe for troth,
That I can carve with this enchanted brond.
Spenser.

BRONTO'LOGY. n. s. [βροντὴ and λογίζ.] A dissertation upon thunder. Dict.

BRONZE.† n. s. [bronze, Fr. bronzo, Ital.]

1. Brass.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henley stands,
Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands.
Pope, Dunciad.

2. Relief, or statue, cast in brass and copper mixed.

I view with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain:
A print, a bronze, a flower, a root,
A shell, a butterfly can do't. Prior.

3. In chemistry, a factitious metal compounded of copper and tin, to which sometimes other metallick substances are added, particularly zinc. Chambers.

To BRONZE.* v. a. [old Fr. bronzer, to braze. Cotgrave.] To harden as brass.

Art, cursed art, wipes off the indebted blush
From nature's cheek, and bronzes every shame.
Young, Night Th. 5.

BROOCH.† n. s. [broke, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the Fr. broche, a spit. See BROACH. The ornament called a brooch was, in elder times, a buckle to fasten girdles, mantles, and the like; with a little pin, or spit, by which it was fixed to the respective part of the dress; and sometimes a twisted pin, with a jewel at the top of it, worn upon the hat or cap.]

1. A jewel; an ornament of jewels.

With gold rings upon their fingers, with broches and aiglets of gold upon their caps, which glistered full of pearls and precious stones.
Robinson's Tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, ii. 6.

Ay, marry, our chains and our jewels. —
Your brooches, pearls, and owches. Shakspeare.

Richly suited, but unseasonable; just like the brooch and the toothpick, which we wear not now.
Shakspeare.

I know him well; he is the brooch indeed,
And gem of all the nation. Shakspeare.

2. [With painters.] A painting all of one colour. Dict.

To BROOCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with jewels.

Not th' imperious shew
Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar, ever shall
Be brooch'd with me. Shakspeare.

To BROOD.† v. n. [Sax. bpoð, from bpæðan; old Fr. brode.]

1. To sit, as on eggs; to hatch them.

Thou from the first
Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant. Milton, P. L.

Here nature spreads her fruitful sweetness round,
Breathes on the air, and broods upon the ground.
Dryden.

2. To cover chickens under the wing.

Exalted hence, and drunk with secret joy,
Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct, and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden.

Find out some uncouth cell,
Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night raven sings. Milton.

3. To remain long in anxiety, or solicitous thought.

Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

As rejoicing misers
Brood o'er their precious stores of secret gold.
Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

4. To mature any thing by care.

It was the opinion of Clinias, as if there were ever amongst nations brooding of a war, and that there is no sure league but impuissance to do hurt. Bacon, War with Spain.

To BROOD.† v. a. To cherish by care.

Mark the boy well;
If we could take or kill him ———
——— See how he broods the boy.
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca, iv. 2.

This strange bird, thus hatched by Farell and Viret, was afterwards brooded by two more famous successors.
Bp. Hall, Works, vol. iii. p. 120. ed. 1662.

Of crouds afraid, yet anxious when alone,
You'll sit and brood your sorrows on a throne.
Dryden.

He nor heaps his brooded stores,
Nor on all profusely pours. Gray, Ode x.

BROOD.† n. s. [Sax. bpoð, old Fr. brode.]

1. Offspring; progeny; it is now hardly used of human beings, but in contempt.

The heavenly father keep his brood
From foul infection of so great a vice. Fairfax.
With terrours and with clamours compass'd round,
Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed.
Milton, P. L.
Or any other of that heavenly brood,
Let down in cloudy throne to do the world some good. Milton, Ode.
Ælian discourses of storks, and their affection toward their brood, whom they instruct to fly.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Thing bred; species generated.

Have you forgotten Libya's burning wastes,
Its barren rocks, parch'd earth, and hills of sand,
Its tainted air, and all its broods of poison?
Addison, Cato.

3. A hatch; the number hatched at once.

I was wonderfully pleased to see the different workings of instinct in a hen followed by a brood of ducks. Spectator, No. 121.

4. Something brought forth; a production.

Such things become the hatch and brood of time.
Shakspeare.

5. The act of covering the eggs.

Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BRO'ODY.† adj. [Sax. bpobize henne, a broody hen; A term for a hen that sits on eggs, Holland's Transl. of Pliny's Nat. Hist. p. 301. edit. 1601.] In a state of sitting on the eggs; inclined to sit.

The common hen, all the while she is broody, sits and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clocking. Ray.

BROOK.† n. s. [bpoc bpoca, Sax. from the Goth. brikan, to burst forth; to break out, i. e. where a river breaks into lesser streams, and the broken parts become brooks and rivulets. The old orthography, as Mr. Horne Tooke has also observed, was broke; and an example which he brings from Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess, confirms the etymology and explanation given.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.
Underneath the ground,
In a long hollow, the clear spring is bound;
Till on yon side, where the morn's sun doth look,
The struggling water breaks out in a brook.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.
Or many grateful altars I would rear,
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone,
Of lustre, from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages. Milton, P. L.
And to Cephisus' brook their way pursue:
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew.
Dryden.

Springs make little rivulets; those united, make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers which empty themselves into the sea.
Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [bpucan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they, which brook it worst, that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it. Hooker.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learned me to brook this patiently. Shaks.
How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desart, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopl'd towns.
Shakspeare.
Heav'n, the seat of bliss,
Brooks not the works of violence, and war.
Milton, P. L.
Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools. South.
Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard.
Dryden.

To BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid; because he could not brook, that the worthy prince Plangus was, by his chosen Tiridates, preferred before him. Sidney.

BRO'OKLIME. n. s. [becabunga, Lat.] A sort of water speedwell, very common in ditches.

BRO'OKMINT.* n. s. [Sax. bpocmýnce.] The water-mint, which grows on the brinks of rivers.

BROOM. n. s. [genista; bpom, Saxon.]

1. A small tree.

Even humble broom, and osiers, have their use,
And shade for sheep, and food for flocks, produce.
Dryden.

2. A besom; so called from the matter of which it is sometimes made.

Not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallow'd house;
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door. Shakspeare.
If they came into the best apartment, to set any thing in order, they were saluted with a broom.
Arbuthnot.

To BROOM, or BREAM.* v. a. [from the noun.] In naval language, to clean the ship; burning off the filth she has contracted on her sides, with straw, reeds, broom, or the like, when she is on a careen, or on the ground. See Coles, Blount, and Chambers. See also To CAREEN.

BRO'OMLAND. n. s. [broom and land.] Land that bears broom.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, by being put into broomlands. Mortimer.

BRO'OMSTAFF. n. s. [from broom and staff.] The staff to which the broom is bound; the handle of a besom.

They fell on; I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still. Shakspeare.
From the age,
That children tread this worldly stage,
Broomstaff, or poker, they bestride,
And round the parlour love to ride. Prior.
Sir Roger pointed at something behind the door, which I found to be an old broomstaff.
Spectator, No. 117.

BRO'OMSTICK. n. s. The same as broomstaff.

When I beheld this, I sighed and said within myself, SURELY MORTAL MAN IS A BROOMSTICK!

BROTH.† n. s. [bpoð, Sax. probably from bpiw, whence our northern word breau, spoon meat. See BREWIS.] Liquour in which flesh is boiled.

You may make the broth for two days, and take the one half every day. Bacon, Phys. Rem.
Instead of light deserts and luscious froth,
Our author treats to-night with Spartan broth.
Southerne.
If a nurse, after being sucked dry, eats broth, the infant will suck the broth almost unaltered.
Arbuthnot.

BRO'THEL. } n. s. [bordel, Fr.] A
BRO'THELHOUSE. } house of lewd entertainment; a bawdy-house.

Perchance
I saw him enter such a house of sale,
Videlicet, a brothel. Shakspeare.
Then courts of kings were held in high renown,
Ere made the common brothels of the town:
There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd.
Dryden, Fab.
From its old ruins brothelhouses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys.
Dryden, Mac Flecr.
The libertine retires to the stews, and to the brothel. Rogers.

BRO'THELLER.* n. s. [from brothel.] One who frequents a brothel-house. Gower uses brothel for such a person, Conf. Am. (15 .) fol. clvi. col. 2.

Cowper, Task.

BRO'THELRY.* n. s. [from brothel.]

1. Whoredom. Huloet.

Ye bastard poets, see your pedigree
From common trulls and loathsome brothelry!
Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 2.
Shall Furia brook her sister's modesty,
And prostitute her soul to brothelry?
Marston's Scourge of Vill. i. 3.

2. Obscenity.

So bold prolepses, so racked metaphors, with brothelry, able to violate the ear of a pagan.
B. Jonson's Fox, Dedication.

BROTHER.† n. s. [Goth. brothr, from bru, Celt. the womb; Sax. bpoðep; Bret. breur. The Persian word also is broder.] Plural, brothers or brethren; Goth. brothrahans.

1. One born of the same father and mother.

Be sad, good brothers:
Sorrow so royally in you appears,
That I will deeply put the fashion on. Shaks.
Whilst kin their kin, brother the brother foils,
Like ensigns all, against like ensigns bend. Daniel.
These two are brethren, Adam, and to come
Out of thy loins. Milton, P. L.
Comparing two men, in reference to one common parent, it is very easy to form the ideas of brothers. Locke.

2. Any one closely united; associate; and hence the old phrase sworn bro- thers, i. e. persons who, in the days of adventure, swore to share in each other's fortune, and to divide what they gained.

Thou wotest well thou art my sworen brother.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale.

He hath every month a new sworn brother.
Shakspeare, Much Ado.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother. Shakspeare.

3. Any one resembling another in manner, form, or profession.

He also that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Proverbs, xviii. 9.

4. Brother is used, in theological language, for man in general.

I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend. 1 Cor. viii. 13.

BRO'THERHOOD. n. s. [from brother and hood.]

1. The state or quality of being a brother.

This deep disgrace of brotherhood
Touches me deeper than you can imagine. Shaks.

BROW.† n. s. [Sax. bpæp, pl. bpæpaf, the brows.]

1. The arch of hair over the eye.

'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,
And sleep sits heavy upon every brow.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. The forehead.

She could have run and waddled about;
For even the day before she broke her brow.
Shakspeare.

So we some antique hero's strength,
Learn by his launce's weight and length;
As these vast beams express the beast,
Whose shady brows alive they drest. Waller.

3. The general air of the countenance.

Then call them to our presence, face to face,
And frowning brow to brow.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Though all things foul would bear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must look still so. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. The edge of any high place. [Gael. bre; Welch, bre, a hill; and in our northern dialect, broo, the upper part of a hill. See BRAY.]

The earl, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill. Bacon.

On the brow of the hill beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by espying the French embassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him. Wotton.

Them with fire, and hostile arms,
Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n
Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss.
Milton, P. L.

To BROW. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of.

Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts,
That brow this bottom glade. Milton, Comus.

To BRO'WBEAT.† v. a. [from brow and beat.] To depress with severe brows, and stern or lofty looks.

Young men, prentices, servants, the common sort, are so far from hiding themselves, or rising up, that I have often seen the magistrate faced, and almost brow-beaten, as he hath passed by.
Dr. J. White, Sermons, (1615,) p. 54.

It is not for a magistrate to frown upon, and browbeat those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave nod, to call a resolved zeal, want of prudence. South.

Count Tariff endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so impudent as the count, he was every whit as sturdy. Addison.

I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

BRO'WBEATING.* n. s. [from brow and beat.] The act of depressing by stern or lofty looks.

What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and scorns of great men? L'Estrange.

BRO'WBOUND. adj. [from brow and bound.] Crowned; having the head encircled as with a diadem.

In that day's feats,
He prov'd the best man i' the field, and, for his meed,
Was brow-bound with the oak.
Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

BRO'WLESS * adj. [from brow and less.] Without shame; frontless.

So browless was this heretick, [Mahomet,] that he was not ashamed to tell the world, that all he preached was sent him immediately from heaven.
L. Addison's Life of Mahomet, p. 84.

BRO'WSICK. adj. [from brow and sick.] Dejected; hanging the head.

But yet a gracious influence from you,
May alter nature in our browsick crew. Suckling.

BROWN.† adj. [Sax. bpun, from bpennan, to burn, the colour of a burnt object being brown. The Germ. braun is burnt. Bret. brun; Su. brun, from brenna, Serenius.] The name of a colour, compounded of black and any other colour.

Brown, in High Dutch, is called braun; in the Netherlands, bruyun; in French, couleur brune; in Italian, bruno.
Peacham.

I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a little browner. Shakspeare.

From whence high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'ercharging shades and pendent woods. Pope.

Long untravell'd heaths;
With desolation brown, he wanders waste.
Thomson.

BRO'WNBILL.† n. s. [from brown and bill.] The ancient weapon of the English foot; why it is called brown, I have not discovered, but we now say brown musket from it, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably so called, as Mr. Malone observes, from the weapons being sanguined or rubbed over with blood, to prevent them from rust, which gave them a brown colour.

And brownbills, levied in the city,
Made bills to pass the grand committee.
Hudibras.

BRO'WNISH. adj. [from brown.] Somewhat brown.

A brownish grey iron-stone, lying in thin strata, is poor, but runs freely. Woodward.

BRO'WNISM.* n. s. The heresy of those who adopted the opinions of Robert Brown. See BROWNIST.

That schism would be the sorest schism to you; that would be Brownism and Anabaptism indeed.
Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i.

BRO'WNIST.* n. s. One of the sect of Robert Brown, a noted sectarist in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whose opinions were very licentious.

These sectaries are called Brownists from one master Robert Brown, a Northamptonshire man, who was schoolmaster of the free-school of St. Olave's in Southwark.—The Brownists confine the church of God to their conventicles, excluding all other Christians out of the pale of the church that are not of their sect.
Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 51—53.

I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The word Puritan seems to be quashed, and all that heretofore were counted such, are now Brownists. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. i. 6.

BRO'WNNESS. n. s. [from brown.] A brown colour.

She would confess the contention in her own mind, between that lovely, indeed most lovely, brownness of Musidorus's face, and this colour of mine. Sidney, B. ii.

BRO'WNSTUDY. n. s. [from brown and study.] Gloomy meditations; study in which we direct our thoughts to no certain point.

They live retired, and then they doze away their time in drowsiness and brownstudies; or, if brisk and active, they lay themselves out wholly in making common places. Norris.

BRO'WNWORT.* n. s. [Sax. bpunepýpt.] In botany, the fig-wort.

BRO'WNY.* adj. Brown.

His browny locks did hang in crooked curls.
Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

To BROWSE.† v. a. [brouser, Fr.] To eat branches, or shrubs.

And being down, is trod in the durt
Of cattle, and broused, and sorely hurt.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge:
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou brousedst. Shakspeare.

The low shrubs, beasts will brouse them, and trample upon them.
Mede's Works, ed. 1677, p. 129.

To BROWSE. v. n. To feed: it is used with the particle on.

They have scared away two of my best sheep; if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing on ivy. Shakspeare.

A goat, hard pressed, took sanctuary in a vineyard; so soon as he thought the danger over, he fell presently a browsing upon the leaves.
L'Estrange.

Could eat the tender plant, and by degrees,
Browse on the shrubs, and crop the budding trees.
Blackmore.

The Greeks were the descendants of savages, ignorant of agriculture, and browsing on herbage, like cattle. Arbuthnot.

BROWSE. n. s. [from the verb.] Branches, or shrubs, fit for the food of goats, or other animals.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse.
Dryden.

On that cloud-piercing hill,
Plinlimmon, from afar the traveller kens,
Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby browse
Gnaw pendent. Philips.

BRO'WSING.* n. s. [from browse.] Food which deer find in young coppices, continually sprouting anew.

The stables butt upon the park, which for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and browsings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land.
Howell, Lett. i. ii. 8.

To BRUISE.† v. a. [Sax. bpýran, to bruise; anciently written brise, and brese; Fr. briser, old Fr. bracer, broyer, to pound, or bruise, from the Lat. brachium.] To crush or mangle with the heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into gross powder; to beat together coarsely.

It shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel. Gen. iii. 15.

Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

And fix far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he redeems. Milton, P. L.

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,
And stars with rocks together crush'd and bruis'd.
Waller.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn livid, and corrupt the snow.
Dryden.

BRU'ISE.† n. s. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.

There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous. Nahum, iii. 19.

One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood. Hudibras.

I since have labour'd
To bind the bruises of a civil war,
And stop the issues of their wasting blood. Dryd.

BRU'ISER.* n. s. [from bruise.]

1. In mechanicks, a concave tool used for grinding and polishing the specula of telescopes. Chambers.
2. In vulgar language, a boxer.

BRU'ISEWORT. n. s. An herb; the same with COMFREY.

BRUIT.† n. s. [old Goth. brut, report, from bridda, to declare; Fr. bruit, from the old Fr. bru.] Rumour; noise; report.

A bruit ran from one to the other, that the king was slain. Sidney.

Upon some bruits he apprehended a fear, which moved him to send to Sir William Herbert to remain his friend. Hayward.

I am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it. Shakspeare.

To BRUIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To report, to noise abroad; to rumour. Neither the verb nor the noun are now much in use.

His death,
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops.
Shakspeare.

It was bruited, that I meant nothing less than to go to Guiana. Ralegh.

BRU'MAL.† adj. [old Fr. brumal, from brumalis, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

About the brumal solstice, it has been observed, even unto a proverb, that the sea is calm, and the winds do cease, till the young ones are excluded, and forsake their nests. Brown.

The brumal quarter, they fast from food.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 364.

BRUN, BRAN, BROWN, BOURN, BURN, are all derived from the Sax. bopn, boupn, bpunna, bupna; all signifying a river or brook. Gibson's Camden.

BRUNE'TT. n. s. [brunette, French.] A woman with a brown complexion.

Your fair women therefore thought of this fashion, to insult the olives and the brunettes.
Addison, Guardian.

BRU'NION. n. s. [brugnon, Fr.] A sort of fruit between a plum and a peach.
Trevoux.

BRUNT.† n. s. [brunst, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says; which means heat. It may be, however, the participle of the Sax. bpennan, to burn; burnt implying heat in the sense of violent action; as, "the brunt of war."]

1. Shock; violence.

Erona chose rather to bide the brunt of war, than venture him. Sidney.

God, who caus'd a fountain, at thy prayer,
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst t'allay
After the brunt of battle. Milton, S. A.

Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.

A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long
In the close covert of her guileful eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I t' abide the brunt so strong.
Spenser, Sonn.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from bruise or wound,
Like featherbed betwixt a wall
And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

3. A brief and sudden effort.

A brunt of holiness, and away!
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 153.

BRUSH.† n. s. [brosse, Fr. from bruscus, Lat.]

1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.
2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

Whence comes all this rage of wit? this arming all the pencils and brushes of the town against me?
Stilling fleet.

With a small brush you must smear the glue well upon the joint of each piece. Moxon.

3. A rude assault; a shock; rough treatment; which, by the same metaphor, we call a scouring.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Shaksp.

It could not be possible, that, upon so little a brush as Waller had sustained, he could not be able to follow and disturb the king. Clarendon.

Else when we put it to the push,
They had not giv'n us such a brush. Hudibras.

4. A thicket. See BRUSKET.

All suddenly out of the thickest brush, —
A goodly lady did foreby them rush.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 15.

To BRUSH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sweep or rub with a brush.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; he brushes his hat o' morning; what should that bode? Shakspeare.

2. To strike with quickness, as in brushing.

The wrathful beast about him turned light,
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tail, that horse and man to ground did rush. Spenser, F. Q.

Has Somnus brush'd thy eyelids with his rod?
Dryden.

His son Cupavo brush'd the briny flood,
Upon his stern a brawny centaur stood. Dryden.

High o'er the billows flew the massy load,
And near the ship came thund'ring on the flood,
It almost brush'd the helm. Pope.

3. To paint with a brush.

You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing; to sweep.

And from the boughs brush off the evil dew,
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blue.
Milton, Arcades.

The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.

A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden.

To BRUSH. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.

Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by.
Dryden.

The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in their way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool.
Dryden, Fab.

BRU'SHER. n. s. [from brush.] One that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that criticks were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

BRU'SHET.* n. s. See BRUSKET.

BRU'SHWOOD.* n. s. [from brush and wood. I know not whether it may not be corrupted from browsewood.] Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath she blows,
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.
With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees.
Dryden, Fab.

BRU'SHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

BRUSK.* adj. [Fr. brusque, uncivil, harsh, Cotgrave.] Rude.

We are sorry to hear, that the Scottish gentleman, who has been lately sent to that king, found (as they say) but a brusk welcome.
Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 582.

To BRU'STLE.† v. n. [bpaꝛtlian, Saxon, from bpaꝛtl, a crackling or burning. In the north of England, "the sun brusles the hay," i. e. drys it, is yet a common phrase. And meat too much broiled is said to be bruzzled. The old Fr. brusler, to burn, (now written bruler,) may with the Saxon be traced to the Icelandick brys, a burning heat.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

Right as a ship against the streme,
He routeth with a slepie noyse;
And broustleth as a monkes froyse,
When it is throwe into the panne.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Break 'em more, they are but brustled yet.
Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.

To BRUT.* See To BRUTTE.

BRU'TAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Estrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal bus'ness of the war
Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryden.

BRUTA'LITY. n. s. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; churlishness, inhumanity.

Courage, in an ill bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality. Locke.

To BRU'TALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison, Freeholder.

To BRU'TALIZE.† v. a. To make brutal or savage.

Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
In human mould, should brutalize by choice
His nature. Cowper's Sofa, B. 1.

BRU'TALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed.
Arbuthnot.

BRUTE.† adj. [brutus, Lat.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

But when at bar beneath we came to plead our case,
Our wits were in the wane, our pleadings very brute. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 277.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten.
Holder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaick law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick power.
Milton, P. R.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. s. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd!
Milton, P. L.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatick are those, whose constant abode is upon the water.
Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, this present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below?
Pope, Ess. on Man.

To BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.

This once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles.

BRU'TELY.* adv. [from brute.] In a rough, uncivilised manner.

The vulgar expositor rushes brutely and impetuously against all the principles both of nature, piety, and moral goodness; and in the fury of his literal expounding overturns them all.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

BRU'TENESS. n. s. [from brute.] Brutality: a word not now used.

Thou dotard vile
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 12.

To BRU'TIFY.† v. a. [from brute.]

1. To make a man a brute.

O thou salacious woman! am I then brutified?
Ay; feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To render the mind brutal.

Success in some petty sport and pastime can yield but a very thin and transitory satifaction to a man not quite brutified, and void of sense.
Barrow, Serm. iii. 50.

Drunkenness besots a nation, and brutifies even the bravest spirits. Feltham, Resolves, i. 84.

BRU'TISH.† adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wandering gods disguis'd in brutish forms.
Milton, P. L.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself.
Shakspeare, As you Like it.

After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God.
Hooker, v. § 35.

5. Unconscious; insignificant. [Lat. brutum fulmen.]

Thou great Director of the rolling stars,
Unless thou idly look'st on men's affairs,
And vainly we thy brutish thunder fear;
Why should thy land so dire a monster bear?
Judas, in Sandys's Christ's Passion, p. 29.

The philosophers will have two sorts of lightning; calling the one fatal, that is, pre-appointed and mortal; the other brutish, that is, accidental and flying at random.
Sandys's Christ's Passion, Notes, p. 100.

BRU'TISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute, savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRU'TISHNESS.† n. s. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

Who would not presently discern the perfect brutishness of this kind of reasoning?
Bp. Bull's Works, iii. 1162.

[The] message, through the negligence of the person employed, was not delivered till he that sent it was in the last agonies of death: the doctor was very much affected at it, passionately complaining of the brutishness of those that had so little sense of a soul in that sad state.
Fell's Life of Hammond, Sect. 2.

To BRUTTE.* v. n. [not from the Sax. bpỳttian, to enjoy, as Mr. Mason thinks in the additions to his Supplement; but from the Fr. brouter, to browse, to nibble: and that from the Gr. βρίλειν, to eat. V. Hesychius. To brutte is a common expression still in Kent.] To browse: with on.

What the goats so easily brutted upon.
Evelyn's Acetaria, after sect. 82.

To BRUTTE.* v. a. To nibble.

The cow bruts the young wood. Grose.

BRU'TTING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Browsing.

Of all the foresters, this [horn beam] preserves itself best from the bruttings of the deer.
Evelyn, i. vi. 2.

BRY'ONY.† n. s. [bryonia, Latin, βρυωνια, vitis alba; vox Græco-barbara. V. Critopuli Emend. et Animadv. in Meursii Gloss. p. 24.] A plant.

The blue bindweed doth itself infold
With honeysuckle, and both these intwine
Themselves with bryony and jessamine.
B. Jonson, Masques.

BUB. n. s. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquour.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

To BUB.* v. a. [An old English word for bubble. Mr. Horne Tooke, who considers ble as an unnecessary addition to our present word, would have been glad to meet with the following proof of the curtailed object of his approbation.] To throw out in bubbles. Obsolete.

Rude Acheron, a loathsome lake to tell,
That boils and bubs up swelth as black as hell.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

BU'BBLE.† n. s. [bobbel, Dutch; a corruption of the Latin bulla.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon.

The colours of bubbles with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the Lady Margaret. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth.
Shakspeare, As you Like it.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.

The nation then too late will find
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.

Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Ganny's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

To BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Titus Andron.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing:
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat: at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison, Spec. No. 89.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy. Arburthnot, John Bull.

BU'BBLER. n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers! Digby to Pope.

BU'BBLY.* adj. [from bubble; an adjective yet in use in the north of England; as, "the bairn has a bubbly nose." Grose.] Consisting of bubbles or froth.

They would no more live under the yoke of the sea, or have their heads washed with this bubbly spume. Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, (1599,) p. 8.

BU'BBY. n. s. A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbuthnot, John Bull.

BU'BO. n. s. [Lat. from βουβών, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wiseman.

BU'BONOCELE. n. s. [Lat. from βουβών, the groin, and κήλη, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or, if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocele. Sharp's Surgery.

BU'BUKLE. n. s. A red pimple.

His face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakspeare.

BUCANI'ERS.† n. s. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates, of America, Dr. Johnson says. The men may have been so denominated from their manner of living; the first settlers in Hispaniola being said to be called buccaneers from their custom of assembling themselves after a chase, in order to regale themselves with broiling the flesh of the cattle they had killed, and buccaning, that is, drying the rest: many of these afterwards turned pirates. Hist. of America, P. II. p. 18. Cotgrave gives the Fr. verb boucaner, which he renders "to imitate the goat, also to broyle or scorch on a wooden gridiron." This old verb boucaner, from bouc, certainly illustrates the character of these men.

Whether gold will not cause either industry or vice to flourish? And whether a country, where it flowed in without labour, must not be wretched and dissolute like an island inhabited by buccaneers? Bp. Berkeley, Querist.

BUCCELLA'TION. n. s. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies a dividing into large pieces. Harris.

BUCK.† n. s. [bauche, Germ. suds, or lye; Su. byke, from Goth. bucka, to beat. See BATLET. Ital. bucata, "lye to wash a buck with." Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.

1. The liquour in which clothes are washed.

Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakspeare.

2. The clothes washed in the liquour.

Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shakspeare.

BUCK.* n. s. A cant word for a bold, ostentatious, or forward person; a blood; whom Johnson calls a man of fire! From this word come the modern phrases buckish and buckism, applied both to the person and to the science which constitutes a man of such importance!

Remember, lifeless drone,
I carry bucks and bloods alone!
T. Warton's Phaeton to the One-Horse Chair.

BUCK.† n. s. [bwch, Welsh; bock, Dutch; buc, old Fr.; bucca, Sax.; becco, Ital. The Iceland. bekre is a ram.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits and other animals.

Bucks, goats, and the like are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peacham.

To BUCK.† v. a. [Goth. bucka, Ital. bucare. See BUCK.] To wash clothes.

Here is a basket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking. Shakspeare.

To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.

The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucking time. Mortimer.

BU'CKBASKET. n. s. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.

They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakspeare.

BU'CKBEAN. n. s. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.

The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.

BU'CKET.† n. s. [baquet, French, Dr. Johnson says. But our original word is bouk, Sax. buc, a kind of vessel; low Lat. bauca; Gr. βαυκη. Bouk is the present word, in Staffordshire and Cheshire, for a pail to hold water. Hence bouket, and bucket. Chaucer writes it boket.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water. Shaks.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.

2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes and some the engines play;
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire.
Dryden.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

BUCKI'NGSTOOL.* n. s. [from buck and stool.] A low expression of the same value as its modern synonyme, a washing block.

He lookt about, and saw under him (though afar off) his lord upon Rosinante, no bigger than a toad upon a bucking-stool.
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, B. 3. ch. 3.

BU'CKLE. n. s. [bwccl, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.

The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig: the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator, No. 129.

That live long wig, which Gorgon' self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To BU'CKLE.† v. a. [from the noun, and old Fr. boucler.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.

Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

France, whose armour conscience buckl'd on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shakspeare.

Thus, ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee. Phillips.

When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.

2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field. Spenser, F. Q.

3. To join in battle.

The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.

4. To confine.

How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakspeare.

5. A technical word among barbers; as, to buckle a wig, i. e. to put it into curl. [Germ. bucken, Sax. buzan, to bend.] See BUCKLE.

To BU'CKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]

1. To bend; to bow.

The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakspeare.

2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, second sense.

Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue; how like a beast you lie;
Go buckle to the law. Dryden.

This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.

3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.

For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakspeare.

Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden, Juvenal.

BU'CKLER.† n. s. [bwccled, Welsh; bouclezer, Armorick; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.

He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way,
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast,
Still fighting, still defending as I past. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison on Medals.

To BUC'KLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.

Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate,
I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakspeare.

Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? Shaks.

BU'CKLER-THORN. n. s. Christ's-thorn.

BU'CKMAST. n. s. The fruit or mast of the beech tree.

BU'CKRAM. n. s. [bougram, Fr.] A sort of strong linen cloth, stiffened with gum, used by tailors and stay-makers.

I have peppered two of them; two, I am sure, I have paid two rogues in buckram suits. Shaks.

BU'CKRAM.* adj. [in allusion to the stiffness of buckram.] Stiff; precise; formal.

A few buckram bishops of Italy, and some other epicurean prelates of other countries. Fulke against Allen, p. 301.

One that not long since was the buckram scribe,
That would run on men's errands for an asper. Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

BU'CKRAMS. n. s. The same with wild garlick.

BU'CKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. s. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant. Miller.

BU'CKSKIN.* adj. [from buck and skin.] Made of the skin of a buck.

Mr. Humphrey Trelooby, wearing his own hair, a pair of buckskin breeches, a hunting whip, with a new pair of spurs. Tatler, No. 42.

BU'CKSTALL.* n. s. [from buck and stall.] A net to catch deer. Huloet.

A service in the forest in attending at a certain station to watch deer in hunting. Burn, Gloss. Hist. of Cumberland.

BU'CKTHORN. n. s. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from bucc, Saxon, the belly.] A tree that bears a purging berry.

BU'CKWHEAT. n. s. [buckweitz, Germ. fagopyrum, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BUCO'LICAL.* adj. [Lat. bucolicus; Fr. bucolique; from the Gr. βουκολος, a cowherd. This adjective is of high antiquity in our language; though hitherto unnoticed.] Pastoral.

Old Quintilian with his declamations,
Theocritus with his bucolical relations. Skelton's Poems, p. 19.

BUCO'LICK.† adj. [Fr. bucolique. See BUCOLICAL.] Pastoral.

The pastoral form is a fault of the poet's times: it contains also some passages, which wander far beyond the bounds of bucolick song. Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUCO'LICK.* n. s.

1. A writer of bucolicks or pastorals.

Spenser is erroneously ranked as our earliest English bucolick. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 51.

2. A bucolick poem.

I look upon this bucolick as an inestimable treasure of the most ancient science. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

The first modern Latin bucolicks are those of Petrarch, in number twelve. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 255.

Theocritus and Moschus had respectively written a bucolick on the deaths of Daphnis and Bion. Ib. Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUD. n. s. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou wast wont to be,
See as thou wast wont to see:
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Writers say, as the most forward bud,
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.

Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots or gems.

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Ecclus. xxxix. 13.

2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.

There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out. Clarendon.

Heaven gave him all at once, then snatched away,
Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;
Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.

Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd. Dryden, Silenus.

3. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shaksp.

To BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graff by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Temple.

BU'DDLE.* n. s. In mineralogy, a sort of frame so called by the English dressers of the ores of metals, made to receive the ore after its first separation from its grossest foulness. Phil. Transact. No. 69. Chambers.

To BUDGE.† v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. Herbert uses it not as such.

All your prisoners are
In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,
They cannot budge till you release. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shaks. Coriol.

When one is struck down, the residue budge not. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 385.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge
For fear. Hudibras.

BUDGE.† adj. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. He cites only the passage in Milton, and assigns to the word the meaning of stiff or surly; while others consider it as an academical phrase, denoting the scholastick habit, which was trimmed with budge or fur, [bouge furre, Fr. Palsgrave;] and Dr. Farmer has mentioned an order of the university of Cambridge in 1414, directing the bachelors of arts to be habited "tantum furruris buggeis aut agninis;" and Mr. Warton applies the word to this meaning: observing, however, that "the poet explains the obsolete budge, in which there is a tincture of ridicule, by the very awkward tautology of fur. See the substantive BUDGE. But Milton is perhaps equivocating. He is at least supported in the usage of the word as an adjective, in the sense of stiff, big, or pompous, by his friend Ellwood; and the etymology may then be referred to big, which see. He looks very bug of it;" for big; "a bog or bogge fellow," for bold or sawcy. The old substantive budgeness supports also this sense of the adjective; though another old adjective, budgy, countenances the academical application. See BUDGENESS and BUDGY.]

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoick fur.
Milton, Comus, ver. 707.

The warden was a budge old man; and I looked somewhat big too. Ellwood's Life, (written by Himself,) 3d edit. p. 60.

This was a budge fellow, and talked high.
Ibid. p. 119.

BUDGE.† n. s. [Bouge furre, rommenis, peaux de Lombardie. Palsgrave.] The dressed skin or fur of lambs; and, in some countries, of kids.

Minsheu and Cockeram.

He's nought but budge, old guards, brown fox-fur face,
He hath no soul. Marsten's Scourge of Vill. ii. 7.

They are become so liberal as to part freely with their own budge-gowns from off their backs, and bestow them on the magistrate.
Milton, on the Art. of Peace with the Irish.

BU'DGENESS.* n. s. [from budge.] Sternness; severity.

A Sara for goodnesse, a great Bellona for budgenesse,
For myldnesse Anna, for chastitye godlye Susanna.
Stanyhurst, cited by Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, iii. 401.

BU'DGER. n. s. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakspeare, Coriol.

BU'DGET.† n. s. [bogette, French; formerly written bouget and boget; which originally signified "a little coffer or trunke of wood, covered with leather, wherewith the women of old time carried their jewels, attires, and trinkets, at their saddle bowes, when they rid into the countrey." See Cotgrave in V. BOUGETTE. It may be from the Goth. balgs; but the Welsh have bolgan for a budget or mail of leather; and the Armorick, boulchet; low Lat. bulga. V. Du Cange.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.

With that out of his bouget forth he drew
Great store of treasure, therewith him to tempt.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 29.

My boget hangeth at the saddle-bow.
Hollyband's Fr. Littelton, 1581. p. 38.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowskin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.

His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.

It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

3. The statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the House of Commons, on a certain day in each session, of the finances of the kingdom, and of the ways and means of raising the revenue wanted for the ensuing year.

BU'DGY.* adj. [from budge.] Consisting of fur. The example, like that from Milton, presents a tautology.

On whose furr'd chin did hang a budgie fleece.
Thule, or Virtue's Historie, by F. R. 1598. sign. R. 2. b.

BUFF.† n. s. [from buffalo, Dr. Johnson says; noticing only the skin of the animal, or leather. It is the buffle or wild ox itself, Lat. bufalus, for bubalus, from the Gr. βουβαλος. See BUFFLE. Huloet, Barret, and Cotgrave, all mentioning the buff, with the variation of buffle or bugle, and with the definition of wild ox.]

1. A buffalo.
2. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.

A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff.
Dryden, Juv.

3. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.
4. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

5. The colour of the leather, of a very light yellow.
6. In medicine, the sizy, viscid, tough mass, which forms on the upper surface of the blood; what physicians call the coagulable lymph. Chambers.

To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From ought but a block. B. Jonson.

BU'FFALO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy browse
Of baffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryd.

BU'FFET.† n. s. [buffeto, Ital. buffet, Fr. from the old Fr. buffe, which Barbazan derives from bouter, to strike, by the change of the t into f; others, from the Dan. puff, a stroke or blow. Su.-Goth. baefwa, Iceland. bifa, to move.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

They gaven to him buffetis.
Wicliffe, St. John, xix.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakspeare.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks. Shakspeare.

What a manly body; methinks, she looks
As though she'd pitch the bar, or go to buffets.
Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Go, baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low.
Milton, S. A.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the son of Neptune stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground.
Dryden.

None knows what it is to be pursued and worried with the restless buffets of an impure spirit, but he who has endured the same terrible conflict himself. South, Sermons, vi. 180.

BUFFE'T. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.
Pope, Moral Ess.

To BU'FFET.† v. a. [old Fr. buffeter, Ital. bufettare. See BUFFET.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat. Wicliffe uses buffate.

An aungel of Sathanis is given to me that he buffate me. Wicliffe, 2 Cor. xii. 7.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shaks. K. John.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside.
Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

St. Paul tells us he was buffeted.
South, Sermons, vi. 293.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine.
Otway.

2. A term applied to the mournful peal, or funeral peal, as it is called, of bells.

Buffeting the bells, that is, by tying pieces of leather, old hat, or any other thing that is pretty thick round the ball of the clapper of each bell, and then ringing them, they make a most doleful and mournful sound.
The Art of Ringing, (1753,) p. 200.

To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakspeare, Henry V.

BU'FFETER.† n. s. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets. Sherwood.

BU'FFETING.* n. s. [from buffet.] Stroke.

From the head these hysterick buffetings descended, and were plentifully bestowed upon the members. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 122.

BU'FFLE.† n. s. [Germ. buffel, Fr. beuffle. The BUFF.] The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

Buffoles big-boned, fat, and camel-backed.
Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 23.

To BU'FFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffling, well-meaning mortal, Pistorides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties. Swift.

BU'FFLEHEADED.† adj. [from buffle and head.] A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid; foolish. Dr. Johnson gives no example. Dr. Jamieson has produced the Scottish blufflehead, as the synonyme, viz. having a large head, accompanied with the appearance of dulness of intellect; perhaps, he adds, from the English bluff. Our English of nearly two centuries back prests, however, buffleheaded

So fell this buffleheaded giant by the hand of Don Quixote.
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, iii. 3.

BUFFO'ON.† n. s. [buffon, French; and buffon in old English. Teut. beffe, derision, and boef, a knave; but the word is perhaps from the Fr. bouffer, to puff.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.
And when such buffons ball, [pawl,] and cornets sound,
(The guests loud-laughing,) who can then be heard?
Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. V. ii.
No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.
It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.
The bold buffoon, whene'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene.
Garth.

To BUFFO'ON.* v. a. [from the noun, and Fr. bouffonner, Cotgrave.] To laugh at; to make ridiculous.
Oppression, and all the deadly sins; whatever is contrary to sound religion and true doctrine; reign, triumph, brave the sun, are fashionable, and almost creditable: — But virtue, sobriety, religion; religion, matter of the best, highest, truest, honour, despised, buffooned, exposed as ridiculous! Glanville, Serm. ix. 343.
Let not so mean a style your muse debase,
But learn from Butler the buffooning grace.
Sir W. Soame's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

BUFFO'ONERY. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.
Courage in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke on Education.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.
Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.
And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need.
Dryden, Ep. to Southerne.

BUFFO'ONING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Buffoonery; low jesting.
Leave your buffooning and lying: I am not in humour to bear it. Dryden, Amphitryon.
These whifflers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed, by their rude drolling and buffooning, to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for. Hallywell's Discourses, p. 56.

BU'FFOONISM.* n. s. [from buffoonize.] Jesting. Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

To BU'FFOONIZE.* v. n. [from buffoon.] To buffoonize it; to play the fool, jester, or buffoon; to get a living by jests. Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

BUFFO'ONLIKE.* adj. [from buffoon and like.] Resembling a buffoon. Sherwood.

BUFFO'ONLY.* adj. [from buffoon.] Scurrile; ridiculous.
Such men become fit only for toys and trifles, for apish tricks and buffoonly discourse.
Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 1.

BUG.† n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff; or, as in some places bug is used, any insect of the scarabæi kind. Ray.
Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings.
Pope.

BUG.† } n. s. [It is derived by some
BU'GBEAR. } from big, by others from pug; bwg, in Welsh, has the same meaning, Dr. Johnson says. Pug was an old term for the devil. See Puck. But bug is the Celtick bŵg, a goblin; whence also bogle, which see. Bugbear was formerly written bearbug, in order, I suppose, to be represented as a fit companion for another "word of fear," bullbeggar: "As children be afraid of bearbugs and bulbeggers," Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terrour to frighten babes.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug, does greatly them affear:
Yet both doth strive their fearfulness to feign.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 20.
Sir, spare your threats:
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek.
Shakspeare.
Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him Shakspeare.
Indeed! these are bug-words.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.
We might guess them weary of the present discipline, as offensive to their state, which is the bug we fear. Milton, Of Ref. in England, B. 2.
We have a horrour for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.
Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.
To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BU'GGINESS. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BU'GGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BU'GLE.† } n. s. [from buzen, Sax. to
BU'GLEHORN. } bend, Junius; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Skinner; from bugle, the bonasus, Lye. It is very natural that the term of the beast should be applied to the horn. See BUGLE.] A hunting horn.
Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Spenser, F. Q.
I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick. Shaks.
He gave his buglehorn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide.
Tickell.

BU'GLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bugle, bos. Lacombe. A bull, in Hampshire, is called a bugle. See also BUFFLE.] A sort of wild ox.
The hart, and the roebucke, and the bugle, and the wilde goate.
Deuteron. xiv. 5. (Transl. of 1578.)

BU'GLE.† n. s. A shining bead of black glass.
Bugle-bracelets, necklace amber,
Perfumed for a lady's chamber. Shakspeare.
See here work of silver, there of small pearl, this other of black bugles.
Minsheu, Span. Dict. Dialog. 1599, p. 13.

Blacker than jet or bugle to sight.
Ashmole, Theat. Chemicum, p. 267.

BU'GLE. n. s. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BU'GLOSS. n. s. [from buglossum, Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.

To BUILD.† v. a. preter. I built, I have built; and formerly builded. [Bilden, Dutch; býlban, Sax. to confirm. The Su.-Goth. bol, a city, is perhaps the original.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.
Thou shalt not build an house unto my name.
1 Chron. xxii. 8.
The high places — which Solomon, the king of Israel, had builded for Astoreth, the abomination of the Zidonians. 2 Kings, xxiii. 13.
When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shaksp.

2. To raise in any laboured form.
When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head dress, appeared like a colossus upon putting it on. Spectator, No. 98.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.
To build, with levell of my loftie style,
That which no hands can evermore compyle.
Spenser, Ruins of Rome, st. 25.
He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
Milton, Lycid. v. 11.
Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities.
Donne.
I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.
To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.
By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.
Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings. Bacon, Essays.
Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations. Dryden, Fab. Ded.
This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison on Medals.

BUI'LDER. n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.
But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss.
Sidney.
When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.
Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent.
Denham.
Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame.
Prior.

BUI'LDING. n. s. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shaksp.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands:
That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant. Addison.

BUILT.† n. s. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden, An. Mir. st. 60.

The built of our ships, and courage of our seamen, is more proper and able to maintain a close fight, than any other nation of the world.
Temple's Works, ii. 377.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BUL.* n. s. In icthyology, an English name for the common flounder. Chambers.

BULB. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exteriour membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray on the Creation.

To BULB *out. v. n. To project; to swell out.

A stone—
——————wherein are all
The mouldings of a round-turn'd pedestal,
Whence bulbing out in figure of a sphere,
The whole above is finish'd in a small
Pellucid spire, crown'd with a crystal ball.
Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, (1681,) p. 11.

BULBA'CEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same with bulbous. Dict.

BU'LBED.* adj. [from bulb.] Round-headed, like an onion. Cotgrave in V. Bulbeux.

BU'LBOUS.† adj. [Fr. bulbeux, Cotgrave.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Ray on the Creation.

BULGE.* n. s. [Welch, bwlch, a gap. But see also To BULGE.] The sea term for a leak, the breach which lets in water. See To BILGE.

To BULGE.* v. n. [It was originally written bilge; bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder, Dr. Johnson says. It may be rather from the Goth. bulgia, to swell, from balgs.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

To save our shatter'd ships——
To weigh them out, that else had bulg'd themselves in sand. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 133.

Thrice round the ship was tost,
Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost.
Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation.
Moxon, Mechanical Exercises.

BU'LIMY.† n. s. [old Fr. boulimie, from Gr. βελιμία, from βοῦς, an ox, and λιμὸς, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities. Dict.

BULK.† n. s. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man, Dr. Johnson says. To this may be added the Goth. balgs, and the Sax. buce, the belly. Chaucer writes bouke for bulk. In Sussex, buck is the body or trunk of the body; whence the buck of a cart. But the Su.-Goth. bolk, bulk, which Ihre derives from bol, great, is probably the original of our word.

1. Magnitude; of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon, War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk, but fitter for the merchant than the man of war; for burden than for battle.
Ralegh, Essays.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth, at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life.
Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind, as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk, pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison, Freeholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually.
Swift.

4. Main fabrick; the body itself.

He raised a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Her heart
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

My liver leapt within my bulck.
Tubervile, Songs and Sonets, (1570.)

Their bulks and souls are bound on fortune's wheel. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo. [Goth. balke, portio mercium in navi. Serenius.]

BULK.† n. s. [from bielcke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.
Shakspeare, Othello.

He found a country fellow dead-drunk, snorting on a bulke. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 274.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

BU'LKHEAD. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BU'LKINESS. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BU'LKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace.
Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

BULL.† n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—
Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold,
Begins at fu, and ends at ten years old.
May's Virgil.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalm xxii. 12.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him.
Thomson, Spring.

4. A letter published by popes and emperours. [Fr. bulle; and written bulle by some of our own writers, to distinguish it, as by Lowth and T. Warton; βέλλα, (bulla sygillum,) vox Græco-barb. V. Meursii Gloss. in voce.]

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bullæ; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bullæ came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperours and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls.
Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

Mr. Bagshaw thinks this phrase might take its rise among Protestants in allusion to the constant incongruity in the pope's bulls, where he styles himself servant to the servants of God, and yet dictates and decrees with despotick authority. The example which I bring from Milton, seems to countenance this supposition; a bull being described as taking away the essence of that which it calls itself.

That such a poem should be toothless, I still affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself.
Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

Never did I see such a confused heap of false grammar, improper English, and downright bulls.
Dryden, Pref. to Notes on Emp. of Morroco.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope, Letters.

6. A stock-jobber. See BEAR.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as, bull-head, bull-rush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. s. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison, on Medals.

BULL-BEEF. n. s. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves. Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR.† n. s. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull; or it may be a corruption of bold-beggar.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

As children be afraid of bearbugs and bulbeggers. Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

This is the greatest bullbegger they seem to object against such converts as come from them.
Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 137.

This was certainly an ass in a lion's skin; a harmless bullbeggar, who delights to frighten innocent people, and set them a galloping.
Tatler, No. 212.

BULL-CALF. n. s. [from bull and calf.] A he calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakspeare.

BULL-DOG. n. s. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form: remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison, Spect.

BULL-FACED.* adj. [from bull and face.] Having the face, as it were, of a bull, a large face.

Not bull-fac'd Jonas, who could statutes draw
To mean rebellion, and make treason law.
Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel.

BULL-FINCH. n. s. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth.
Phillips's World of Words.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves.
Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. s. An insect.
BULL-BEE. } Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-HEAD. n. s. [from bull and head.]
1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.
2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature has painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows.
Walton's Angler.

3. A little black water-vermin; a tadpole.
Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-TROUT. n. s. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton's Angler.

BULL-WEED. n. s. The same with knap-weed.

BULL-WORT, or BISHOPS-WEED. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] A plant.

BU'LLACE. n. s. A wild sour plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holy-oaks, and such like.
Bacon, Essays.

BU'LLARY.* n. s. [Lat. bullarium.] A collection of papistical bulls.

The whole bull is extant in the bullary of Laertius Cherubinus. South, Sermons, v. 224.

BU'LLET. n. s. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And rammed with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.
Spenser, F. Q.

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knolles.

And as the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden.

BU'LLETIN. n. s. Fr. "a bill, ticket, or cocket; a billet in a lottery," Cotgrave in V. BULLETIN. Our language, of late years, has adopted this word for an official account of publick news, usually of no great length.

BU'LLION. n. s. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion.
Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

A second multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross.
Milton, P. L.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion.
Addison on the War.

To BU'LLIRAG.* v. a. [See To BALLARAG. This is the northern pronunciation and writing of ballarag; which Lye imagines to be derived from the Iceland. baul, a curse, and raegia, to reproach. Others consider it merely as a vulgarism, from bully or from bawl.] To insult in a bullying manner.

BU'LLISH.* adj. [from bull.] Partaking of the nature of a bull or blunder.

A toothless satire is as improper as a toothed sleek-stone, and as bullish.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BU'LLIST.* n. s. [Fr. bulliste, a writer or maker of papal bulls, Cotgrave.]

As for the ancients and elders, they are become penitentiaries, proctors in the court ecclesiastical, dataries, bullists, copyists.
Harmar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 134.

BULLI'TION. n. s. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

BU'LLOCK.† n. s. [Sax. bulluca.] A young bull. Dr. Johnson. But it should be, a young bull gelt, or ox. A gentleman has pleasantly informed me, that Dr. Johnson is not singular in the Irish definition, as he considers it, of a young bull; a great majority of preceding lexicographers having made the same blunder, with Minsheu before their eyes, who, in 1617, defines the word, "a young ox." With the blunderers I must be content to participate the censure, in the former edition of this dictionary; and will add, from the information already noticed, the progressive distinctions of the animal, till he becomes a bullock. "A male calf gelt is called a bull calf until a year old; when he is called a stirk or yearling; then, a two-year old steer; at three, a three-year old steer; and at four, he first takes the name of ox or bullock."

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks.
Temple.

BU'LLY. n. s. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter! — What says my bully rook? Speak scholarly and wisely.
Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange, Fab.

'Tis so ridic'lous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl.
Dryden, Juvenal.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats.
Addison, Freeholder.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows cholerick, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison, Spect.

To BU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat.
King's Cookery.

To BU'LLY† v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

So Britain's monarch once uncover'd sat,
While Bradshaw bullied in a broad-brimm'd hat.
Bramston.

BU'LRUSH. n. s. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it, the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryd.

BU'LRUSHY.* adj. [from bulrush.] Made of bulrushes, or full of bulrushes. Huloet.

BU'LTEL.* n. s. [low Lat. bultellus.]

1. The bran or refuse of meal after dressing. See To BOLT. Chambers.
2. The bag wherein meal is dressed; a bolter-cloth. V. Du Cange.

BU'LWARK.† n. s. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness; so Germ. bolwerk; from the Iceland. bol, large.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser F. Q.

They oft repair
Their earthern bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood.
Fairfax, Tasso.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil.
Addison, Cato.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation.
Addison, Freeholder.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakspeare.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen.
Addison, Ovid.

BUM.† n. s. [bomme, Dutch; bun, Gael. and Iceland. the bottom of any thing.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she.
Shakspeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and relicks of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W——n.

To BUM.* v. n. [Dutch bommen, to resound; from bomme, a drum.] To make a noise or report.

Fox-furr'd Mecho ——
Hath rak'd together some four thousand pound,
To make his smug girl bear a bumming sound
In a young merchant's ear.
Marston's Scourge of Vill. B. i. S. 4.

BUMBA'ILIFF.† n. s. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronunced by gradual corruption, boun, bun, bum bailiff, Dr. Johnson says. Blackstone also says, that it was bound-bailiff. But this origin of the word bum is questionable. The term may have arisen from the person being pursued, and the bailiff or pursuer catching him by the hinder part of his garment; and the vulgar, who are no admirers of this sort of gentry, might affix the contemptuous name to such of bum-bailiff. A literary friend proposes bump, as the etymology; the bailiff giving the party to be arrested a bump on the shoulder. But my own remark is supported by a laughable writer of nearly two centuries ago. See the example from Gayton. See also the Tract at the end of Fulke's Defence of the English Translations of the Bible, 1583. p. 33. "These quarrels, sir Bachelor, are more meet for the bum-courts, where perhaps you are a prating proctor, than for the schools of divinity. In this saying, if the term of bumcourts seem too light, I yield unto the censure of grave and godly men."] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Constables, tithing-men, bailiffs, bumme or shoulder-marshals, and the like dreadful appearances, which make stop of suspicious persons.
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, B. ii. ch. 2.

BU'MBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.

Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks,
Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquour.
Shakspeare, Tempest.

BU'MBAST.† n. s. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus, Dr. Johnson says. But see BOMBAST.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakspeare.

To BU'MBAST.† See To BOMBAST.

BU'MBLEBEE.* n. s. [from bumble and bee. Chaucer uses the verb bumble to describe the noise made by the bittern. The bumble or bummle bee is a common word in the north of England; and is, no doubt, so called from the bumming, or humming noise which it makes. See To BUM and To BUMP.] The wild bee, or, as we now call it, the humble bee; which makes a great noise.

BU'MBOAT.* n. s. [from bum and boat; or perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] A large clumsy boat, used in carrying vegetables and liquours to a ship lying at some distance from the shore.

BUMP.† n. s. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent, Dr. Johnson says. It is from the Goth. and Iceland. bomps, a stroke or blow.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise.
Dryden.

To BUMP.† v. n. [Dutch bommen, Teut. bomme, Lat. bombus. See To BOMB. It is applied, perhaps, only to the bittern; which, in some places, is called the butter-bump. Chaucer employs bumble, in describing the noise made by this bird, C. T. ver. 6554.] To make a loud noise, or bomb.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said. —— Dryd. Fab.

BUMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] The mugient noise made by the bittern.

The bitter with his bump,
The crane with his trump,
The swan of Menander,
The goose and the gander. Skelton's Poems, p. 227.

BU'MPER.† n. s. [from bump, Dr. Johnson says, which he conceives to be from bum, as being prominent. But this is a far-fetched explanation of bumper. Others consider it as a corruption of bumbard, or bombard, a drinking vessel. In Spence's Anecdotes, another corruption is proposed, viz. of au bon père; the English, when they were good catholicks, being accustomed to drink the pope's health in a full glass, every day after dinner, "au bon pere!"] A cup filled till the liquour swells over the brims.

Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden, Juvenal.

I have no opinion of your bumper-patriots. Some eat, some drink, some quarrel for their country!
Bp. Berkeley on Patriotism, § 21.

BU'MPKIN.† n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymolgy; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead? Such is the etymological explanation given by Dr. Johnson. The word is of no great age, in this sense, in our language. But bumkin, a naval word, is of higher antiquity. It is found in Sherwood's Dictionary of 1632, and is rendered into French chicambault, which Cotgrave defines "the luffe-block, a long and thick piece of wood, whereunto the foresayle and spritsayle are fastened, when a ship goes by the wind;" and this word bumkin, meaning a boom or bar of timber, is still in our sea-language. May not then, this block of wood have given rise to the contemptuous application of bumpkin to a man? Kersey's Dictionary of 1707 gives bumkin, a country clown, without the p. The Dutch have boomken for a little tree.] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears. Dryd.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH.† n.s. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains, bunke, Goth. an heap.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels to a people that shall not profit them. Isaiah, xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shaks.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Spenser, F. Q.

All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of raddish. Shakspeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryd.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot: as, a bunch of ribbon; a tuft.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest. Spenser, F. Q.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end. Woodward, on Fossils.

BU'NCHBACKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back; crookbacked.

The day shall come, that shou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curse this pois'nous bunchback'd toad. Shakspeare.

BU'NCHINESS.† n.s. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches. Sherwood.

BU'NCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing in bunches; having tufts.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. Grew's Museum.

BU'NDLE. n.s. [bynble, Sax. from bynd.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale, Law of Eng.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break; —
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overloaden, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle. Spectator, No. 499.

To BU'NDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrinæ causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n.s. [bwng, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

To BUNG.† v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up. Kersey.

All entries to the soul are so stopped and bunged up. Hammond's Works, vol. iv. p. 679.

BU'NGHOLE. n.s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole? Shakspeare.

To BU'NGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht
From glist'ring semblances of piety. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:
Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryden, Don Sebast.

BU'NGLE. n.s. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errours and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray on the Creation.

BU'NGLER. n.s. [bwngler, Welsh; q. bôn y glêr, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand. Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them even monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar motions and functions. Bentley, Serm. p. 182.

BUNN.† n.s. [bunelo, Span. bunna, Irish, a cake.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay, Pastorals.

BUNT.† n.s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent. Bown, however, is swollen, in Norfolk.]

1. A swelling part: an encreasing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

2. The middle part of a sail, purposely formed into a sort of bag, that it may receive the more wind. It is also called the bent.

The use of the brails is, when the sail is furled across, to bale up its bunt. Harris.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out, as the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER.† n.s. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

Her two marriageable daughters, like bunters, in stuff gowns, are now taking sixpennyworths of tea at the White-conduit House. Goldsmith's Essays, Ess. 15.

BU'NTING.† n.s. [emberiza alba.] The name of a bird.

I took this lark for a bunting. Shaks. All's Well.

A gosshawk beats not a bunting. Ray, Prov.

BU'NTING. n.s. The stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n.s. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Like buoys that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope, Dunciad.

To BUOY.† v. a. [from the noun: the u is mute in both, Dr. Johnson says; but a correct speaker leaves not the u mute in either. It is pronounced bwoy.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. K. Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope, Essay on Crit.

BUO'YANCY. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham, Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swom with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more
Inspire the course. Thomson, Autumn.

BUR, BOUR. BOR,† come from the Saxon bup, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retirement. See BOWER. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. s. [lappa; bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shaks. Hen. V.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shakspeare.

Dependents and suitors are always the burs, and sometimes the briers of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her
From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles. Milton, P. L.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

BU'RBOT.† n. s. A fish full of prickles, Dr. Johnson says. It is the English name of the mustela fluvialis; a fish common in the Trent, and many other of our rivers; and, called, in other places, the eel-pout. Chambers.

BU'RDELAIS.† n. s. [perhaps Bourdelais, from Bourdeaux.] A sort of grape.

BU'RDEN.† n. s. [byꝑðen, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen, Dr. Johnson says; which he might have supported by noticing that burthen is probably a contraction from bæpan and ðinge, i. e. to bear any thing. But he only observes, that it is supposed to come from the Lat. burdo, a mule. Byꝑðen is another form also of the Sax. substantive. See BURTHEN.]

1. A load; something to be carried.

Camels have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden in the several kinds they will bear. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

2. Something grievous, or wearisome.

Couldst thou support
That burden, heavier than the earth to bear?
Milton, P. L.

None of the things they are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,
To all my friends a burden grown. Swift.

3. A birth: now obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, call'd Æmilia,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons. Shaks.

4. The verse repeated in a song; the bob; the chorus; [low Lat. burdo, a humming noise; Fr. bourdon, the drone of a bagpipe. Cockeram renders "a deep base" by the Fr. burdon; and the Welsh byrrdon is also used for the bass in musick. The commentators on Chaucer consider the sompner, "bearing a stiff burdoun," as singing the bass part of a well-known song, which the pardoner was singing; but it might be the chorus. However, the latter is the present meaning.]

At every close she made, the attending throng
Reply'd and bore the burden of the song.
Dryden, Fables.

5. The quantity that a ship will carry: or the capacity of a ship: as, a ship of a hundred tuns burden.

6. A club. [Fr. bourdon, a pilgrim's staff, Cotgrave; Ital. bordone. Chaucer describes the giant Danger with "a great bourdoun in his hand," Rom. R. 3401.]

The villain ———
Let drive at him so dreadfully amaine,
That for his safety he did him constraine
To give him ground, and shift on every side,
Rather than once his burden to sustaine.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 46.

To BU'RDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to incumber.

Burden not thyself above thy power. Ecclus. xiii. 2.

I mean not that other men be eased and you burdened. 2 Corinthians, viii. 13.

With meats and drinks they had sufficed,
Not burden'd nature. Milton, P. L.

BU'RDENER. n. s. [from burden.] A loader; an oppressour.

BU'RDENOUS. adj. [from burden.]

1. Grievous; oppressive; wearisome.

Make no jest of that which hath so earnestly pierced me through, nor let that be light to thee, which to me is so burdenous. Sidney, b. i.

2. Useless; cumbersome.

To what can I be useful, wherein serve,
But to sit idle on the household hearth,
A burd'nous drone; to visitants a gaze.
Milton, S. A.

BU'RDENSOME. adj. [from burden.] Grievous; troublesome to be born.

His leisure told him that his time was come,
And lack of load made his life burdensome.
Milton, Epit. on Hobson.

Could I but live till burdensome they prove,
My life would be immortal as my love.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Assistances always attending us, upon the easy condition of our prayers, and by which the most burdensome duty will become light and easy. Rogers.

BU'RDENSOMENESS. n. s. [from burdensome.] Weight; heaviness; uneasiness to be born.

BU'RDOCK. n. s. [persolata.] A plant.

BUREA'U.† n. s. [bureau, Fr. a thick and coarse cloth, of a brown, russet, or dark mingled colour; also the table that is within a court of audience; belike, because 'tis usually covered with a carpet of that cloth. Cotgrave in V. BUREAU. Hence, our table, with drawers.] A chest of drawers with a writing board. It is pronounced as if it were spelt buro.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails,
To writing of good sense. Swift.

BURG.† n. s. See BURGH, and BURROW.

Tame, a burg or fort of some note.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 48.

BU'RGAGE.† n. s. [Fr. bourgage, from bourg; low Lat. burgagium. See BURGH.] A tenure proper to cities and towns, whereby men of cities or burrows hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord, for a certain yearly rent. Cowel.

The gross of the borough is surveyed together in the beginning of the county; but there are some other particular burgages thereof, mentioned under the titles of particular men's possessions. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

BU'RGAMOT. n. s. [bergamotte, Fr.] See BERGAMOT.

1. A species of pear.
2. A kind of perfume.

BU'RGANET. } n. s. [from bourginote, Fr.]
BU'RGONET. } A kind of helmet.

Upon his head his glistering burganet,
The which was wrought by wonderous device,
And curiously engraven, he did fit.
Spenser, Muiopotmos.

This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I was page to a footman, carrying after him his pike and burganet. Hakewill on Providence.

BU'RGEOIS. n. s. [burgeois, Fr.]

1. A citizen; a burgess.

It is a republick itself, under the protection of the eight ancient cantons. There are in it an hundred burgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison on Italy.

2. A type of a particular sort, probably so called from him who first used it.

To BU'RGEON.* See To BOURGEON. Often written burgeon by our old authors.

BU'RGEON.* n. s. In gardening, a knot or button put forth by the branch of a tree in the spring. Chambers.

BU'RGESS.† n. s. [bourgeois, Fr. burgess, old Fr. Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom.]

1. A citizen; a freeman of a city or corporate town.

Twenty years have I lived
A burgess of the sea, and have been present
At many a desperate fight.
Beaum. and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

Almost a constant burgess of the groves.
Sir R. Fanshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 18.

2. A representative of a town corporate.

The whole case was dispersed by the knights of shires, and burgesses of towns through all the veins of the land. Wotton.

BU'RGESS-SHIP.* n. s. The state and quality of a burgess.

One of our burgess-ships is vacant by the promotion of Sir Heneage Finch. South, Lett. to Bathurst, Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 174.

BURGH.† n. s. [Sax. burg, from the Goth. baurgs, a city; old Fr. bourg; Germ. bourg; low Lat. burgus; Gr. πύργος; in the Macedonian dialect, βύργος, a tower. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. et Gr. Wachter derives the Germ. bourg, from bergen, to cover, to protect, or fortify. See BURG, and BOROUGH.] A corporate town or borough.

Many towns in Cornwall, when they were first allowed to send burgesses to the parliament, bore another proportion to London than now; for several of these burghs send two burgesses, whereas London itself sends but four. Graunt.

BU'RGHER. n. s. [from burgh.] One who has a right to certain privileges in this or that place. Locke.

It irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native burghers of this desart city,
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

After the multitude of the common people was dismissed, and the chief of the burghers sent for, the imperious letter was read before the better sort of citizens. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BU'RGHERSHIP. n. s. [from burgher.] The privilege of a burgher.

BU'RGLAR.† n. s. [written also burglarer or burglerer, and burglayer. The former agrees with its derivation from burglary; but the latter would suggest an etymology from burgh and lay, which is not intelligible.] One guilty of the crime of housebreaking.

Sir William Brian was sent to the tower, only for procuring the pope's bull against certain burglerers that robbed his own house.
Ld. Northampton, Proc. against Garnet, G g. 2.

If in this resistance the thief, or burglayer, miscarry, his blood will be upon his own head.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. ii. 1.

BURGLA'RIOUS.* adj. [from burglar.] Relating to the crime of housebreaking. Ash.

BU'RGLARY. n. s. [from burg, a house, and larron, a thief.] In the natural signification, is nothing but the robbing of a house: but as it is a term of art, our common lawyers restrain it to robbing a house by night, or breaking in with an intent to rob, or do some other felony. The like offence committed by day, they call house-robbing, by a peculiar name. Cowel.

What say you, father? Burglary is but a venial sin among soldiers. Dryden, Spanish Fryar.

BU'RGMASTER. See BURGOMASTER.

BU'RGMOTE.* n. s. [from burgh and mote. See MOTE.] A borough court.

The king sent a notification of these proceedings to each burgmote, where the people of that court also swore to the observance of them.
Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

BU'RGOMASTER. n. s. [from burg and master.] One employed in the government of a city.

They chuse their councils and burgomasters out of the burgeois, as in the other governments of Switzerland. Addison.

BU'RGRAVE.* n. s. [from bourg, and graf or grave, Germ. a count.] An hereditary governour of a castle, or fortified town.

Foure marquesses, foure landgraves, foure burgraves, foure earles, &c.
Bale, Acts of Eng. Votaries, P. ii. sign. B. 8. b.

BU'RGUNDY.* n. s. Wine that is made in Burgundy.

The mellow-tasted burgundy.
Thomson, Autumn, ver. 703.

BURH, is a tower; and from that, a defence or protection; so Cwenburh is a woman ready to assist; Cuthbur, eminent for assistance. Gibson's Camden.

BU'RIAL. n. s. [from To bury.]

1. The act of burying; sepulture; interment.

Nor would we deign him burial of his men.
Shakspeare.

See my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

Your body I sought, and had I found,
Design'd for burial in your native ground.
Dryden, Æneid.

2. The act of placing any thing under earth or water.

We have great lakes, both salt and fresh; we use them for burials of some natural bodies: for we find a difference of things buried in earth, and things buried in water. Bacon.

3. The church service for funerals.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of interment, if not prohibited unto persons excommunicated, and laying violent hands on themselves, by a rubrick of the burial service. Ayliffe, Parergon.

BU'RIAL-PLACE.* n. s. [from burial and place.] A place set apart for burial.

These are the souls of wicked, not of virtuous men, which are thus forced to wander amidst burial-places, suffering the punishment of an impious life.
Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BU'RIER.† n. s. [from bury.] One that buries; one that performs the act of interment.

And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it.
Ezek. xxxix. 15.

Let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that each heart being set
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

BU'RINE. n. s. [French.] A graving tool; a graver.

Wit is like the graver's burine upon copper, or the corrodings of aquafortis, which engrave and indent the characters, that they can never be defaced.
Government of the Tongue.

To BURL.† v. a. To dress cloth as fullers do.

In the manufacturing of white cloths for dying, the process of clearing it of the knots, ends of thread, and the like, with little iron nippers called in our old lexicography burling-irons, is termed burling. Whence this word is derived, I know not; but it is curious to observe, that in a Scottish act of parliament (in 1451) "money burlit and clippit" occurs: which is analogous to our technical word.

BU'RLER.* n. s. [from the verb.] A dresser of cloth; one who clips off the ends and threads.

Soon the clothier's sheers,
And burler's thistle, skim the surface keen.
Dyer's Fleece.

BU'RLACE. n. s. [corruptly written for burdelais.] A sort of grape.

BURLE'SQUE.† adj. [Fr. burlesque, Ital. burlesco, from burlare, to jest; which may be from the low Lat. burdare, that is, to bourd, or joke. See BOURD.] Jocular; tending to raise laughter, by unnatural or unsuitable language or images.

Homer in his character of Vulcan and Thersites, in his story of Mars and Venus, in his behaviour of Irus, and in other passages, has been observed to have lapsed into the burlesque character, and to have departed from that serious air, essential to the magnificence of an epick poem.
Addison, Spect.

BURLE'SQUE.† n. s. Ludicrous language, or ideas; ridicule.

Who make but a jest of it at the best: if not a subject of burlesk and drollery.
Wallis's Sermons, (1682,) p. 3.

When a man lays out a twelvemonth on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque.
Addison on Ancient Medals.

To BURLE'SQUE.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To turn to ridicule.

'Tis foppish to speak of religion but in raillery; or to mention such a thing as Scripture, except it be to burlesque and deride it.
Glanville, Serm. iv. 194.

Would Homer apply the epithet divine to a modern swine-herd? if not, it is an evidence, that Eumæus was a man of consequence, otherwise Homer would burlesque his own poetry.
Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

To BURLE'SQUE.* v. n. To employ burlesque.

Dr. Patrick joins hands with them in burlesquing upon the doctrine. Du Moulin's Adv. of the Ch. of Eng. towards Rome, 1680, p. 31.

BURLE'SQUER.* n. s. [from burlesque.] One who turns a circumstance into ridicule.

BURLE'TTA. n. s. [Ital. from burlare, to jest.] A word of late introduction into our language, meaning generally a musical farce.

BU'RLINESS.† n. s. [from burly.] Bulk; bluster.

Into a lesser room thy burliness to bring.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 8.

BU'RLY.† adj. [Junius has no etymology; Skinner imagines it to come from boorlike, clownish, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. More, I may add, in his Life of King Richard III. writes boorely, for boorlike, which countenances Skinner's conjecture. Mr. Malone is also of this opinion.]

1. Great of stature; great of size; bulky; tumid.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly boned clown in chines of beef, ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove that thou mayest be turned into hobnails.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

It was the orator's own burly way of nonsense.
Cowley.

Away with all your Carthaginian state,
Let vanquish'd Hannibal without doors wait,
Too burly and too big to pass my narrow gate.
Dryden.

Frown it away with big and burly looks.
Bp. Parker's Reproof to the Rehearsal Transposed, 1673, p. 227.

Her husband being a very burly man, she thought it would be less trouble for her to bring away little Cupid. Addison, Spect.

2. Replete; full; without vacuity.

'Twixt their burly sacks, and full stuff'd barns, they stand. Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 14.

3. Boisterous; loud. [Teut. borlen, to make a noise. This sense is unnoticed by our lexicographers. The example presents a very fine specimen of our old and forgotten poetry.]

So when a burly tempest rolls his pride
About the world; though mighty cedars bow,
Though seas give way unto his greater tide,
Though mountains lay their proudest heads full low
Before his feet; yet still he roars amain,
And rusheth on in blustering disdain.
Beaumont, Psyche, v. st. 224.

To BURN.† v. a. preterite and participle, burned, or burnt. [beɒnan, bỳrnan, Sax. "Brenn, vel bran, vetustissimo usu significavit urere: Gothis brann idem est." Loesch. Lit. Celt. p. 96. See also To BREN.

1. To consume with fire.

They burnt Jericho with fire. Joshua, vi. 24.
The fire burneth the wood. Psalm lxxxiii. 14.
Altar of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings. Milton, P. L.
That where she fed his amorous desires
With soft complaints, and felt his hottest fires,
There other flames might waste his earthly part,
And burn his limbs where love had burn'd his heart. Dryden.
A fleshy excrescence, becoming exceeding hard, is supposed to demand extirpation, by burning away the induration, or amputating.
Sharp's Surgery.

2. To wound or hurt with fire or heat.

Hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.
Exodus, xxi. 25.

3. To exert the qualities of heat, as by drying or scorching; to communicate heat as to burn wine. See BURNT.

O that I could but weep, to vent my passion!
But this dry sorrow burns up all my tears.
Dryden.

To BURN. v. n.

1. To be on fire; to be kindled.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness. Joel, ii. 3.
The mount burned with fire. Deut. ix. 15.
O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me!
The light burns blue—Is it not dead midnight?
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
Shakspeare.

2. To shine; to sparkle.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water. Shakspeare.
Oh! prince, oh! wherefore burn your eyes? and why
Is your sweet temper turn'd to fury? Rowe.

3. To be inflamed with passion or desire.

When I burnt in desire to question them farther, they made themselves air, into which they vanished. Shakspeare.
Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I atchieve not this young modest girl! Shaks.
In Ralegh mark their every glory mix'd;
Ralegh, the scourge of Spain! whose breast with all
The sage, the patriot, and the hero burn'd.
Thomson.

4. To act with destructive violence, used of the passions.

Shall thy wrath burn like fire?
Psalm lxxxix. 46.

5. To be in a state of destructive commotion.

The nations bleed where'er her steps she turns,
The groan still deepens and the combat burns.
Pope.

6. It is used particularly of love.

She burns, she raves, she dies, 'tis true,
But burns, and raves, and dies for you. Addison.

BURN.† n. s. [Sax. bỳrn.] A hurt caused by fire.

We see the phlegm of vitriol is a very effectual remedy against burns. Boyle.

BU'RNABLE.* adj. [from burn.] That may be burnt up; adustible.
Cotgrave in V. Adustible.

BU'RNER.† n. s. [from burn.] A person that burns any thing.

They [Pagans] were great burners and destroyers of Holy Scriptures.
Brevint's Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 376.

BU'RNET. n. s. [pimpinella, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth,
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover.
Shakspeare.

BU'RNING.† n. s. [Sax. bæɒnınȝ.]

1. Fire; flame; state of inflammation.

The mind, surely, of itself, can feel none of the burnings of a fever. South.
In liquid burnings, or on dry to dwell,
Is all the sad variety of hell. Dryden.

2. The thing to be burned.

Thou shalt die in peace; and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee.
Jerem. xxxiv. 5.

3. The act of burning.

The persecutions in the Thyatirian interval were usually burnings, and rackings, and wasting away their lives in miserable imprisonments.
More's Seven Churches, ch. 6.

BU'RNING. adj. [from the participle.] Vehement; powerful.

These things sting him
So venemously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakspeare.
I had a glimpse of him; but he shot by me
Like a young hound upon a burning scent.
Dryden.

BU'RNING-GLASS. n. s. [from burning and glass.] A glass which collects the rays of the sun into a narrow compass, and so increases their force.

The appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass. Shakspeare.
Love is of the nature of a burning-glass, which, kept still in one place, fireth; changed often, it doth nothing. Suckling.
O diadem, thou centre of ambition,
Where all its different lines are reconciled,
As if thou wert the burning-glass of glory!
Dryden.

To BU'RNISH.† v. a. [burnir, Fr. formerly brunir; Ital. brunire; Span. brunir; probably from the low Lat. brunia, a coat of mail, which was in old times highly polished. It was formerly written by the English born or burn. Chaucer's temple of Mars is "wrought all of burned steel," Knight's Tale; and Gower has "borned gold," Conf. Am. B.I. Coles, in his dictionary, notices the verb born for burnish.] To polish; to give a gloss to.

Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Shakspeare.

Make a plate of them, and burnish it as they do iron. Bacon.
The frame of burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.
Dryden.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. To grow bright or glossy.

I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice,
Burnish, and make a gawdy show,
Become a general, peer, and beau. Swift.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. [of uncertain etymology.] To grow; to spread out.

This they could do, while Saturn fill'd the throne,
Ere Juno burnish'd, or young Jove was grown.
Dryden.
To shoot, and spread, and burnish into man.
Dryden.
Mrs. Primley's great belly she may lace down before, but it burnishes on her hips.
Congreve, Way of the World.

BU'RNISH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A gloss.

Blushes that bin
The burnish of no sin,
Nor flames of aught too hot within.
Crashaw's Poems, p. 126.

BU'RNISHER. n. s. [from burnish.]

1. The person that burnishes or polishes.
2. The tool with which bookbinders give a gloss to the leaves of books: it is commonly a dog's tooth set in a stick.

BURNT. particip. pass. of burn: applied to liquors, it means made hot.

I find it very difficult to know,
Who, to refresh th' attendants to a grave,
Burnt claret first, or Naples biscuit gave.
King's Cookery.

BURR.* n. s. Used, in many places, for the sweetbread.

BURR. n. s. The lobe or lap of the ear. Dict.

BURR Pump. [In a ship.] A pump by the side of a ship, into which a staff seven or eight feet long is put; having a burr or knob of wood at the end, which is drawn up by a rope fastened to the middle of it, called also a bilge pump. Harris.

BU'RROCK. n. s. A small wear or dam, where weels are laid in a river for catching fish. Phillips.

BU'RROW, BERG, BURG, BURGH.† n. s. [derived from the Saxon, bunȝ, bỳrȝ, a city, tower, or castle. Gibson's Camden. See also BURGH.]

1. A corporate town, that is not a city, but such as sends burgesses to the parliament. All places that, in former days, were called boroughs, were such as were fenced or fortified. Cowel.

King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every burrow, as we pass along. Shaksp.

Possession of land was the original right of election among the commons; and burrows were entitled to sit as they were possessed of certain tracts. Temple.

2. The holes made in the ground by conies. [Teut. bergen, to cover. See To BURY.]

When they shall see his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him. Shaksp.

3. The improper word for barrow, a mount. See BARROW.

Upon a single view, and outward observation, they [tumuli, or artificial hills] may be the monuments of any of these three nations; although the greatest number, not improbably, of the Saxons; who fought many battles with the Britaines and Danes, and also between their own nations; and left the proper name of burrows for these hills, still retained in many of them, as the seven borrows upon Salisbury plain, and in many other parts of England. Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 154.

To BU'RROW. v. n. [from the noun.] To make holes in the ground; to mine, as conies or rabbits.

Some strew sand among their corn, which they say, prevents mice and rats burrowing in it; because of its falling into their ears. Mortimer.

Little sinuses would form, and burrow underneath. Sharp.

BU'RSAR.† n. s. [bursarius, Lat. boursier, Fr. from bourse, a purse. The purser of a ship is the bursar.]

1. The treasurer of a college.

Δογιστης, or γραμματευς, was the burser, who kept the accounts and registered all the receipts and expences of the ship.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. 148.

To offices I'd bid adieu,
Of dean, vice-pres, of bursar too.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

2. Students sent as exhibitioners to the universities of Scotland by each presbytery, from whom they have a small yearly allowance for four years.

BU'RSARSHIP.* n. s. [from bursar.] The office of bursar.

Not the plotting for an headship, (for that is now become a court-business,) but the contriving of a bursership of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 276.

BU'RSARY.* n. s. [from bursar.]

1. The treasury of a college.
2. In Scotland, an exhibition.

BURSE.† n. s. [bourse, Fr. bursa, Lat. a purse; or, from byrsa, Lat. the exchange of Carthage.] An exchange where merchants meet, and shops are kept; so called, because the sign of the purse was anciently set over such a place; the Exchange in the Strand was termed Britain's Burse by James I. Phillips.

Fraternities and companies I approve of, such as merchants' burses, colleges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Tattelius, the new-come traveller,
With his disguised coat and ringed ear,
Trampling the bourse's marble twice a day,
Tells nothing but stark truths I dare well say!

Bp. Hall, Satires, vi. 1.

Whether the Britaine burse did fill apace,
And likely were to give the Exchange disgrace.

Donne's Poems, p. 94.

To BURST.† v. n. I burst; I have burst, or bursten. [burrtan, Saxon.]

1. To break, or fly open; to suffer a violent disruption.

So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

Prov. iii. 10.

It is ready to burst like new bottles.

Job, xxxii. 19.

The egg that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
The callow young. Milton, P. L.

2. To fly asunder.

Yet am I thankful; if my heart were great,
'Twould burst at this. Shakspeare.

3. To break away; to spring.

You burst, ah cruel! from my arms,
And swiftly shoot along the Mall,
Or softly glide by the Canal. Pope.

4. To come suddenly.

A resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out; the king
Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

Shakspeare.

If the worlds
In worlds inclos'd shou'd on his senses burst,
He wou'd abhorrent turn. Thomson, Summer.

5. To come with violence.

Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear, we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spite. Shakspeare.

Where is the notable passage over the river Euphrates, bursting out by the vallies of the mountain Antitaurus; from whence the plains of Mesopotamia, then part of the Persian kingdom, begin to open themselves. Knolles.

[They] bursting forth
Afresh with conscious terrours vex me round.

Milton, P. L. ii. 800.

Young spring protrudes the bursting gems.

Thomson.

6. To begin an action violently or suddenly.

Thrice he assay'd, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth.

Milton, P. L. i. 620.

She burst into tears, and wrung her hands.

Arbuthnot.

To BURST. v. a. To break suddenly; to make a quick and violent disruption.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Shakspeare.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As if he would burst heaven. Shaksp.

I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds. Jer. xxx. 8.

Moses saith also, the fountains of the great abyss were burst asunder, to make the deluge; and what means this abyss, and the bursting of it, if restrained to Judea? what appearance is there of this disruption there? Burnet's Theory.

If the juices of an animal body were, so as by the mixture of the opposites, to cause an ebullition, they would burst the vessels. Arbuthnot.

BURST. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden disruption; a sudden and violent action of any kind.

Since I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such burst of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shaks. K. Lear.

Down they came, and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder,
Upon the heads of all. Milton, S. A.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent,
Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent,
Eating their way, and undermining all,
Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall.

Addison.

BURST.† } particip. adj. [Sax. burrtcon.]
BU'RSTEN.} Diseased with a hernia, or rupture.

He was born bursten; and your worship knows, that is a pretty step to men's compassions.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

BU'RSTENNESS.† n. s. [from burst.] A rupture, or hernia. Sherwood.

BU'RSTER.* n. s. [from burst.] A breaker or beater in pieces.

BURT. n. s. A flat fish of the turbot kind.

BU'RTHEN.† n. s. } See BURDEN. Bur-
To BU'RTHEN. v. a. } then is the right spelling of the common acceptation of the word; though the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Pope, belongs to the sense and orthography of burden, which require, on account of its French origin, the d instead of the th. Drayton uses the burden of the song in the same manner.

Some roundelays do sing; the rest the burthen bear. Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 14.

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

BU'RTON. n. s. [In a ship.] A small tackle to be fastened any where at pleasure, consisting of two single pullies for hoisting small things in or out. Phillips.

BU'RY. n. s. [from burg, Sax.] A dwelling-place; a termination still added to the names of several places; as, Aldermanbury, St. Edmond's bury; sometimes written bery. Phillips.

BU'RY. n. s. [corrupted from borough.]

It is his nature to dig himself buries, as the coney doth; which he doth with very great celerity. Grew.

BU'RY *Pear. [Fr. beurée.] The name of a very tender and delicate pear.

Cotgrave.

To BU'RY.† v. a. [Sax. birgan, byrigan, birian, from byrig or beorg, a mound; derived from the Goth. berga, to cover; and Iceland. birgian. "Among our Saxon ancestors, the dead bodies of such as were slain in the field were not laid in graves; but, lying upon the ground, were covered with turves or clods of earth; and the more in reputation the persons had been, the greater and higher were the turves raised over their bodies: This some used to call biriging, some beorging of the dead; all being one thing, though differently pronounced, and from whence we yet retain our speech of burying the dead, that is, hiding the dead." Verstegan.]

1. To inter; to put into a grave.

When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd, shall bury
His reasons with his body. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

2. To inter, with the rites and ceremonies of sepulture.

Slave, thou hast slain me!
If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If you have kindness left, there see me laid;
To bury decently the injur'd maid,
Is all the favour. Waller.

3. To conceal; to hide.

This is the way to make the city flat,
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

4. To place one thing within another.

A tearing groan did break
The name of Antony: it was divided
Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,
Thy name so bury'd in her.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BU'RYING.* n. s. [from bury.] Burial; the solemnity of a funeral.

Against the day of my burying hath she kept this. St. John, xii. 7.

Who finds her, give her burying;
She was the daughter of a king. Shaksp. Pericles.

BU'RYING-PLACE.† n. s. A place appointed for the sepulture of dead bodies.

They buried him, between Zorah and Eshtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father.
Judges, xvi. 31.

The place was formerly a church-yard, and has still several marks in it of graves and burying-places. Spectator, No. 110.

BUSH.† n. s. [Teut. busch; Dan. busk; old Fr. bussuns, buissons, bushes, Kelham; now bois.]

1. A thick shrub.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof, he from his lofty steed,
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread.
Spenser, F. Q.

The poller, and exacter of fees, justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence from the weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece.
Bacon, Essays.

Her heart was that strange bush, whose sacred fire,
Religion did not consume, but inspire
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, she turn'd to pray.
Donne.

With such a care,
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still prefer them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

The sacred ground
Shall weeds and pois'nous plants refuse to bear;
Each common bush shall Syrian roses wear?
Dryden, Virgil.

2. A bough of a tree fixed up at a door, to shew that liquours are sold there.

If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue.
Shakspeare, As you Like it.

Twenty to one you find him at the bush;
There's the best ale.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

3. The tail of a fox. Coles.

4. See the third sense of BUSHEL.

To BUSH. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow thick.

The roses bushing round
About her glow'd, half stooping to support
Each flow'r of tender stalk. Milton, P. L.

A gushing fountain broke
Around it, and above, for ever green,
The bushing alders form'd a shady scene.
Pope, Odyssey.

BU'SHEL.† n. s. [old Fr. buschel; "bushel, mesure appellée boiseau," Roquefort; low Lat. bussellus.]

1. A measure containing eight gallons; a strike.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search. Shakspeare.

2. It is used in common language, indefinitely for a large quantity.

The worthies of antiquity bought the rarest pictures with bushels of gold, without counting the weight or the number of pieces.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Bushels of a cart-wheel. Irons within the hole of the nave, to preserve it from wearing. [from bouche, Fr. a mouth.] Dr. Johnson, who refers to some dictionary. Yet I have been informed that bush is known in this sense, but that bushel is not.

BU'SHET.* n. s. See BUSKET.

1. A wood.

Near Creek, in a bushet or wood on a hill, not far from the way-side. Ray, Rem. p. 251.

2. A common.

We rode through a bushet, or common, called Rodwell Hake. Ray, Rem. p. 153.

BU'SHELAGE.* n. s. [from bushel.] Duty payable on every bushel of measurable commodities.

BU'SHINESS. n. s. [from bushy.] The quality of being bushy.

BU'SHMENT. n. s. [from bush.] A thicket; a cluster of bushes.

Princes thought how they might discharge the earth of woods, briars, bushments, and waters, to make it more habitable and fertile.
Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

BU'SHY, adj. [from bush.]

1. Thick; full of small branches, not high.

The gentle shepherd sat beside a spring,
All in the shadow of a bushy brier.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

Generally the cutting away of boughs and suckers at the root and body, doth make trees grow high; and, contrariwise, the polling and cutting of the top, make them spread and grow bushy.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Thick like a bush.

Statues of this god, with a thick bushy beard, are still many of them extant in Rome.
Addison on Italy.

3. Full of bushes.

The kids with pleasure browse the bushy plain;
The show'rs are grateful to the swelling grain.
Dryden.

BU'SILESS. adj. [from busy.] At leisure; without business; unemployed.

The sweet thoughts do even refresh my labour,
Most busiless when I do it. Shakspeare.

BU'SILY.† adv. [from busy.]

1. With an air of importance; with an air of hurry.

2. Curiously; importunately.

Or if too busily they will enquire
Into a victory, which we disdain,
Then let them know, the Belgians did retire,
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden.

3. Earnestly. Intentè, obnixè. Huloet.

BU'SINESS.† n. s. [old Fr. busoignes. But see BUSY. This substantive was formerly busyship: "What hast thou done of besiship to love?" Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.]

1. Employment; multiplicity of affairs.

Must business thee from hence remove?
Oh! that's the worst disease of love. Donne.

2. An affair. In this sense it has the plural.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare.

3. The subject of business; the affair or object that engages the care.

You are so much the business of our souls, that while you are in sight we can neither look nor think on any else; there are no eyes for other beauties. Dryden.

The great business of the senses, being to take notice of what hurts or advantages the body.
Locke.

4. Serious engagement, in opposition to trivial transactions.

I never knew one, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself. Addison.

He had business enough upon his hands, and was only a poet by accident. Prior, Pref.

When diversion is made the business and study of life, though the actions chosen be in themselves innocent, the excess will render them criminal.
Rogers.

5. Right of action.

What business has a tortoise among the clouds?
L'Estrange.

6. A point; a matter of question; something to be examined or considered.

Fitness to govern, is a perplexed business; some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon.

7. Something to be transacted.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. Judges, xviii. 7.

8. Something required to be done.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be most pestilent; as for those countries that are nearer the poles, in which number are our own, and the most considerable nations of the world, a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach of the sun. Bentley.

9. To do one's business. To kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSK. n. s. [busque, Fr.] A piece of steel or whalebone, worn by women to strenghen their stays.

Off with that happy busk which I envy,
That still can be, and still can stand so nigh.
Donne.

BUSK.* n. s. [Dan. busk. See BUSH and BUSKET. Chaucer uses buske for bush repeatedly; and it is yet used in the north of England.] A bush.

And range amid the buskes thy selfe to feede.
Davison's Poetical Rapsodie, (1611,) p. 39.

To BUSK.* v. a. To make ready; a word still in use in the north of England. In Scotland it also signifies to dress, probably from the old Fr. busque, part of the female attire. See BUSK. "A bonny bride is soon buskt," Scotch Proverb. Our's is a secondary sense like that of dress, to prepare for any purpose, as well as to clothe.

The noble baron whet his courage hot,
And buskt him boldly to the dreadful fight.
Fairfax, Tasso. (1600.)

BU'SKET.* n. s. [A diminutive of busk, the old commentator on Spenser says; a little bush of hawthorn. Old Fr. boschet, and in the ancient Provenç. boscat; Ital. boschetto, bosco; low Lat. boscus, wood.]

1. A sprig or small bush. It is bushet in the English Glossography of 1707.

Youth folke now flocken in every where,
To gather May-buskets and smelling brere.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

2. A small compartment of gardens, formed of trees, shrubs, and tall flowering plants, set in quarters, and either placed regularly in rows, or disposed in a more regular manner. See Miller's Gard. Dict. But this meaning of the word disdains the anglicism of Spenser, and is written bosquet. Ray uses bushet, like a true Englishman, for a little wood, Remains, p. 251.

BU'SKIN. n. s. [broseken, Dutch.]

1. A kind of half boot; a shoe which comes to the midleg.

The foot was dressed in a short pair of velvet buskins; in some places open, to shew the fairness of the skin. Sidney.

Sometimes Diana he her takes to be,
But misseth bow, and shafts, and buskins to her knee. Spenser, F. Q.

There is a kind of rusticity in all those pompous verses; somewhat of a holiday shepherd strutting in his country buskins. Dryden.

2. A kind of high shoe worn by the ancient actors of tragedy, to raise their stature.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
No greater Jonson dares in socks appear. Dryd.

In her best light the comick muse appears,
When she, with borrow'd pride, the buskin wears. Smith.

BU'SKINED.† adj. [from buskin.]

1. Dressed in buskins.

Or what, though rare, of later age,
Ennobl'd hath the buskin'd stage? Milton.

Here, arm'd with silver bows, in early dawn,
Her buskin'd virgins trac'd the dewy lawn. Pope.

2. Relating to tragedy as represented on the stage.

Next, in a buskin'd strain,
Sang how himself he bore upon Damascus' plain. Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 2.

In buskin'd measures move
Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain. Gray, The Bard.

BU'SKY. adj. [written more properly by Milton, bosky. See BOSKY.] Woody; shaded with woods; overgrown with trees.

How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yon busky hill. Shaks. Hen. IV. P. I.

BUSS.† n. s. [bus, the mouth, Irish; bouche, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. He might have added the Span. bus. But, in fact, the etymology is the Lat. basium, from basiare, to kiss; and our oldest dictionaries give the English word bass for the kiss; as, "the mother allto basseth her chylde," Vulg. Hormanni, 1530, sign. Y. iii.; and even basser for the kisser. V. Huloet. Chaucer and Skelton both use basse; and Cole, in his dictionary towards the close of the 17th century, gives bass for buss, and also to basiate.]

1. A kiss; a salute with the lips.

Thou dost give me flattering busses.—By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

Some squire perhaps you take delight to rack,
Who visits with a gun, presents with birds,
Then gives a smacking buss. Pope.

2. A boat for fishing. [busse, German.]

It was a sea most proper for whale-fishing: little busses might cast out nets for smelts and herrings. Bp. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, 1693. p. 82.

If the king would enter towards building such a number of boats and busses, as each company could easily manage, it would be an encouragement both of honour and advantage. Temple.

To Buss. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss; to salute with the lips.

Yonder walls, that partly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their feet. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakspeare, Coriol.

BUST.† n. s. [buste, old Fr. busto, Ital.] A statue representing a man to his breast. See BUSTO.

Agrippa, or Caligula, is a common coin, but a very extraordinary bust; and a Tiberius, a rare coin, but a common bust. Addison on Italy.

Ambition sigh'd: she found it vain to trust
The faithless column, and the crumbling bust. Pope.

BU'STARD.† n. s. [bistarde, Fr. written also boustarde and bostarde, according to Sherwood's Eng. and Fr. Dict. 1632.] A wild turkey.

His sacrifices were phenicopters, peacocks, bustards, turkeys, pheasants; and all these were daily offered. Hakewill.

To BU'STLE.† v. n. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from busy; or from brustle, by dropping the r; just as buskin is from broseken. See To BRUSTLE.] To be busy; to stir; to be active.

Come, bustle, bustle—caparison my horse. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

God take king Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in. Shakspeare, Ib.

Sir Henry Vane was a busy and bustling man, who had credit enough to do his business in all places. Clarendon.

A poor abject worm,
That crawl'd awhile upon a bustling world,
And now am trampled to my dust again. Southerne, Oroonoko.

Ye sov'reign lords, who sit like gods in state,
Awing the world, and bustling to be great! Granville.

BU'STLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A tumult; hurry; a combustion.

Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude;
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That, in the various bustle of resort,
Were all-to ruffled. Milton, Comus.

This is the creature that pretends to knowledge, and that makes such a noise and bustle for opinions. Granville, Scepsis.

Such a doctrine made a strange bustle and disturbance in the world, which then sate warm and easy in a free enjoyment of their lusts. South.

If the count had given them a pot of ale after it, all would have been well, without any of this bustle. Spectator, No. 481.

BU'STLER.† n. s. [from bustle.] An active stirring man.

Forgive him, then, that bustler in concerns
Of little worth. Cowper's Task, b. 6.

BU'STO.* n. s. [Ital. busto.] A statue. See BUST.

The entrance to the royal apartment is through a vestibulo supported with pillars, with some antick bustoes in the niches. Ashmole, Berk. iii. 115.

Worn on the edge of days, the brass consumes,
The busto moulders, and the deep-cut marble,
Unsteady to the steel, gives up its charge. R. Blair, The Grave.

BU'SY.† adj. [Sax. bỳꝛı, bỳꝛıȝ, from bỳꝛȝıan, which may be perhaps from the Goth. anabusns, a command; Dutch, besigh; old Fr. busoin, or busoign; modern besogne. See BUSINESS. It is pronounced bizzy.]

1. Employed with earnestness.

My mistress sends you word, that she is busy, and cannot come. Shaks. Tam. of Shrew.

2. Bustling; active; meddling.

The next thing which she waking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love. Shaks.

Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With flutt'ring wings, do keep her still awake. Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses strow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.

Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison, Freeholder.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knolles, History of the Turks.

To BU'SY. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage; to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spenser, F. Q.

The pleasure which I took at my friend's pleasure herein, idly busied me thus to express the same. Carew, Survey.

Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels. Shaksp. Hen. IV. P. II.

While they were busied to lay the foundations, their buildings were overthrown by an earthquake, and many thousands of the Jews were overwhelmed. Raleigh.

The points which busied the devotion of the first ages, and the curiosity of the latter. Decay of Piety.

The ideas it is busied about, should be natural and congenial ones, which it had in itself. Locke.

The learning and disputes of the schools have been much busied about genus and species. Locke.

For the rest, it must be owned, he does not busy himself, by entering deep into any party, but rather spends his time in acts of hospitality. Swift.

BU'SYBODY. n. s. [from busy and body.] A vain, meddling, fantastical person.

Going from house to house, tatlers and busybodies, are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Estrange.

She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spectator, No. 437.

BUT.† conjunct. [bute, butan, Saxon; formerly written bot, to distinguish it from the preposition but. Dr. Johnson considers but only as a conjunction; whereas it is, in fact, a conjunction, preposition, adverb, and interjection; as Dr. Adam Smith long since ingeniously proved. His examples, assigned to the conjunction, sometimes illustrate the word as a preposition and adverb; and are therefore now separated. Nor has he given every meaning of the conjunction. Mr. Tooke contends, that but is the imperative of the Sax. beonutan, to be out; and bot, of the Sax. botan, or betan, to boot. But however the word may be derived, it has hitherto, in our dictionaries, been very inaccurately explained. It is pronounced bout in our northern counties.]

1. Except.

An emission of immateriate virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious; but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

2. Except then; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 8.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shaksp.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be borne, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world: therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts, Logick.

5. Than, or that; according as the particles of negation no or not are placed or understood in the sentence; when preceding but, implying than; when following it, that: as, the full moon was no sooner up, than he privately opened the gate of paradise; i. e. but he opened: There is no question, that the king of Spain will not reform most of the abuses, i. e. but he will reform.

The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he privately opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian, No. 167.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison on Italy.

6. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground,
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryden.

7. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker, i. § 3.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakspeare.

8. If it were not for this; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness,
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shaksp.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. Shakspeare.

9. However; howbeit; a word of indeterminate connection.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to pursue the end for which I came,
Unite your subjects first, then let us go,
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

10. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon, War with Spain.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

11. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible, but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair criticks. Dryden, Aurengz. Pref.

12. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends,
Af ormidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

13. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, madam —
I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jailour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

14. A particle of addition, or affirmation.

Courage is the greatest security; for it does most commonly safeguard the man, but always rescues the condition from an intolerable evil. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii. 8.

15. Unless.

Ah me! said Paridell, the signs be sad:
And, but God turn the same to good soothsay,
That lady's safetie is sore to be drad. Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 50.

I must wait
And watch withal; for, but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine musician groweth amorous. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

16. But for; without; had not this been.

Rash man! forbear, but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above. Dryden, Fab.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And but for mischief, you had died for spite. Dryden.

17. But if; unless. Obsolete. It is common in our old writers, and especially in Spenser.

I wol breake thy head but if thou get thee hence. Udall, Floures from Latine, (1533.)

No living aide for her on earth appeares,
But if the heavens helpe redresse her wrong. Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 23.

BUT.* prep. [Sax. butan bi and utan, by and with being often synonimous.] Without; except; as the Lat. præter, and the Fr. hors. This also was written bot, without regard of the distinction, already named. "Bot dreid, without dread." Percy's Gloss. to Rel. of Anc. Poetry.

Who can it be, ye gods, but perjur'd Lycon?
Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where has my sword left one so black, but Lycon?
Smith, Phædra and Hippolita.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

BUT.* adv. No more than; nearly synonimous with the Latin tantum, and the English only. A. Smith.

I am, my lord, but as my betters are,
That led me hither. Shaksp. K. Hen. IV. P. II.

I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakspeare, Tempest.

What nymph soe'er his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears. B. Jonson.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

Did but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency, or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke on Education.

It is evident in the instance I gave but now. Locke.

If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison, Spect.

BUT.* interj. An exclamation of surprise or admiration.

Good heavens, but she is handsome! Adam Smith.

BUT.† n. s. [Celt. but, a bound; old Fr. bot; modern, bout.] A boundary.

But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.

BUT. n. s. [in sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

To BUT.* v. a. [old Fr. buter.]

1. To touch at the one end. Cotgrave.

That the dean, &c. do cause all and singular houses, dwellings of the church, to be bounded and butted. Abp. Parker, Strype's Life of him, fol. ed. p. 304.

2. To utter an exception. [from the conjunction.]

Lieut. Do you think I may live?
Phys. Yes, you may live; but ————
Leo. Finely butted, doctor. Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

BUT.† As a blow, a cask, &c. See BUTT.

BUT-END. n. s. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

The reserve of foot galled their foot with several vollies, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their muskets. Clarendon.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift, Gulliver's Trav.

BU'TCHER.† n. s. [boucher, Fr. derived by Menage from buccea, by others, from the Gr. βοθύτης, a slayer of cattle.]

1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.

Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,
How to cut your throat, and smile;
Like a butcher doom'd for life
In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.

Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

To BU'TCHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill; to murder.

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shewest the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.
Shakspeare.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden, Don. Sebast.

BU'TCHER-BIRD.* n. s. [from butcher and bird.]

In ornithology, the English name of the lanius, the smallest of all the European birds of prey, yet very fierce and destructive. Chambers.

BU'TCHER-ROW.* n. s. [from butcher and row.] The place where butchers sell their meat; the row of shambles.

As beef, that butcher-row must see.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 515.

How large a shambles and butcher-row would such make! Whitlock, Manners of the Eng. p. 97.

BU'TCHERS-BROOM, or KNEEHOLLY, n. s. [ruscus, Lat.]

The roots are sometimes used in medicine, and the green shoots are cut and bound into bundles, and sold to the butchers, who use it as besoms to sweep their blocks; from whence it had the name of butchers-broom. Miller.

BU'TCHERLINESS. n. s. [from butcherly.] A brutal, cruel, savage, butcherly manner.

BU'TCHERLY. adj. [from butcher.] Cruel; bloody; grossly and clumsily barbarous.

There is a way which, brought into schools, would take away this butcherly fear in making of Latin. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget! Shakspeare.

BU'TCHERY.† n. s. [Fr. boucherie.]

1. The trade of a butcher.

Yet this man, so ignorant in modern butchery, has cut up half an hundred heroes, and quartered five or six miserable lovers, in every tragedy he has written. Pope.

2. Murder; cruelty; slaughter.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this pattern of thy butcheries.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Sir John Heidon replied, that such intentions were bloody and butchery, far unfitting so noble a personage, who should desire to bleed for reputation, not for life.
Sir E. Sackville's Letter, Guardian, No. 133.

The butchery, and the breach of hospitality, is represented in this fable under the mask of friendship. L'Estrange.

Can he a son to soft remorse incite,
Whom gaols, and blood, and butchery delight?
Dryden.

3. The place where animals are killed; where blood is shed.

This is no place, this house is but a butchery;
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.
Shakspeare, As you Like it.

BU'TLER.† n. s. [bouteiller, Fr. low Lat. buticularius, formed from butta; boteler, or botiler; old English, from bottle; he that is employed in the care of bottling liquours.] A servant in a family employed in furnishing the table.

BU'TTERWOMAN. n. s. [from butter and woman.] A woman that sells butter.

Tongue, I must put you into a butterwoman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mute, if you prattle me into these perils. Shakspeare, All's well.

BU'TTERWORT. n. s. A plant: the same with sanicle.

BU'TTERY. adj. [from butter.] Having the appearance or qualities of butter.

Nothing more convertible into hot cholerick humours than its buttery parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

The best oils, thickened by cold, have a white colour; and milk itself has its whiteness from the caseous fibres, and its buttery oil. Floyer, on the Humours.

BU'TTERY.† n. s. [from butter; or, according to Skinner, from bouter, Fr. to place or lay up.] The room where provisions are laid up.

Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery,
And give them friendly welcome every one. Shakspeare.

All that need a cool and fresh temper, as cellars, pantries, and butteries, to the north. Wotton.

I pray you bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

I know you were one could keep
The buttery-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Every person, failing or neglecting then to perform the said exercises, shall thereon have his name struck out of the buttery-book of the college or hall whereof he is a member. Life of Dr. Humph. Prideaux, p. 217.

My guts ne'er suffer'd from a college cook,
My name ne'er enter'd in a buttery-book. Bramston, Man of Taste.

BU'TTOCK. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to come from aboutir, Fr. inserted by Junius without etymology.] The rump; the part near the tail.

It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks. Shakspeare.

Such as were not able to stay themselves, should be holden up by others of more strength, riding behind them upon the buttocks of the horse. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The tail of a fox was never made for the buttocks of an ape. L'Estrange, Fables.

BU'TTON. n. s. [bottwn, Welsh; bouton Fr.]

1. A catch, or small ball, by which the dress of man is fastened.

Pray you, undo this button. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I mention those ornaments, because of the simplicity of the shape, want of ornaments, buttons, loops, gold and silver lace, they must have been cheaper than ours. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Any knob or ball, fastened to a smaller body.

We fastened to the marble certain wires and a button. Boyle.

Fair from its humble bed I rear'd this flower,
Suckled and cheer'd, with air, and sun, and shower;
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,
Bright with the gilded button tipt its head. Pope, Dunciad.

3. The bud of a plant.

The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BU'TTON. n. s. [echinus marinus.] The sea urchin, which is a kind of crabfish that has prickles instead of feet. Ainsworth.

To BU'TTON.† v. a. [from the noun. Fr. also boutonner, to bud or open out; also to button or clasp. Cotgrave.]

1. To dress; to clothe.

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakspeare.

He gave his legs, arm, and breast, to his ordinary servant, to button and dress him. Wotton.

2. To fasten with buttons; as, he buttons his coat.

BU'TTONHOLE. n. s. [from button and hole.] The loop in which the button of the clothes is caught.

Let me take you a buttonhole lower. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

I'll please the maids of honour, if I can:
Without black velvet breeches, what is man?
I will my skill in buttonholes display,
And brag how oft I shift me every day. Bramston, Man of Taste.

BU'TTONMAKER.* n. s. [from button and maker.] He who makes or sells buttons.

It was tricked up with a great many long ropes of wooden beads hanging upon it, and somewhat resembling the furniture of a button-maker's shop. Maundrell's Travels, p. 13.

BU'TTRESS. n. s. [from aboutir, Fr.]

1. A prop; a wall built to support another wall, and standing out.

No jutting frize,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shakspeare.

Fruit trees, set upon a wall against the sun, between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

But we inhabit a weak city here,
Which buttresses and props but scarcely bear. Dryden, Juv.

2. A prop; a support.

It will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up against us, as the ground pillar and buttress of the good old cause of non-conformity. South.

To BU'TTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To prop; to support.

BU'TWINK. n. s. The name of a bird. Dict.

BUTYRA'CEOUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat. butter.] Having the qualities of butter.

BU'TYROUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat.] Having the properties of butter.

Its oily red part is from the butyrous parts of chyle. Floyer on the Humours.

BU'XOM.† adj. [bucrum, Sax. from buzan, to bend. It originally signified obedient, as John de Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron that he is "obedient and buxom to all his commands." In an old form of marriage, used before the reformation, the bride promised to be "obedient and buxom, in bed and at board;" from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived. Spenser connects it with its original bent, and thus exhibits the force of the expression as strongly as that in the form of marriage, or rather more strongly; for the words in the old form are "bonair and buxom," which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. See BONAIR. Spenser describes many falling into mischief, "all for they noulde be buxome and bent." Shep. Cal. Sept. ver. 149; where his contemporary commentator explains the words "meeke and obedient."]

1. Obedient; obsequious; yielding.

He did tread down and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish; thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government. Spenser, on Ireland.

Then with quick fan

2. Gay; lively; brisk.

I'm born
Again a fresh child of the buxom morn,
Heir of the sun's first beams. Crashaw, Poems, p. 104.

Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying,
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnair. Milton, L'Allegro.

Sturdy swains,
In clean array, for rustick dance prepare,
Mixt with the buxom damsels hand in hand. Phillips.

3. Wanton; jolly.

Almighty Jove descends, and pours
Into his buxom bride his fruitful showers. Dryden, Virgil.

She feigned the rites of Bacchus! cry'd aloud,
And to the buxom god the virgin vow'd. Dryden, Ib.

BU'XOMLY.† adv. [from buxom.]

1. Dutifully; obediently. Of this old meaning of the adverb Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.

I, without noise or crie,
My plaint make all buxomly,
To putten all wrath awaie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

2. Wantonly; amorously.

BU'XOMNESS.† n. s. [Sax. bucrumneſſe.] Written formerly bughsomeness, buhsomeness, and bowsomeness; all referrible to buzan, to bend or bow. See Verstegan, Restit. of Antiq. p. 231. Dr. Johnson has defined this word by wantonness and amorousness; of which meaning, however, he produces no example. Our old language presents the word in the sense of meekness and obedience.

That thee is sente, receyve in buxumnesse. Chaucer, Good Counsel.

Pliableness or bowsomeness, to wit, humbly stooping or bowing down, in sign of obedience.
Verstegan.

Whom the divine buxumnes for his ineffable justice hath now late taken to his grace.
Arnold's Chronicle, Sign. L. iii. b.

To BUY.† v. a. preter. I bought; I have bought. [Goth. bugian, to buy, bauht, particip. Sax. bȳgan.]

1. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price; to obtain for money, or something equivalent; to procure by sale, not gift or theft.

They must buy up no corn growing within twelve miles of Geneva, that so the filling of their magazines may not prejudice their market.
Addison on Italy.

2. To pay dearly for, in the sense of aby. See To ABY. Dr. Johnson thinks that Shakspeare, in the following passage, wrote the word 'by, as a contraction of aby. But see To BY.

Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

3. To procure some advantage by something that deserves it, or at some price.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

Pleasure with praise, and danger they would buy,
And with a foe that would not only fly. Denham.

4. To regulate by money; in this sense it has particles annexed.

You, and all the kings of Christendom,
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out.
Shakspeare, K. John.

What pitiful things are power, rhetorick, or riches, when they would terrify, dissuade, or buy off conscience? South.

To BUY. v. n. To treat about a purchase.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

BU'YER. n. s. [from To buy.] He that buys; a purchaser.

When a piece of art is set before us, let the first caution be, not to ask who made it, lest the fame of the author do captivate the fancy of the buyer.
Wotton's Architecture.

BUZ.* interject. [The etymology and origin of this phrase is uncertain.] An exclamation, often used, in modern times, when a person begins to relate what was generally known before; and is by some of the commentators on Shakspeare supposed to be the meaning of Hamlet.

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.
Ham. Buz, buz! Shakspeare.

To BUZZ. v. n. [bizzen, Teut. to growl. Junius.]

1. To hum; to make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

And all the chamber filled was with flies,
Which buzzed all about, and made such sound,
That they encumber'd all men's ears and eyes,
Like many swarms of bees assembled round.
Spenser, F. Q.

There be more wasps, that buzz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

For still the flowers ready stand,
One buzzes round about,
One lights, one tastes, gets in, gets out.
Suckling.

What though no bees around your cradle flew,
Nor on your lips distill'd their golden dew;
Yet have we oft discover'd, in their stead,
A swarm of drones that buzz'd about your head.
Pope.

We join, like flies and wasps, in buzzing about wit. Swift.

2. To whisper; to prate to.

There is such confusion in my pow'rs,
As after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing multitude.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

3. To sound heavy and low.

Herewith arose a buzzing noise among them, as if it had been the rustling sound of the sea afar off. Hayward.

To BUZZ. v. a. To whisper; to spread secretly.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

I will buzz abroad such prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearful of his life.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Did you not hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Catherine?
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, silently withdrawing from the presence of the apostles, they then lift up their voices, and noised it about the city. Bentley, Serm. p. 220.

BUZZ.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of a bee or fly.

What a noise and a buz does the pitiful little gnat make, and how sharply does it sting!
South, Sermons, viii. 202.

2. A hum; a whisper; a talk.

The hive of a city or kingdom is in best condition when there is least noise or buzz in it.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

Where I found the whole outward room in a buzz of politick. Addison, Spect.

BU'ZZARD.† n. s. [old Fr. buizard; modern, busard.]

1. A degenerate or mean species of hawk.

More pity that the eagle should be mawl'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best;
Of small renown, 'tis true: for, not to lie,
We call him but a hawk by courtesy.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

2. A blockhead; a dunce.

Those blind buzzards, who, in late years, of wilful maliciousness, would neither learn themselves, nor could teach others any thing at all.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

BU'ZZARD.* adj. [from the substantive.] Senseless; stupid; undiscerning.

Those who thought no better of the living God, than of a buzzard idol.
Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 1.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I choose.
Donne, Poems, p. 47.

BU'ZZER. n. s. [from buzz.] A secret whisperer.

Her brother is in secret come from France,
And wants not buzzers to infest his ear
With petulant speeches of his father's death.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BY.† prep. [bi, biȝ, Saxon, from the Goth. bi. Fr. Theotisc. bi. But Mr. Tooke thinks that the word owes its origin to the Sax. byb, the imperative of beon, to be. This preposition, he observes, is frequently, but not always, used with an abbreviation of construction; the instrument, cause, or agent, being understood. Div. of Purley, vol. i. p. 402.]

1. It notes the agent.

The Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.
Shakspeare.

The grammar of a language is sometimes to be carefully studied by a grown man. Locke.

Death's what the guilty fear, the pious crave,
Sought by the wretch, and vanquish'd by the brave. Garth.

2. It notes the instrument, and is commonly used after a verb neuter, where with would be put after an active; as, he killed her with a sword; she died by a sword.

But by Pelides' arms when Hector fell,
He chose Æneas, and he chose as well.
Dryden, Virgil.

3. It notes the cause of any effect.

I view, by no presumption led,
Your revels of the night. Parnel.

By woe the soul to daring action steals,
By woe in plaintless patience it excels. Savage.

4. It notes the means by which any thing is performed, or obtained.

You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Happier! had it suffic'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all. Milton, P. L.

The heart knows that by itself, which nothing in the world besides can give it any knowledge of.
South.

We obtain the knowledge of a multitude of propositions by sensation and reflection.
Watts, Logick.

5. It shews the manner of an action.

I have not patience; she consumes the time
In idle talk, and owns her false belief:
Seize her by force, and bear her hence unheard.
Dryden, Don Sebast.

This sight had more weight with him, as by good luck not above two of that venerable body were fallen asleep. Addison.

By chance, within a neighbouring brook,
He saw his branching horns, and alter'd look.
Addison.

6. It has a signification, noting the method in which any successive action is performed, with regard to time or quantity.

The best for you, is to re-examine the cause, and to try it even point by point, argument by argument, with all the exactness you can.
Hooker, Pref.

We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

He calleth them forth by one, and by one, by the name, as he pleaseth, though seldom the order be inverted. Bacon.

The captains were obliged to break that piece of ordnance, and so by pieces to carry it away, that the enemy should not get so great a spoil.
Knolles.

Common prudence would direct me to take them all out, and examine them one by one.
Boyle.

Others will soon take pattern and encouragement by your building; and so house by house, street by street, there will at last be finished a magnificent city. Spratt.

Explor'd her, limb by limb, and fear'd to find
So rude a gripe had left a livid mark behind.
Dryden, Fables.

Thus year by year they pass, and day by day,
Till once 'twas on the morn of chearful May,
The young Æmilia —— Dryden, Ib.

I'll gaze for ever on thy godlike father,
Transplanting one by one into my life,
His bright perfections, till I shine like him.
Addison, Cato.
Let the blows be by pauses laid on. Locke.

7. It notes the quantity had at one time.

Bullion will sell by the ounce for six shillings and five-pence unclipped money. Locke.
What we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls.
Arbuthnot on Al. Pref.
The North by myriads, pours her mighty sons;
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns.
Pope.

8. At, or in; noting place: it is now perhaps only used before the words sea, or water, and land. This seems a remnant of a meaning now little known. By once expressed situation; as, by west, westward.

We see the great effects of battles by sea; the battle of Actium decided the empire of the world.
Bacon, Essays.
Arms, and the man, I sing, who, forc'd by fate,
Expell'd, and exil'd, left the Trojan shore;
Long labours both by sea and land he bore.
Dryden, Virgil.
I would have fought by land, where I was stronger:
You hinder'd it; yet, when I fought at sea,
Forsook me fighting. Dryden, All for Love.
By land, by water, they renew their charge.
Pope.

9. According to; noting permission.

It is lawful, both by the laws of natur and nations, and by the law divine, which is the perfection of the other two. Bacon, Holy War.

10. According to; noting proof.

The present, or like system of the world cannot possibly have been eternal, by the first proposition; and, without God, it could not naturally, nor fortuitously, emerge out of chaos, by the third proposition. Bentley.
The faculty, or desire, being infinite, by the preceding proposition, may contain or receive both these. Cheyne.

11. After; according to; noting imitation or conformity.

The gospel gives us such laws, as every man, that understands himself, would chuse to live by.
Tillotson.
In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.
This ship, by good luck, fell into their hands at last, and served as a model to build others by.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

12. From; noting ground of judgement; or comparison.

Thus, by the musick, we may know,
When noble wits a hunting go,
Through groves that on Parnassus grow. Waller.
By what he has done, before the war in which he was engaged, we may expect what he will do after a peace. Dryden.
The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and gigantic limbs.
Dryden.
Who's that stranger? By his warlike port,
His fierce demeanor, and erected look,
He's of no vulgar note. Dryden, All for Love.
Judge the event
By what has pass'd. Dryden, Sp. Friar.
The punishment is not to be measured by the greatness or smallness of the matter, but by the opposition it carries and stands in, to that respect and submission that is due to the father. Locke.
By your description of the town, I imagine it to lie under some great enchantment.
Pope, Letters.

BY AND BY. In a short time.

He overtook Amphialus, who had been staid here, and by and by called him to fight with him. Sidney.

The noble knight alighted by and by,
From lofty steed, and bad the lady stay,
To see what end of fight should him befall that day. Spenser, F. Q.

In the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

O how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day;
Which now shews all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast. Shakspeare, Othello.

By.† n. s. [from the preposition.] Something not the direct and immediate object of regard. Now usually accompanied with the preposition by; formerly, with on or upon.

In this instance, there is upon the by, to be noted, the percolation of the verjuice through the wood. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They who have saluted her [Poetry] in the by, and now and then tendered their visits, she hath done much for. B. Jonson's Discoveries.

This wolf was forced to make bold, ever and anon, with a sheep in private, by the by. L'Estrange.

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary. Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,
I'll give you back your kingdom by the by. Dryden, Conq. of Granada.

To By. v. n. The same as To Aby, which see. Not now in use.

Thou, Porrex, thou this damned deed hast wrought;
Thou, Porrex, thou shalt dearly bye the same. Sackville, Gorboduc, iv. 1.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way; and, consequently, some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

By-coffeehouse. n. s. A coffee-house in an obscure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffee-house, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror. Addison, Spect.

By-concernment. n. s. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have underplots, or by-concernments, of as considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot. Dryden.

By-corner.* n. s. [from by and corner.] A private corner.

In by-corners of
This sacred room, silver, in bags heap'd up. Massinger's City Madam.

Neglected heaps we in by-corners lay. Sir W. Soames and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

By-dependence. n. s. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more should be demanded;
And all the other by-dependencies,
From chance to chance. Shakspeare.

By-design. n. s. An incidental purpose.

And if she miss the mouse-trap lines,
They'll serve for other by-designs,
And make an artist understand,
To copy out her seal or hand;
Or find void places in the paper,
To steal in something to entrap her. Hudibras.

By-drinking.* n. s. [from by and drink.] Private drinking, not in company with others.

You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

By-end. n. s. Private interest; secret advantage.

All people that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall within the intendment of this fable. L'Estrange.

By-gone. adj. [a Scotch word.] Past.

Tell him, you're sure
All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction
The by-gone day proclaim'd. Shakspeare.

As we have a conceit of motion coming, as well as by-gone; so have we of time which dependeth thereupon. Grew.

By-interest. n. s. Interest distinct from that of the publick.

Various factions and parties, all aiming at by-interest, without any sincere regard to the publick good. Atterbury.

By-lane.* n. s. [from by and lane.] A lane out of the usual road.

She led me into a by-lane, and told me there I should dwell. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 504.

By-law.† n. s. [Sax. bilaze.]

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common assent, for the good of those that make them, farther than the publick law binds. Cowel.

There was also a law to restrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporation. Bacon.

In the beginning of this record is inserted the law or institution; to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law. Addison.

By-matter. n. s. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, would put that which was most material into the post-script, as if it had been a by-matter. Bacon, Ess. of Cunning.

By-name.† n. s. A nick-name; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Whether it was the proper surname of the family, or a personal by-name given him on account of his stature, — it is neither material nor possible to determine. Lowth, Life of Wykeham.

To By-name. v. a. [from the noun.] To give a nick-name. The following example had been placed by Dr. Johnson under the substantive as an illustration of it.

Robert, eldest son to the Conqueror, used short hose, and thereupon was by-named Court-hose, and shewed first the use of them to the English. Camden.

By-past.† adj. Past; a term of the Scotch dialect; Dr. Johnson says. Gilbert Burnet, in his Vindication of the authority, &c. of the church and state of Scotland, (Glasgow, 1673,) uses it, p. 234. But it is not uncommon English; at least, in Yorkshire it is the usual word for past or ago.

But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-past'd perils in her way. Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

Wars, pestilences, and diseases, have not been fewer for these three hundred years by-past, than ever they had been since we have had records. Cheyne.

By-path.† n. s. A private or obscure path.

Heaven knows my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I got this crown. Shakspeare.

Your petitioner is a general lover, who for some months last past has made it his whole business to frequent the by-paths and roads near his dwelling, for no other purpose but to hand such of the fair sex as are obliged to pass through them. Tatler, No. 219.

By-respect. n. s. Private end or view.

It may be that some upon by-respects, find somewhat friendly usage in usance, at some of their hands. Carew.

The archbishops and bishops, next under the king, have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, for any by-respects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon.

Augustus, who was not altogether so good as he was wise, had some by-respects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim. Dryden.

By-road. n. s. An obscure unfrequented path.

Through slipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep. Swift.

By-room. n. s. A private room within another.

I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave the sugar. Shakspeare.

By-speech. n. s. An incidental or casual speech, not directly relating to the point.

When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-speeches, in some historical narration or other, and to use them as if they were written in most exact form of law. Hooker.

By-stander. n. s. A looker on; one unconcerned.

She broke her feathers, and, falling to the ground, was taken up by the by-standers. L'Estrange.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? Locke.

By-street. n. s. An obscure street.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by-streets, and saves the expensive coach. Gay.

By-turning.* n. s. [from by and turn.] An obscure road.

The many by-turnings that may divert you from your way. Sidney, Defence of Poesy.

By-view. n. s. Private self-interested purpose.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him. Atterbury.

By-walk. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.

He moves afterwards in by-walks, or under plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble: but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome.

By-way. n. s. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser, on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread.
Spenser.

Wholly abstain, or wed: thy bounteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays.
Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it. Addison.

BY-WEST. n. s. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Davies on Ireland.

BY-WIPE.* n. s. [from by and wipe.] A secret stroke or sarcasm.

Wherefore that conceit of Legion with a by-wipe? Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BY-WORD.† n. s. [Sax. bıpopð.] A saying; a proverb.

Bashful Henry be deposed; whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies. Shaksp.

I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner. Bacon.

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animosities. Addison.

It will be his lot often, to look singular, in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach, among the men of wit and pleasure. Atterbury.

BY'ASS. n. s. See BIAS.

Every inordinate lust is a false byass upon men's understandings, which naturally draws towards atheism. Tillotson.

BYE, or BEE, come immediately from the Saxon, bỳ, bỳınz, i. e. a dwelling. Gibson.

BYRE.* n. s. A common word in Cumberland for a cow-house, as biar is for the same in Ireland. The Irish buar means oxen or kine, and also what relates to cattle. The Welsh and Icelandick bu mean a cow; and the Welsh buarth is a cow-yard, from bu and garth.

BY'SPEL.* n. s. [Sax. bıpell.] A proverb. Coles.

BYSSE.* } n. s. [Gr. βύσσος, fine linen. Lat. and Goth. byssus, Fr. bysse, BY'SSIN. } " sorte d'étoffe de soie," Roquefort.] The word, in none of its BY'SSUS. } forms, is now used; but was formerly common. In Scotland bussin is still used for a linen hood or cap. See the definition in the example from Bishop Patrick.

He was eke so delicate
Of his clothyng, that every daie
Of purpre and bysse he made him gaie.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

I was once, though now a featherde vaile
Case my wrong'd bodie, queenlike clad:
This downe about my neck was earst a raile
Of bisse imbroder'd.
The Ant and Nightingale (1604).

Did they find the mother crowned with an imperial diadem, or the child swathed in bisse and purple?
Heywood's Hier. of Angels, 1635, p. 311.

And it is given to hir, that she cover him with whyte byssin shynynge; for why byssyn is justifyingis of seyntis.
Wicliffe, Revelat. xix.

Not silk, — nor common linen; but that which the ancients called byssus; a sort of linen very pure and soft, and very dear.
Bp. Patrick on Gen. xli. 42.

BY'SSINE.* adj. [from bysse.] Made of silk or fine linen. Coles.

BY'ZANTINE. See BIZANTINE. Byzantine is the true orthography.

C.

C, The third letter of the alphabet, has two sounds; one like k, as, call, clock, craft, coal, companion, cuneiform; the other as s, as, Cæsar, cessation, cinder. It sounds like k before a, o, u, or a consonant; and like s, before e, i, and y.

The childish fancies and fables of the Jewish rabbins in their talmud and cabal.
Hakewill, Apology, p. 310.

2. A body of men united in some close design. A cabal differs from a party, as few from many.

This junto, together with the Duke of Buckingham, being called the cabal, it was observed, that cabal proved a technical word, every letter in it being the first letter of those five; Clifford, Ashly, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, 1672.

She often interposed her royal authority, to break the cabals which were forming against her first ministers. Addison.

3. Intrigue; something less than conspiracy.

When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove,
To draw th' indulgent king to partial love. Dryd.

To CABA'L. v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] To form close intrigues; to intrigue; to unite in small parties.

His mournful friends, summon'd to take their leaves,
Are throng'd about his couch, and sit in council:
What those caballing captains may design,
I must prevent, by being first in action. Dryden.

CA'BALA.* n. s. See CABAL. The secret science of the Jewish doctors; any secret science.

They [the modern rabbins] started a grammatical cabbala to serve their ambition upon.
Spencer on Prodigies, p. 322.

You merchants, — who know your cabala so well to make your profit rather by selling for time, than for ready money.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 372.

If I wholly mistake not the cabbala of his sect.
Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 9.

Smith, Mann. of the Turks, p. 65.

CA'BBAGE.† n. s. [cabus, Fr. probably from cab, old Fr. the head, top, or extremity. Ital. cabuccio; Dutch, kabuys; all from caput, the head. The Fr. caboche also is the head. Nevertheless, Mr. Horne Tooke strangely thinks that cabbage may be from the Gr. κάβη, food. But the form of the cabbage, resembling a head, shews caput to be the original.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleshy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers consist of four leaves, which are succeeded by long taper pods, containing several round acrid seeds. The species are, cabbage. Savoy cabbage. Broccoli. The cauliflower. The musk cabbage. Branching tree cabbage, from the sea-coast. Colewort. Perennial Alpine colewort. Perfoliated wild cabbage, &c. Miller.

Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly or juice of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'BBAGE.* n. s. [Mr. Brand thinks that this cant word is adopted from cablish, wind-fallen or brush wood. Pop. Antiq. See Cowel in V. Cablish. A learned friend observes, that he has read of a family in Savoy, who bore for their arms a savoy cabbage proper, with the motto, " tout n'est qu'abus."] A cant word for the shreds and patches made by tailors in cutting out clothes.

For as tailors preserve their cabbage,
So squires take care of bag and baggage.

Second part of Hudibras, (spurious,) 1663, p. 56.

To CA'BBAGE.† v. n. [from the noun; and old Fr. cabusser, to grow headed as a cabbage. Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To form a head; as, the plants begin to cabbage. See also CABOSHED.

To CA'BBAGE.† v. a. [a cant word among taylors, Dr. Johnson says. But Mr. Bagshaw considers it also as a general word for stealing; and that it might arise from the frequent encroachments of cottagers on commons by taking in part of them for a garden to raise cabbages in.] To steal in cutting clothes.

Your taylor, instead of shreds, cabbages whole yards of cloth. Arbuthnot.

CA'BBAGE-TREE. n. s. A species of palm-tree.

It is very common in the Caribbee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, and the young shoots are pickled; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations.

Miller.

CA'BBAGE-WORM. n. s. An insect.

CA'BIN.† n. s. [cabane, Fr. caban, Welsh, a cottage, or booth; Span. cabanna; Ital. capanna; low Lat. capanna; from the Gr. καπάνη, a stable, according to some; from the Lat. cavea, a hole or den, according to others. Our elder authors write it caban; and Huloet denominates " caban, a dark lodging." Gower, " She laie in a caban close." Conf. Am. b. 8.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensual desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,
And bore a boy unto that savage sire.

Spenser, F. Q.

When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, [in the margin cells.]

Jerem. xxxvii. 16.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your cabin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen. Shakspeare.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service. Ralegh.

The chessboard, we say, is in the same place it was, if it remain in the same part of the cabin, though the ship sails all the while. Locke.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bowers, many times the gay harbour of anguish,
Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes. Sidney.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about.

Fairfax.

Contenting ourselves with our smalnesse, let us oppose unto all this statelie masquerada, with which the world feedeth itself, the lodgings and cabins of the ancient true pastors.

Harmar, Tr. of Bezar's Sermons, p. 155.

To CA'BIN.† v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakspeare.

They two have cabin'd
In many as dangerous, as poor a corner.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

To CA'BIN.† v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd, I had else been perfect;
As broad and gen'ral as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear. Shakspeare.

They feel themselves in a state of thraldom, they imagine that their souls are cooped and cabined in, unless they have some man or some body of men dependent on their mercy.

Burke, Speech at Bristol in 1780.

CA'BIN-BOY.* n. s. The boy who waits in the cabin on board a ship. The Welsh have the similar term, cabin-was.

CA'BLE.† n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch; low Lat. caplum; Barb. Græc. Καπλον; a rope. V. Meursii Gloss.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still? Shakspeare.

The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Ralegh.

The cables crack, the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies.
Dryden.

CA'BLED.* adj. [from cable.] Fastened with a cable.
